LAKE HELEN BEAUTIFUL.

Spiritual and Physical Advantages of This Southern Resort.

Again I take up my pen to write a word for the Florida Camp-meeting. Recent word from there tells me that already about fifty people are there located for the winter, and new arrivals almost every day. Through correspondence of inquiry we are already assured that the attendance this year will be much larger than any previous year. This camp has had a steady growth since its beginning; no wonder; our people are fast finding out that there is no place they can go in mid-winter so conducive to health, comfort, and happiness as Lake Helen.

All humanity yearns for a sweeter existence. The environments in this camp places it par excellence above all the camps in the furnishing of that spiritual good which we expect to derive from spiritual camps. Spiritualists above all others should cease singing of the "Sweet Summer Land" and the "Sweet Bye and Bye" when our grand philosophy teaches us that we can have them now.

If this is your ideal thought, and the good to which you aspire, go where you can realize it on this earth. Your conceptions can be made real, through the mastership and supremacy of your mind. All things become real to the soul by and through the environments that surround it. "I have meat to eat that ye know not of," said the Master to his disciples. This was the secret of the wonderful life of Jesus. He simply opened His heart and let in the sunlight. All His teachings go to show that He was a student of nature.

What would this material world be without the sunshine? What would life be without sunshine in the soul, as the solar rays unfold and beautify all forms of physical expression, so do our thoughts and acts give coloring and influence to the spirit, more especially our thoughts; for a silent influence is more powerful than active visible expression, as evidenced of this contemplate the power and correctness of Infinite Spirit, that is revealed in all forms of physical manifestation for let philosophers reason as they will, and rationalism draw its conclusions, there is a power unexplained by either, that holds in its mighty grasp the destinies of men and things.

We can place ourselves in apposition with this Power by permitting the soul to rule, then all the good things will be added to our store. The true man does not give way to adversity. The supremacy of his spirit enables him to overcome the sorest trials; he holds a reserved force that comes to the fore, just at the opportune time when soul supremacy is needed. To him good is always the normal expression and he sees only the good. As the flowers draw from the world of spirit without interference to each other, he, too, can make his life beautiful by imitating their example.

I pity the fault-finders, I pity the slanderer. Oh! how dark must be their lives. We have too many in our ranks; they belong to that class of Spiritualists who believe the second birth to be the transition called death; could they realize that the second birth is the birth of the soul in the body (quickening, awakening) and that regeneration is the evolution of that soul into mastership and supremacy; by living the Golden Rule; "Doing to all mankind what we would have them do unto us," how different life would appear to them. But I must cease to philosophise. I started out to write something for Lake Helen and the beautiful Southland.

Reader, go South one winter and bathe in its sunshine and see what you will find there! It will soften some of the harder fibres; you will be enabled to lop off some of the brittle edges! Take a lesson or two from the old-time planter's simplicity, his honor and his truth. You will feel the better and be the better for doing so. There is something truly pathetic in the spectacles of altered fortune which everywhere meet the eye, for in the old life there were very few shadows, such as there were gathered themselves about the negro cabins. As it is now, we are brought to a realization of the good that is in the hearts of the people of the South, with the good that is in the people of the North, bringing both to a better comprehension of the truth that we are a homogeneous people.

Of all the places in the South, that it has been my privilege to visit, the equal of Lake Helen as a pleasure resort is nowhere to be found, especially to the Spiritualists, and in the future it will be much better than it has ever been. A deep well has been drilled, bringing forth a fountain of absolutely pure water. The engine, pump and piping is on the ground, the tank is now being set up, a force of men are laying the piping and by the first of January water will be conducted to all the cottages and public buildings. This will make the sanitary conditions absolutely good, so that the people who attend the camp can have every assurance of health and comfort.

Our lecture talent is of the best. Mediums will be on the ground to represent all the phases of mediumship, card parties, theatricals, dancing and boating, fishing, etc., will all be in hand.

The regular camp session opens on the 7th of February and continues over seven Sundays. Many new cottages were built last year and four or five more will be built this year. It is the design of the management to encourage the building of cottages at Lake Helen, so as to combine the comfort and happiness of home life with the benefits derived from the climate and the camp, and eventually make of Lake Helen a Southern Chautauqua. My experience teaches me that to go South to spend the winter one had better go in December and remain until the first of April; at least one should be careful not to return to the North until the rigors of winter are over.

Hoping to meet the old friends and a great many new ones at the camp, I am, yours truly,

G. N. HILLIGOSS.

NEW ORLEANS.

Notes of Work in the Southern City.

The New Orleans Spiritual Association has put on her robes of righteousness and gone out into the battle of life to spread the gospel of peace on earth and good will to men. Every effort is being put forth at the present time to advance our cause. Next Sunday, Dec. 6, we shall organize the children's progressive lyceum at the home of Mr. W. St. Ceran, our materializing medium, who has kindly given us the use of his parlors until we can get possession of another hall suitable for lyceum work, as our present hall is not adapted to the needs of the children.

I came here one month ago a stranger to all, a small society but one that has capable and efficient officers and members who are intensely in earnest. Several new members have already united and several more have decided to come into the society the present month. We expect to have one of the grandest times imaginable on Christmas, as we have some of the finest talent to draw upon among the children.

I wish to speak of our musical talent. The little daughter of our president, Mr. Muller, about twelve years of age, is one of the sweetest little singers it has ever been our pleasure to listen to. She is also organist, and her little brother is violinist, and the father who leads in the singing, has every reason to be thankful for the gifts his children possess. While others are also blessed with good voices, with the talented children of our members we can and will succeed with our regular meetings and lyceum work. One thing I wish to speak of, when we introduced the subject of lyceum work there was not one dissenting voice, but every Spiritualist present seemed desirous of teaching the truth of our philosophy. I love the children, and shall do all I can with the assistance of others to carry on the work to a successful issue.

Thanksgiving service at our hall was one long to be remembered. Different ones expressed themselves regarding what they were most thankful for, and each and every one declared it was the knowledge of Spiritualism and the satisfaction they derived from it. I attended Thanksgiving exercises Sunday afternoon in the parish prison, and I could not but express myself that all of the angels had not left this mundane sphere, for the missionary, Mrs. A. Holly and daughter, for the past two years have devoted much of their time in alleviating the sorrows and miseries of these outcasts who, whether innocent or guilty, are deprived of their liberty, and it is through the untiring efforts of this lady that fruits were served to every prisoner in the prison and as there were 246 to be treated in this manner it took considerable effort upon her part to furnish the supply. She is also organist, and each Sunday she is at her post doing her work faithfully and well and she has also furnished bouquets of beautiful flowers to all. I wish to particularly speak of one young man, Wm. Reese, of the Young Men's Christian Association, who each Sunday speaks at the home of the incurables. Twice I have accompanied him to this home, and he teaches the love of God to all His children, rich and poor alike. He is certainly imbued with the right spirit. First he preaches to the prisoners, encouraging them, then to

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Some Notes of Travel and Happenings, Related by Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle.

Locomotion is so easy nowadays one has small excuse to root, and sink into too placid contentment.

There is so much "doing!" such effort TO REALIZE IDEALS, so much well directed labor that one must look and clap hands once in a while to show appreciation and enjoyment.

But to pleasant exertion in traveling there is usually a friend at the other end of the line, and in addition to trolley wires and steam cars, there may be the subtle unseen thread of friendship pulling at our hearts which speeds us on joyously.

On this autumn journey which we took in gorgeous October, 1903, the heart pull was toward two royal people bearing the illustrious name of Bacon: Mr. and Mrs. George A. Bacon, so long prominent in Boston and the East, and for the past twenty years well known in Washington, where they have resided.

A description of Francis Bacon, the English philosopher, born in London, Jan. 22, 1561, will present to you one of his descendants, Geo. A. Bacon, of the present. "In person Bacon was well-formed, but not robust, of a middling stature, with a high and broad forehead, his countenance conveying the impression, both of intellectual power and benevolence of disposition. In society he is said to have been a most delightful companion, adapting himself to company of every degree, calling and humor, bringing out with great effect his unexhausted store of jests, new and old." So we found him, the modern Bacon, admirable in every way.

Mr. Bacon, although actively engaged in other business, has found time to use his literary talents, which are finely cultivated, and have been in constant use through the mature years of his life. It has been urged upon him that he select from his voluminous materials enough to make a choice volume. We promise beforehand that the book will be attractive for its beauty of style and valuable for its golden thought.

Mrs. Bacon's ancestors came over in the Mayflower, and she is descended from the Sprague, of New England, true to name. She was Miss Louise L. Sprague before she became Mrs. Bacon, and she was then and is now one of the most charming and sensible of women, always ready to do her part and do it with heart, bringing her tact and talent to aid in making her efforts successful. Her gifts are eagerly utilized by the various societies, clubs, etc., of which she is a member. She is Regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Washington, and being a good parliamentarian, presides with grace and ability. So much I give you of the Bacons, whose names have long been familiar to liberals of all tints.

The attraction of the week was the convention of the N. S. A., which is an annual event of unusual weight to all Spiritualists. We did not go as delegates, nor with the intention of taking a hand in working the machinery of the organization. That it has been, and is, in competent hands is evident from the magnificent results achieved.

On our table, where we write, are papers and letters from all parts of the world for Spiritualism and its special reforms, seems to have rooted everywhere, and we are in touch with its army of public workers, and its aggregation of hungry-souled truth-seekers, for whom our Spiritual papers so ably spread their weekly literary feasts, inviting all to banquet royally, for hardly living prices. They are doing a stupendous work, and are the lights in the watchtowers of Progression.

The pathetic ending of some of our "Light-tower keepers is said indeed, as it tells of cares and weariness too heavy to be borne. Within a few weeks Mr. H. L. Green and his wife, both aged, who have given the world The Freethinkers' Magazine for many years, laid down the burden and their souls mysteriously made their exit from the watch-tower which they illuminated so long. Mr. Fred G. Tuttle, in the prime of life, found the burden too heavy for his unnerved hands. He left a note telling his friends the gate through which he should pass to the immortal land, unlocked the door of death and departed, mourned by thousands of friends.

Mr. Tuttle is employed as editor-at-large by the Association, and felt, as did I, an interest in meeting the representatives of the various societies, many of whom were correspondents and purchasers of our books. They all seem as personal friends. The convention was in full swing before we arrived.

The president, Harrison D. Barrett, who has been buffeting the waves of sorrow, and consequent ill health, for the past year, was in his place as presiding officer, and a fine example of the mastery of mind over matter. Were he not upborne by the sympathy of thousands of friends and the angel helpers, we should expect a collapse at any time. He presided in his usual peerless manner, assisted now and then by Representative Sherm of Baltimore, an able lawyer and active politician. The Vice-President, Mr. Locke, was also at hand, and utilized as needed. The zeal of himself and wife was quite inspiring.

The Secretary, Mrs. Mary T. Longley, whose efficient work has been so long and crucially tested in various directions, connected with reforms, was on duty, looking like a demure little Quaker, but as efficient as a good commander of a war ship during an engagement. Her sister, Mrs. Carrie Hatch, of Boston, who looks enough like her to be her twin, was at her table rendering assistance, as was her very noticeable looking husband, Mr. J. B. Hatch, so well known to Lyceumists all over the country.

Prof. C. Payson Longley, the author of so much beautiful music, and a most refined and cultured gentleman, was quietly gliding about, seen, but seldom heard, except through the rendition of his songs, selected from his fine collection, "Longley's Beautiful Songs," which is true to name and a useful book for societies and homes.

The Treasurer, Mr. Theodore J. Myers, through whose great benevolence and aid the association has come into possession of its fine property, is a remarkable presentation of all-round manhood. A fine physique, used by a well cultivated and spiritualized mind, makes a very satisfactory combination, which is highly appreciated by all who known him.

The members of the Executive Committee were fully alive, and crowded with business. Full of interest, zeal and what in slang would be expressed by "get up and git."

The delegates were a keen-looking lot of people and no job lot. They had been chosen with care and did their own thinking. Of course, they might go wrong, but it would not be after the fashion of a drove of sheep, tagging the bell-wether.

The missionaries, E. W. Sprague and wife and G. W. Kates and wife, were present, showing plainly they had been hard at work and deserved the appreciation of Spiritualists. The lives they live while touring seem about as hard to me as the life of a commercial "drummer." One drums up trade, and the others drum for spiritual awakening, growth, action, some place to speak and people to hear; good anchorage and temporary homes where they will not be expected to tell the fortunes of their entertainers, block out the careers of all the children and give communications from all the dear dead relatives.

Missionarying is an honorable calling, but a hard profession, although it may accomplish great good.

Looking about us in the spacious hall, we were very glad to see J. J. Morse, Mrs. Morse, and Miss Florence Morse, late from Australia, who are to spend the winter in America before returning to their home in England. They were seen and heard, to their honor, during the convention.

There was Lyman C. Howe, smiling and responsive, after his long disability in vision; Moses Hull, whose courage and valor never forsake him, although he was somewhat ill, he made the most of his time to present the claims of the Morris Pratt Institute. Mrs. Russegue, who, although her name has changed since we first knew her as Nellie Palmer, still retains the same charming personality. Mrs. Carrie Firth Curran, the President of the Ohio State Association, who is full of zeal and push. Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter, who are among the most popular western lecturers; Mr. and Mrs. Gillespie, from California, working together finely; Mr. Scharffetter, of Baltimore, whose name is often seen in the columns of the Spiritual press; Carrie Twing, who always speaks and acts to the point; Mrs. Clara Stewart, whose forcible speaking, always gains attention; Mr. and Mrs. Prudens, from Minnesota, very noticeable and strong workers; Jennie Leys, who is now Mrs. Edison, residing in Washington; John W. Ring of Texas, who has the Lyceum course in charge; Mrs. Johnson, daughter of Moses Hall, and teacher of elocution at the Morris Pratt Institute; Mr. Max Gentzke, who is editor of a German paper, and has been appointed by the N. S. A. German Missionary; Miss Margaret Gaule, who stands at the head of the long list of test transmitters, was smiling as ever, and full to the eye of her contagious good humor. Mrs. Cadwallader was heard as well as seen whenever her interest was enlisted, and last but not least, Mrs. J. R. Francis, one of the most elegant and pleasing ladies in the assembly, was there, representing The Progresive Thnker, which was given away to all who wished a copy. Dr. Warne, who was talked of as President in case Mr. Barrett declined re-election, was elected Vice-President, and made a very favorable impression on the assembly. There were scores of other interesting people, whose names, we regret, we cannot remember as well as we do their faces.

We like to think they are now working at home, or afield, to diffuse the broad doctrines of our faith and dispense its consolation.

So much for the N. S. A. convention—a good deal—but it was a large affair, so large that our notes on places will have to wait for another issue.

Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be
For my unconquerable soul.

In the fell clutch of circumstance
I have not winced nor cried aloud.
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody but unbowed.

Beyond this place of wrath and tears
Looms but the horror of the shade,
And yet the menace of the years
Finds and shall find me unafraid.

It matters not how strait the the gate,
How charged with punishments the scroll,
I am the master of my fate—
I am the captain of my soul.

The Light Among the Hills.

A Charming Narrative.

Most Beautifully Suggestive is "The Light Among the Hills," by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt. It is a narrative founded on facts alone, and every Spiritualist should read it.

For some time the two sat in deep thought. No sound broke the silence but the ticking of the clock and the buzzing of the flies in the sunshine outside the open door. Suddenly there came a muffled thud as of some object striking the floor. Both aunt and niece started and looked toward the old-fashioned print-covered lounge which was but a few feet from them.

"Where did it go to?" asked Martha, in surprise.

"Where did what go to? What did you see, child?" asked Mrs. Gray.

"I saw a cat on the floor where the thud sounded."

"What sort of a looking cat was it?"

"It was white with gray spots on it. It ran towards us a little and then it was gone. Where did it go to?"

"You saw just exactly what I saw, Martha, and I ask what you did, where did it go?"

"We have no cat," said Martha, "and have not had for some time, and of course a neighbor's cat could not get in through these screens."

"Just as easily," said Mrs. Gray, "as it could have dissolved into sunlight the way this cat has done. We will not be foolish, Martha; we will acknowledge at once that it was not a real cat—at least not one of flesh and blood."

"Then what is it, auntie? What does it mean?"

"I don't know, my dear child. There are people in the world who would explain the matter scientifically, but you and I would be little wiser when they got through, and the fact would remain the same."

"Oh, auntie," said Martha, "I have known many strange things to happen," and she narrated at some length many of the incidents we already have heard. Mrs. Gray listened very attentively and when Martha had finished, she said: "I, too, have seen and heard some strange things. I remember when I was about your age, Martha, that one evening I was all alone at home with my cousin Alice. My brother, your father, was to a neighbor's and the rest of the family were away on a visit. There had been a heavy fall of snow, and the only path shoveled out was from the back door to the road. Alice and I were sitting quite near the front door, and all at once there came three loud, distinct knocks upon it. Alice and I sprang to our feet and Alice exclaimed, 'Why, who has waded through all that snow?' I went and opened the door—there was no one there. I got a light and Alice and I both searched, but there was not the smallest track to be seen, the whole yard between the house and the road was an expanse of unbroken snow.

"Some time after that I awoke one night just as the clock struck twelve. I slept in a room off the sitting room and my room door was open. A full moon was pouring its light through the unshaded windows, making the sitting room almost as bright as day. Suddenly I heard the door between the hall and the sitting room open and shut. I distinctly heard the peculiar click the catch made when the knob was turned. Then I heard the sound of footsteps and they were heavy and slow like those of an aged person. The steps passed the entire length of the sitting room, but although I watched intently I could see no living thing. Then the door into the kitchen opened and shut, and all was still.

"I don't know but it runs in our family to see and hear unexplainable things. I heard my grandmother say that she was sitting by the window one night when the rest of the family started for meeting. Looking out shortly after they had gone she saw a light sitting in the road in front of the window. She said to herself, 'I would not have thought they would have gone and left that lantern burning there when there is such a good moon.' She was going to go out and bring the lantern in when it suddenly rose several feet from the ground and slowly and without visible means traveled across the road, the garden, a field, a yard and up to a house where it disappeared at the window of a room where a little grandchild slept. Shortly afterward the child died. Of course, grandmother thought the light was a warning, but warning or not there must be some explanation for such facts, for facts they are. A person may treat such incidents with contempt and cry 'nonsense! superstition!' but such language explains nothing, and to a thinking mind it is worse than foolish.

"Of all the strange experiences I ever had, the strangest happened when I was a young girl. A girl friend of mine—Lucy Moore was her name—gave a party which I attended. Lucy's parents were quite wealthy and lived in a large, well-furnished house. Among the guests assembled at the party was a young German and a girl from an adjoining town whom I had never seen. Late in the evening it happened that these two and myself were left alone in one of the rooms, the others having gone out to join in music or games which were in progress elsewhere. The young German was telling about life in his native land, and Miss Daley and I were too much interested to care for any other entertainment. The room in which we sat was upon the second floor. The window shades were down and the room was brilliantly lighted by a large hanging lamp. There was a small-figured carpet on the floor, and there was the ordinary furniture to be found in a small sitting room. There were two doors opening out of the room, one into the hall and the other into a bed room; this last I had seen Mrs. Moore lock before the guests began to arrive. Well, we sat there in the bright light talking about life in Germany, when suddenly Miss Daley exclaimed, 'What is that? Oh, what is it?'

"The young man and I followed her gaze, and there upon the floor in the full blaze of lamplight was a coffin. It was of average size and perfect in every detail as any I ever saw. Miss Daley became violently agitated and began to sob. I started to rise, but the young man put out a restraining hand and with a white face he arose and walked to where the strange object lay. He bent over and looked into it, and as he did so it reared up until it stood erect upon one end and then it vanished—right there before our eyes. The young man staggered back to his chair and for some minutes no sound was heard but Miss Daley's sobs, then the bell rang for refreshments and some of the young people came trooping in, and all were gay but us three.

"We went down stairs with the rest, but we could not eat. Before I went homehome I found the German and said, 'What did you see in that coffin?' His face grew set and white. 'Do not ask—I will not tell you,' was his only answer. The next day a boy friend came running in with the news of Miss Daley's death. When she and her brother had got about half way home from the place of the party, their horse became frightened at something, and in spite of all Mr. Daley's efforts, ran the carriage off a steep bank, hurling its occupants to the ground. Mr. Daley was not very much injured and he instantly rushed up to his sister and bent over her. She spake just two words and died; the words were 'The coffin.' Mr. Daley and all to whom he told his story wondered greatly at the strange words, but to me and one other they were no mystery. Nothing ever made a greater impression upon my mind than this incident, but if I should tell the story to a stranger he would quite likely think me either a liar or crazy.

"I cannot think that our experiences are solitary. My own sense tells me that there must be many in the world who have heard and seen things as mysterious as you and I have, Martha."

Here the conversation was interrupted by Mr. Weston's return, and the following morning Mrs. Grey departed for her own home, and it was not till the next spring that Martha saw her aunt again, and then she could hardly believe the evidence of her eyes. Coming home from a visit to Mrs. Brown one beautiful day in April, Martha was surprised to find Mrs. Gray standing upon the rough stone doorstep waiting for her with outstretched hands. Martha threw her arms around her aunt's neck and looked wonderingly into the smiling face bent over hers. Mrs. Gray had laid aside her mourning and she looked ten years younger than when Martha had last seen her; in fact she was her old happy self again, just as Martha remembered her before death had robbed her of her only child. Once during the evening Mrs. Weston found time to say to her daughter: "I don't see what's come over yer Aunt Lajry; she laughs and jokes jist as she useter before her boy died. I should think she'd forgotten pretty quick after the way she took on last fall. I'd like ter know what she took off her mournin so quick for. I don't think much of it—wastin' all them good clothes."

That evening after the family had retired at the usual early hour Mrs. Gray rapped at Martha's door and said: "I have come to see if I may share your bed, for I have many things to say to you."

Martha bade her aunt welcome and Mrs. Grey continued: "I can see that you are surprised at my changed appearance, for you remember how I was nearly wild with grief the last time you saw me. One day I thought I had reasoned myself into atheism, and the next day I half believed and wholly feared the Bible was true. After I left you I went home, but I could not endure the desolation. I was really afraid my mind would give way under the strain. 'Work, hard work,' I said to myself, 'is the best cure for trouble.' Acting upon this sensible idea I obtained, as you know, a situation in a shop in Glinden. As good luck, fate, providence—whatever it may be—would have it, I found the right woman for a room mate. Now, before I go any farther with my story, I want you to tell me if you have had any more queer happenings?"

"Oh, yes," said Martha. "The first of them happened just a few days after you went away. I went out toward night to spread some clothes upon the grass. When I came in, mother asked me what girl was out there with me. I told her there was no one with me. At that mother turned upon me furiously and told me that if I lied to her she would knock me down. She said that she saw the girl, and she looked just like me, and she ordered me to tell her who it was. I saw that there was something wrong somewhere, and I dreaded to speak, but of course I had to, and there was no way only to tell the truth, let what might happen, so I said that I did not see any girl with me; that I supposed I was alone. I don't know what would have happened if father had not stepped in just then. It seemed that he had been listening to what we said, and he told mother that she probably had something over her eyes and saw double. She was pretty wrathy at that, and said several things, but father told me to come and help him drive in the calves, and I went out with him and that ended it. After the calves were in father and I sat down on the corn stalks and talked quite a while. Father said: 'Ther is something very queer going on. You remember how I asked you one morning what girl was here the evening before.' I had not forgotten but I gave it no thought.

"Well, father said that that particular evening he saw Charlie and me come into the house, and Charlie was carrying the light—we had been out hunting for something—and I came closely behind Charlie and right after me came another girl who looked just like me, only her dress was darker and shorter, and her hair hung down her back, and I had mine pinned up.

"When I told him that there had been no girl with me that evening, he was greatly surprised, and went and questioned Charlie, and found that he had see no girl but me. Father and I talked for some time, and he said that if he believed in the immortality of the soul he should believe that spirits did sometimes return, but it would not answer to make such a remark before mother. I don't remember that we saw anything more of the kind until one day last winter Charlie came running in, with big eyes and a good deal excited. As he was coming through the garden gate he saw me, as he thought, standing by the shed door. He said I was bending over and seemed to be looking for something upon the ground. Just as he came up to me I stopped my search and went into the shed before him, and when I got to the middle of the room I vanished—one instant I was there in plain sight and the next I was gone! He rushed up to the kitchen door and threw it open, and there I stood at the table making bread for supper. We talked and talked, but nothing more or less could we make out of it. The next thing of the sort that happened was several months later. I was up stairs sewing, and did not go down all the afternoon. Cousin Millie was visiting me and she and Charlie had been out doors and when they were returning they saw me as they thought standing in the shed door, and I had one hand resting upon the casing and was looking at them. They said the sun shone full upon me and they saw me as plainly as they ever did. They both spoke to me and Charlie asked me several questions They said I looked at them but did not say a word, which they thought very queer, and after a little while I turned and went into the shed but they did not see what became of me. I would never have known anything about it, only Charlie was so offended because I did not answer his questions that he took me to task for my offense and so the facts came out. This is all, I think."

THE GREAT DEBATE

Between Rev. Frank Evans, Methodist, and Prof. Eckles, Spiritualist.

To the Editor:—It is about thirty years ago that the great four days' debate took place at Eddyville, Iowa, between Rev. Frank Evans, Methodist, and Prof. Eckles, Spiritualist. I attended the entire session. Both were giants in the pulpit. In one of his speeches Mr. Evans made the charge that Spiritualists are atheists. In ringing tones and most challenging manner he said:

"Now ladies and gentlemen, I assert that my opponent and all Spiritualists are bold, cold-blooded atheists. They do not believe in God. They deny that God exists. If Mr. Eckles disputes this charge, then I insist that in his very next speech he tells us what kind of a God the Spiritualists believe in. I insist that he define the Spiritualist God."

The orthodox people in the audience cheered this challenge with vigorous hand-clapping and stamping of feet. When Prof Eckles took the floor he said:

"My friends, Brother Evans asserts that Spiritualists are atheists. Now I deny that. It is true we do not believe that such a God exists as does Brother Evans, but because we do not accept his idea of a jealous, revengeful, changeful and short-sighted God, it does not follow that we do not believe in any deity at all. My honorable opponent insists that I shall define the God the Spiritualists believe exists. That I cannot do. The finite mind cannot measure and fully define the infinite. The best I can do will be to say that the Spiritualists believe that God is life, all life; that he is the sum total of all that is powerful, all that is lovely, all that is wise, all that is just, all that is beautiful, all that is good. He is omnipotent, omniscient and omnipresent, from everlasting to everlasting. He includes all that exists from the centre of the universe (if there be any centre) to the outermost bounds of the universe, if there be any such limitations. God is in all things—is all things. Every atom that exists, visible and invisible, is a part of him, and he could not be infinite if this were not so. God is both spirit and matter. God is life, and all things are alive. There is no death; that which seems such is transition—is change. The boundless universe, from molecule or grain of sand to the blazing sun; from the center of earth to the core of the universe, is throbbing, pulsating with life, with intelligence, with God. Now, my friends, this is the best I can do in an attempt to define the God of the Spiritualists. Having done the best I could, I now, in turn, ask that Brother Evans shall define the orthodox God. But as I shall give him a good deal of work to do during this debate, I shall help him along a little. I will read from his holy and infallible book a description of the Methodist God."

Here Prof. Eckles took up the Bible, and read to the audience the account given in the Old Testament, where God wrestled with Jacob "from the setting of the sun till the break of day, and could not prevail against Jacob until he touched him in the hollow of his thigh, and then did overcome the patriarch, and did prevail against him."

"Now," shouted Eckles, "here is the Bible description of Brother Evans' God. What do you think of this Methodist Deity who will wrestle all night with a man, and is not strong enough, nor scientific enough, to throw him down? He tried the front grab, the back clutch, the hip-lock, and the grape vine twist ineffectually, and was clearly getting the worst of the scuffle, for old Jake was something of a wrestler himself. Now let my brother blush for shame at the shabby conduct of his God. Finding he could not floor the old man by fair means, he resorted to a foul trick of striking old Jacob below the belt, a trick that has never been allowed in any wrestling match or prize fight, from that day to this. According to the Bible account old Jake wrestled fair and was entitled to the medal in that tussle."

The yells from the audience that greeted this comment on ancient history so disgusted the eloquent preacher, that, during the remainder of the debate, he wore a sad and injured look. I was then and am now a personal friend of Rev. Frank Evans. For his superior ability and many charming qualities of head and heart, I have great admiration. I trust he will pardon me for confessing that often during the past thirty years, I have awakened at night and laughed out loud over Eckles' description of that historical scuffle, but I usually ceased my hilarity when I recalled how fatigued my friend, Brother Evans, looked after Eckles finished that speech. I was a member of the Methodist church then, and I narrowly escaped being disciplined for irreligiously laughing over Brother Evans' dilemma.

An Eminent Catholic Divine Is Secretly Kicking Against the Intolerance of His Own Church.

THE FREEDOM OF CATHOLIC THOUGHT.

A Distinguished Roman Catholic Priest's Defence of His Position.

To the Editor of the Sun: Sir—For two weeks I have awaited the appearance in your columns of some criticism more pertinent than that of the Rev. Father Livingston to my original letter. Though disinclined to prolong the correspondence, two developments have occurred so strongly confirmatory of my two main assertions—that a policy of suppression exists, and its results are evil—that I think you will permit me to bring them forward.

As to the first point, the storm of invective which so many Catholic newspapers, following Father Livingston's lead, have launched against "Sacerdos" is proof, if proof were wanted, that our Catholic editors will have no dealings with anybody who indulges in criticism of the actual. I have no quarrel with these organs; still less with Father Livingston—may he continue to flourish in the blessing of Issachar! Even were the invective as keen as it is coarse, I should find ample protection against it in the reflection that thrice is he armed who has his quarrel just.

If ecclesiastical history teaches anything, it teaches that often theologians have been fighting tooth and nail to give certain opinions the stamp of Catholic doctrine, and when these opinions were subsequently refuted by advancing knowledge, the next generation of theologians had to employ every subtlety of hair-splitting dialectics to maintain that the church herself had never adopted such tenets at all. The condemnation of the heliocentric theory is a classic example. Another is the taking of interest. We are all familiar with the plea that interest is now lawful, not as payment for the use of barren metal, but 'propter damnumemergens, lucrum cessans et periculum sortis.' But we all know, too, that not one of these titles has any standing with regard to the greater part of deposits in savings banks, or the enormous sums invested (not a little of them by the highest ecclesiastics) in government bonds and other high-priced securities, which are sought for precisely because they are safe, and for the investment of money which its owners could not otherwise safeguard or employ. To go back to our beginnings, who in the early centuries, or even in the Apostolic age itself, would have dared to challenge the opinion that the end of the universe was at hand? On account of these past errors we are now eating crow every day. Any one who would have protested against them when they flourished would have been treated as they are treated now who protest against the present antiquated ineptitudes. As to abuse, it is the same story—those who first inveighed against them were punished as criminals, those who afterward rooted them out are blessed as saviors. The advocates of newer and better things have always encountered authority throwing its skirts around the outworn and inefficient. Some random examples: St. John of the Cross was imprisoned by his Carmelite superiors; St. Teresa was castigated as severely by dignitaries as to compare great with small, 'Sacerdos" was by the Rev. Father Livingston; St. Ignatius himself was put in jail, and his book in the pillory by lawful authority. Another reformer, Savonarola, denounced the corruptions of his day, and he went to the stake. Yet Adrian VI soon afterward, when the steed was stolen, could declare: "All know that for some years there have existed abominations in this Holy See, abuses, all things, in short, changed and perverted. We have all, prelates and ecclesiastics, turned aside, each in his own way, nor has there been for a long time any one who has done well." So much for the well intentioned but myopic zeal which sees a Judas in everybody who dares to observe that though the church is divine, her ministers, even those who are commissioned to feed and shear the flock, are only men. In his own forcible way, President Roosevelt has just expressed a truth that has its application far beyond the precincts of the postal administration: the toleration of the wrong, not the exposure of the wrong, is the real offence.

The second of my statements, of which I would now offer confirmation, is that the system of repression is evoking evil; and I take the evidence from your editorial columns of Nov. 22. You said there that you are receiving many letters from Catholic laymen who ridicule the stories of the Deluge and Jonas; and you added that such men are on the high road to infidelity. If they are it is because they are not allowed to hear the truth, which would make them free. Catholic scholars of unquestioned orthodoxy are teaching that no doctrine of the church obliges Catholics to accept these and many other Biblical accounts as literal history. But because an undiscriminating howl is kept up in high places against the "higher criticism," those who know the truth are obliged to treat it as esoteric. Thus the laity who come in contact with non-Catholic thought are cruelly left to wander away, victims of a misapprehension. Again history will repeat itself, and our coming apologists will be engaged in demonstrating that the Catholic church never guaranteed the three Heavenly Witnesses of John, nor proclaimed that there are no errors in the Bible.

Fortunately there are already indications, faint and isolated though they are, that the true spirit of conservatism is beginning to oust its spurious rival which has so long been lord of the ascendant. As a hopeful sign, and for the consolation of your corespondent "Free Speech," I may mention that the book to which he referred, which was refused an imprimatur in this archdiocese of New York, has received one from the broad-minded scholar who now rules the see of Westminster. I hope to live long enough to sign my name to sentiments that, if published to-day, would arouse such a fury as could not find adequate expression even in that rich repertoire of imagery which Father Livingston has borrowed from Messieurs the prize fighters. Meanwhile, being physically unfit for the toils of a rural pastorate, I must continue to remain,

NOBLESSE OBLIGE.

I hold it the duty of one who is gifted
And specially dowered in all men's sight,
To know no rest till his life is lifted
Fully up to his great gifts' height.

He must mold the man into rare completeness,
For gems are set only in gold refined,
He must fashion his thoughts into perfect sweetness,
And cast out folly and pride from his mind.

For he who drinks from a god's gold fountain
Of art or music or rhythmic song
Must sift from his soul the chaff of malice,
And weed from his heart the roots of wrong.

Great gifts should be worn like a crown befitting!
And not like gems in a beggar's hands,
And the toil must be constant and unremitting
Which lifts up the king to the crown's demands.

FARMER RILEY.

As Carefully Viewed by a Prominent Ex-Judge.

SEANCES WITH RILEY.

While my trip to Marcellus had been in the highest degree satisfactory, I nevertheless found myself upon my return home still in the fog. The old, old query of Job, "If a man die shall he live again?" was ringing in my ears with redoubled resonance. The question came back again and again, had I really seen my departed friend? Had it really at last been vouchsafed to me to meet the risen dead face to face? Had I really been present at, and a party to, an astonishing demonstration of the continuity of life after what the world calls death? Had I really been a witness to the truth of St. Paul's tremendous declaration that man is sown a natural body and raised a spiritual body? If I had really seen and heard what I thought I saw and what I thought I heard in the humble cottage of "Farmer Riley," then I must answer these queries in the affirmative; while if I had not seen or heard what I thought I saw and heard, then I had been the victime of some sort of a delusion. And so the answer to these grave and astounding questions turned wholly upon the determination of what I had really seen and really heard.

To be called upon to settle the question of the continuity of life after the dissolution of the physical body upon original evidence was not thought to be within the range of possibility in former days. Science has long denied the existence of any tangible evidence to show the immortality of man. The church has long taught that human reason is not equal to the task of demonstrating immortality unaided by revelation. In fact, the exercise of independent judgment in matters of belief, is not encouraged by the church. On the contrary, the church, under the plea that early religious instruction is necessary to the formation of a good character, has long sought to inculcate her religious doctrines at an early age, and before the maturity of the understanding. In short, the church for many generations has labored to relieve men from all independent inquiry as to the future life by assuming the whole responsibility.

It may truly be said that the vast multitude found within the folds of the church take their religious belief at second-hand. While this process may be the best for the larger share of mankind, it is not available in the solution of this Spiritualistic problem. That comes to us claiming to present to us living tangible proofs upon the value of which we may pass judgment. It is idle to invoke assitance from priests or pastors. They decide these matters by an appeal to records which they have been taught to regard as of great antiquity and of supernatural origin. The investigator of Spiritualism must see, examine, consider and answer for himself. Neither a Myers nor a Hudson can decide for anyone other than himself. So of Podmore and Jamieson. If this answer be a denial it may be either because of the insufficient or spurious character of the evidence, or it may be because he himself is incapable of belief in a future life upon any evidence which may be presented—and in the latter case his conclusion is of no value. This inability to believe, no matter what the evidence may be, is like color blindness, incurable. No known remedy can arrest the progress of the disease, the effect of which seems to be to harden and petrify the understanding as to the possibilities in things spiritual.

The problem growing out of my visit to Marcellus was, however, by no means new to me. In my boyhood days I had seen church floors covered with moaning worshipers wrought to a frenzy by the lurid eloquence of some follower of the lowly Nazarene. My attention had also been drawn to the occult very early in life by an incident which subsequently proved to be a link in the chain of development of so-called modern Spiritualism. In the summer of 1843 there came to a little village in the lower border of the Adirondacks, located just east of the Bloody Pond Battle Ground and north of the Hudson a certain Prof. Grimes, who was engaged in giving exhibitions in mesmerism. His lecture and manipulation of one of my elder playmates served to fill our little community quite full of curiosity—if not awe, in regard to this mysterious subject. This same Prof. Grimes, upon his return trip down the Hudson, made a stop at Poughkeepsie, and there had as a spectator in one of his exhibitions a tailor named Levinson, who, upon witnessing the control which Grimes seemed to possess over certain subjects under certain conditions, immediately declared that he himself was possessed of the same power. Upon the departure of the professor, Levinson set about demonstrating the truth of his assertion, and in a few days he had the boy Andrew Jackson Davis talking with an eloquence, a diction and wealth of information, which at once commanded the warmest admiration of all who chanced to hear him.

While Prof. Grimes really drew the match which lit the train which set the world ablaze, it does not appear, however, that he ever at any time claimed any credit therefor. Quite the contrary. Prof. Grimes remained true to his Methodist fellowship until the day of his death, which occurred at Evanston, Ill., some weeks since, where, in so far as Spiritualism is concerned, he may be said to have gone to his grave unhonored and unsung. As a matter of history, however, he is entitled to honorable mention for the part played by him in the origin of the great movement destined as many observers believe, to shatter the dangerous and vicious power of priestcraft which has so long held the minds of men in the thralldom of bigotry and superstition.

It may also be of interest to some of our Spiritualistic friends of Methodist antecedents to know how some inscrutable power has in the past made use of two such men as John Wesley and Prof. Grimes. And this must be my justification for this digression.

In addition to my recollection of the strange scenes I had witnessed in Prof. Grimes exhibition, I had also as early as June, A. D. 1848, in my then far Western home, read what I believed was the first account published in the West of the "Rochester Knockings." This account was contained in a weekly paper called the "Rock River Pilot," published by one E. B. Quiner, a Rochester newspaper man, who had located at Watertown, Wis. From the moment of perusal the details of that article became indelibly impressed upon my youthful memory and had ever thereafter remained a matter of surpassing interest to me, and now after peering in vain into cabinet after cabinet during a period of personal investigation covering nearly forty years, I had at last and for the first time seen a face which I recognized without hesitation as that of one whom I had known in the flesh. To accept these appearances as genuine—as establishing the fact that I had seen something real, something constructed of helium perhaps) and possessing intelligence projected for the moment from the other side of the line which separates the empyrical from the transcendental is, however, to affirm what the philosophers tell us is beyond the grasp of the human understanding, since all our conceptions lie on the hither side of that line of demarkation; the beyond is what Mr. Spencer defines as the Unknowable.

Had I really then been the victim of a series of illusions, or had I dropped into a veritable blind alley located in the sky? Before yielding to these conclusions I determined to retrace my steps, to re-examine the ground over which I had supposedly passed. As a result of this determination, just thirty days after my former visit, I found myself again knocking at the door of Farmer Riley's residence, where I met with a cordial reception.

In the evening a circle was once more made up, composed of about an equal number of strangers and neighbors, and after the customary exchange of greetings, Riley again entered the cabinet. We had not long to wait; in a few moments my friend, Mayor D., threw aside the curtain and stepped out in full form with the music box in his hands and with his old familiar stride came forward and placed the box in my lap, and then with a bow and a pleasant smile and a wave of the hand retreated backward into the cabinet. The Mayor was a real soldier. He had left the lower section of one limb at Port Gibson. I recognized at once the peculiar walk which he had acquired after this loss. His face seemed to be self illuminated. In form and feature, in movement and in gesture the apparition was complete.

Shortly after this appearance I was called to the cabinet with another party and requested to assist in forming a so-called "battery" to invigorate the power of the medium. Riley was sitting in a chair just inside the curtains, my associate and myself held his hands for a few moments as requested, when at a given signal we let go and withdrew from the cabinet.

Like Tam O'Shanter, lest bogies catch me unawares, I took the precaution to back out and was well repaid therefor. While my associate was stooping to arrange the curtains, they were thrown aside—and there stood a figure clad like a lord, in immaculate linen cuffs, collar and dress coat. Again it was Riley and it was not Riley. My associate seemed struck with awe, threw up his hands and with deep emotion exclaimed, "Father!" The apparition stretched forth its arm and placing its hand upon the young man's head as if to bestow a benediction, slowly sank out of sight, apparently through the floor. While from my position I could not see the medium, I knew that only a moment before Riley was seated upon a chair just inside the cabinet to the left of where I stood, clad in his ordinary every day raiment—without a coat and with a dark woolen shirt. Moreover, it seemed as if the windows of the firmament were open flooding the interior of the cabinet with light.

Nor was this all; while the apparition to me had the appearance of Riley, it was at the same time apparently self-illuminated with the brain absolutely translucent.

It would be difficult to portray in words the sensation, I experienced during the passing of this scene. I returned to my seat—little expecting to see more on that occasion. I was barely seated, however, when again the curtains parted, and there came a form, I had not dared to hope to see, again. It was that of a young man in the prime of early manhood; I could not be mistaken; it was the familiar face and form of one whose departure from the active walks of life had made the hot tears flood and burn and the busy, surging streets of Chicago seem narow, gloomy and desolate.

Who and what is this Necromancer, called "Farmer Riley," who can work these things? Whence come these "Wandering Doubles" of our loved and lost?

Are these the "Wandering Doubles" spoken of by Mr. Spencer in his "Facts and Comments?" Now that he has passed over, let us hope that we may shortly hear further from this eminent philosopher on this subject. H. B.

HOW DID YOU DIE?

Did you tackle that trouble that came your way
With a resolute heart and cheerful,
Or hide your face from the light of day
With a craven soul and fearful?
Oh, a trouble's a ton or a trouble's an ounce,
Or a trouble is what you make it,
And it isnt the fact that you're hurt that counts,
But only how did you take it?

You are beaten to earth? Well, well, what's that?
Come up with a smiling face.
It's nothing against you to fall down flat,
But to lie there—that's disgrace.
The harder you're thrown, why, the higher you'll bounce;
Be proud of your blackened eye!
It isn't the fact that you're licked that counts,
It's how did you fight—and why?

And though you be done to the death, what then?
If you battled the best you could,
If you played your part in the world of men,
Why, the critic will call it good.
Death comes with a crawl or comes with a pounce;
And whether he's slow or spry,
It isn't the fact that you're dead that counts,
But what's done before you die.

Awful Disease, Cancer of the Lip.

The most frequent location of terrible disease in the male caused from the constant irritation produced by smoking or chewing tobacco. Dr. Bye, the Specialist on the Treatment of Cancer, Kansas City, Mo., advises early treatment in such cases, as most cases terminate fatally after the lymphatic glands become envolved under the chin. Mr. N. H. Henderson, of Wilsey, Kansas, was recently cured of a very bad cancer of the lip by the Combination Oils. Persons afflicted with this disease should write the Doctor for an Illustrated Book on the treatment of Cancer and Malignant Diseases. Address Dr. W. O. Bye, 9th and Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

INTERESTING EXPERIENCES

Good Reports About Maggie Vestal—Most Convincing Tests Given—J. M. Kennedy Writes a Newsy Letter, and Portrays the Beauty of Humanitarian Work on the Spirit Side of Life.

J. M. Kennedy, Attorney-at-Law, Marysville, Ohio.:

Dear Sir:—You welcome letter of October 23 came to hand in due time. I was truly glad to hear from you again. should have answered it sooner, but was waiting for something to write that would interest you.

Mrs. Maggie Vestal, trumpet medium, has been with us for the last two weeks. I had a sitting with her the other day, and had a talk with several of my friends.

The first one was Lewis Fairbanks, my brother-in-law, whom you knew. After identifying himself he said: "You have not answered that letter yet." I got a letter from my cousin, Foster Bennett, who lives over on little Darby, at the same time I got yours. I answered, "No; I have been waiting for something to write." After talking some time he said, "When you write, give my kindest regards to Mr. Kennedy."

The next one to talk to me was my old mother, who passed to spirit life when I was about seventeen years old. She called me "her boy" and gave me, as she always did, good advice.

Next came my brother Chauncey, who died when I was about ten years old from the effects of a gun shot wound accidentally received at a general muster near Milford.

We had quite a talk about his life in the spirit world. The next one to talk was my brother Stillman, who was a Presbyterian preacher in his life time. He died a good many years ago in Iowa. I asked him if he was preaching the same doctrine in the spirit world that he did here, and he replied, "No, I preach progression here, but there are a great many people who cannot understand it, and Presbyterianism suits them as well as anything."

Next came my sister Kalista, who married Levi Patrick, who ran a mill just below what we called "Chuckery." We had quite a talk about old times and people whom we both knew.

Then came my niece, Lucy, the daughter of Lewis Fairbanks, and as usual gave me a long talk. She tells me that she is engaged as a teacher, or as they call it, a helper, assisting weak and undeveloped young girl spirits to a higher and better life.

None of us may expect a life of idleness in the spirit world. We shall all find something to do. I care but little what others think of these things; to me they are real. I have investigated them until I know they are genuine and true. I know that I hold frequent and sweet communion with my friends, whose bodies have rested in the grave for years. I expect to join them ere long, where there will be no more parting, and no more sorrows. I have tried to do my duty in this life and have no fear for the future.

Now, I think I have said enough for this time, and hope to hear from you again. I forgot to mention that my niece, Lucy Fairbanks, desired to be remembered to you.

S. M. TUCKER.

Wichita, Kan., Nov. 19, 1903.

To the Editor:—Inclosed find a letter to the writer from Judge Tucker, Wichita, Kan. I knew the Judge in my boyhood days. Since that he has lived in the West. The spirit Lewis Fairbanks, I knew well in life. In the years 1852 and 1853 I taught school and boarded at his house. The mother of the Judge, I never knew in earth life. I remember well his brother, Chauncey, and the unfortunate accident which caused his death.

The brother, Stillman, I never knew.

Mrs. Patrick I knew and all the people and places spoken of were of my boyhood days. His niece, Lucy Fairbanks, was the first medium I ever saw under control. I attended one of her seances about the year 1850. I saw her write automatically with both hands at a time. She was a bright, beautiful young lady, and became an excellent medium during her life. She passed over about thirty years ago.

What a beautiful thought it is that the millions of weak, undeveloped spirits that pass over daily from this vast world of ours, with its sixteen hundred millions of inhabitants that are wholly unacquainted with spirit life, should meet with such willing and ready helpers as Miss Farbanks to bring them out into the beautiful light of spirit existence.

Of all that vast number of inhabitants that pass over every year are untold numbers of little infants, which are untutored, many of them still-born, and many others wholly unable to care for themselves or to know where they are.

What a grand work for the advanced spirits to bring them out into the light and knowledge of spirit experience.

I have a daughter who passed to spirit life in 1880. She comes back to me and tells me she is one of the many thousands needed to care for these little infant spirits, and that her duty in the spirit world is to organize them into schools, and to care for them until they pass beyond her class into the classes spoken of by Miss Fairbanks.

Where is there a knowledge or philosophy so grand, so good, so natural, and so humane as this?

And the whole of eternity is for progress and for the betterment of humanity.

How I pity the creedbound spirits who stand enthralled at the threshold of the new life by the vicious teaching that has darkened and enslaved them, not only in this life, but in the spirit life, requiring the care and attention of those lovely angel spirits spoken of by Miss Fairbanks to bring them out into a knowledge of spirit existence and a higher and better life. I expect to see in the eons of time (not while I occupy this physical body, however) the people of this world released from this superstitition, bigotry and terrible bondage, and brought up to a higher plane of life and when they pass over to that great futurity they will be prepared to take up the thread of life where they left off on this side in an intelligent spiritual life of progression.

Judge Tucker's communication, published some time ago in The Progressive Thinker, giving an account of his experience in Liberal, Mo., some seven years ago, with the spirit of his niece, Lucy Fairbanks, and his letter to the writer relating to the seance of Mrs. Maggie Vestal, herewith inclosed, have both been published in the Evening Tribune, a small daily published here; also in the Weekly Tribune, and have stirred up a great deal of interest here. It is the first time in the history of Spiritualism that the secular papers would publish the truth about Spiritualism or spiritual phenomena, but were always ready to vilify the phenomena and the BURKE—9 ....*.. *.. *.. .... Spiritualists. We are slowly but surely gaining in the great work for the truth and humanity in this and the life to come.

FROM SOUL LAND.

At the age of thirty-five I found myself, Philip Weston, besides being possessed of a competence left me by my beloved father, chief owner in one of the most flourishing business concerns in the thriving city of B——. I had, at the death of my father, taken into partnership with me, Raymond Curtis, who had been for ten years or more my father's confidential clerk. Mr. Curtis was a shrewd, clear-headed man, possessed of a complete knowledge of all the details of the business, while I was fresh from college with almost no experience. I thought it the wisest thing for me to do, although I had no personal liking for the man.

He was of a cool, calculating nature, inclined to be cynical and he frequently let fall remarks that denoted an utter absence of the warm human impulses such as I like to find in those connected with me. But he was devoted to the business, and having no family ties, was willing to give it his whole time and attention, leaving me liberty to enjoy the comforts of my home and the society of my beloved Ruth and baby boy; so I was not inclined to be critical.

Ruth Stanford was an orphan, dependent on the charity of an aunt, when I married her. It was a pure love match, and time had in no degree cooled the ardor of the affection we felt for each other; on the contrary, our love had grown and strengthened, and when our beautiful Ralph was given to us, no happier home than ours could have been found.

Feb. 15, 18—, was a cold, disagreeable day. Rain had been falling through the day, and the cold increasing towards night had covered the ground with a coating of ice that made walking very difficult and sometimes dangerous. Business being dull, I prepared to leave the office somewhat earlier than usual. Bidding good night to my partner and the only clerk left at work, I started, with my heart in a warm glow at the thought of the long, cozy evening before me with my dear ones in the home nest. Closing the door behind me, and buttoning my overcoat closer about me, I started to run down the steps, when—a slip—a fall—a wild clutching of the empty air for support, a whirling and twirling of my body as it shot downward, then a blank.

I know not how long I was unconscious. The first sensation I experienced was of being enveloped, wrapped about in some soft, suffocating substance and of struggling to free myself. After a long struggle which seemed of hours duration, I succeeded in clearing myself and coming out into daylight; but where was I? There was no street, no business blocks, no gas lights, nothing but immensity. I seemed to stand alone in all the universe. Dazed, I tried to realize what had happened, when I felt a touch, and, turning, stood face to face with my father; yes, it was father just as natural as when in the body. Forgetting for a moment the, to me, impossibility of its being really him, I exclaimed, "Why, father, is it you?"

"Yes, my son," he replied, "it is I; let us go."

"But, where? I must go home to Ruth; she will be expecting me."

"Come with me, my son," said the calm voice, but an awakening seemed to be stealing over me, and I remembered. "Why, father, you are dead; what does this mean?" Then as a sudden thought seemed to pierce my brain: "Am I dead, too?"

"Yes, Philip, you are what you call dead, but you have only parted the curtain that separates the two worlds, and—" but I heard no more. The horror, the agony of that moment no tongue can tell or language describe. "Dead, and gone from my Ruth! Oh, my God! what will she do without me? Who will break the news to her! And my boy! Who will be a guardian and protector to him? Oh, Ruth! oh, my child! I cannot be dead," and once more unconsciousness overcame me, and I knew no more.

Another awaking, another struggle for light and freedom, but with returning consciousness came memory, and with it the pressure of a cool soft hand upon my head—and—could it be? was this my mother, my dear mother who had been taken from me when I was but a boy, but whose face had never faded from my memory.

"My Philip," murmured a sweet voice, "be calm, be strong, be a man, be prepared to meet whatever may come to you."

"But, mother, tell me, is it true that I have died and am in the land of spirits? How did it happen?" And quietly and kindly the dear mother related how I had fallen on the steps of the office, and had been taken up quite dead. My head had struck on a sharp corner of the iron fence of the next block and life went out in an instant.

"Does Ruth know it yet?" I asked.

"This was five days ago," was the answer; "your body is at rest in the cemetery with mine and the others, but you are beginning another stage of your existence, and it remains with you as to how and in what spirit you take up your duties and responsibilities of this new life."

"But my wife and baby, mother; can I not go to them? Can I not help them? Think of it; Ruth has no one, no father or mother; even the aunt who brought her up is dead; she depended on me for everything; she will not know what to do; I must go to them if it is possible."

"Yes, you can go to them, but there is a veil between you that you may not be able to lift; your eyes are clear now; you may be able to see through it, like glass, that from one side the vision is obscured, and from the other you see clearly. You may she her and perhaps make your presence felt, but her eyes have not yet gained the spiritual vision, but you can help her."

"Then let us go, I can't wait."

"Very well," and with her hand in mine we were borne away. It was as though the desire in our souls formed a power to propel us towards the object of our desires as steam lifts and moves the vessel in which it is confined.

Before my mind was accustomed to the novelty of the event without effort, I was in the dear familiar home once more. Mother was gone. I was alone with my own Baby Ralph was asleep in his crib, and half lying across it, with her face close to his, was my wife. Oh! how wan and pale she looked, and how the sobs shook her frame as she whispered, "Oh! Ralphie dear, how can we live without papa? Do you know he is gone; dead, and gone far away from us, and we never shall see him any more? Oh! Philip, oh! my husband, how can I bear it! I wish we could go, too; baby and I, both; oh! Philip! Philip!"

I placed my hand on her brow; I tried to lift her head to my shoulder. I whispered to her that I was not dead, that I was here, that I still lived and loved her, and would never forsake her; I imprinted kisses on her sweet lips all unheeded; she did not see me, hear me, or feel my presence. Can any hell equal the agony I endured; to clasp my loved one in my arms, lavish upon her love's endearments and meet with no response? Years spent amid the glories of heaven could not bring to me the realizing sense of the separation that had come to us, as did those moments when I tried to comfort my dear one and could not make her sense my love and protection. I kissed my boy and he smiled in his sleep, and I continued to try to soothe and calm my wife, and I think I succeeded in a degree, for after a while her sobs grew less and she lay quiet.

Suddenly the ring of the door bell sounded through the house and the servant brought in a card inscribed Raymond Curtis. Ruth adjusted her dress, arranged her hair, and went down to the drawing room. I accompanied her. Mr. Curtis appeared just the same, cold and impassive. He shook hands with my wife, offered her polite condolences on the subject of her affliction, assured her of his willingness to do all in his power to assist her, and apologized for his intrusion by stating that some steps must be taken towards closing up the business and settling up the estate of her late husband. Ruth stated her ignorance of all business matters and frankly asked his advice as to what steps she should take. Mr. Curtis replied that if she had confidence to trust the business arrangements with him, he would relieve her of all embarrassment or anxiety in regard to the matter, and would attend to settling up the affairs to the best of his ability, after being appointed administrator of my estate, according to law. Ruth thanked him and said that as Philip trusted him completely, she saw no reason why she should not.

I don't know how it was, but all the trust and confidence I had had in my partner was gone. I tried with all the power I could bring to bear to speak to Ruth and tell her not to trust him, to get Dr. Stanley or our true and tried friend Lawyer Fiske to assist her and take charge, but it was all in vain; she could not hear me, and she gave her consent to Mr. Curtis applying for papers of administration allowing him power to close up or dispose of the business and arrange all matters pertaining to her and our child's future. I did not know why I should feel as I did. I had always trusted his honor, although never attracted to him personally, but I was filled with distrust and fear as to how my dear ones might fare left to his mercies.

"Thank God," I said, "I have money enough to keep them in comfort; he can not injure them very deeply." How little I knew the depth of infamy of which some human souls are capable.

Wearied with trying to reach Ruth's soul with my love and sympathy, I turned my thoughts once more to mother, and lo, she was there. "Come, now," she said, and bidding my dear ones "good night and God bless you," I passed out of their presence again.

I will not tell of the many times I visited my old home, of the many efforts I made to make myself clear to the consciousness of my dear wife. Sometimes I think I almost succeeded. Sometimes her thoughts would grow calmer and she would whisper, "Dear Philip, you know I love you, and I do want you so; can you hear me, or is heaven too far away?" and sometimes I have seen a look of peace steal over her countenance and I half believed that she did hear my protestations of love and devotion. I could get nearer my boy; many times his little eyes would turn to me and his childish voice would say "papa, papa," bringing tears of anguish from his mother's eyes as she would tell him that papa had gone to heaven and would never come back, but some day they would go and find him.

One day while enjoying the comforts of my parents' spirit home, I felt such a calling from Ruth. She needed me; I knew it; I must go, and I found her again in the drawing room with Mr. Curtis and, what was he telling her? Can it be possible that I hear aright? He is telling her that he has found the business very much involved, that there had been many bad investments; that I had also made investments of my own private fortune that had turned out badly, and that out of the whole he would be able to secure but a mere pittance for the support of herself and child.

Ruth was overwhelmed; she thought I was rich (as indeed I was) and that she need never question as to her support, and now to be told that she must leave the home where her short married life had been spent, and with her boy take rooms in some place where she could live upon the modest allowance which Mr. Curtis told her was all that could be saved for her.

No wonder she was dazed and shocked, but she was brave, and nobly insisted that every obligation should be met, every debt paid. She would not accept one dollar of charity; she would take what was left to her and do with it the best she could; but what a tempest was in my soul; knowing the falsehood of it, knowing that my credit stood as high as any in the city, knowing that the business was established on the firmest of foundations; knowing that my own private fortune was ample for the luxurious support of my family; what treachery! what false-heartedness! Oh! for material hands once that I could take my perjured partner by the throat, and force him to retract his infamous villainy and turn over to my family that which was rightfully theirs. But I was as powerless in hate as in love. I was obliged to see the tears of my dear one and note all her sorrow and misery as she prepared to leave the dear home made sacred to her by all the little tokens of affection bestowed upon her by her best beloved; I was obliged to witness the satisfaction of the villain who had wronged her, as he exulted over the unquestioned faith in which she had accepted his statements to her; obliged to hear the exclamations of surprise and wonderment from my business acquaintances when informed that Philip Weston's property was so inextricably involved there was nothing of consequence left for his family; for I was not patient or idle these days. As thoughts of this friend or that old acquaintance flitted through my mind I would go to them, in the vain hope that I might impress upon them the thought that all was not right, and urge them to go to the assistance of my dear ones.

One day, returned to soul land from some fruitless expedition, discouraged and weary, I drew near my father's home, when my hand was taken by an old friend, George Benton; we had been boys and college mates together, but he had been taken from earth life some years before. I had never thought of him since coming to spirit land; in fact, my mind and heart had been so completely filled with care and anxiety concerning my earthly ones that I had met hardly any one whom I had known on earth; the time that I did not spend with Ruth or on some errand concerning her welfare was spent in rest and recuperation with my father and mother. But I was glad to see George and wondered greatly when he said: "You are in deep trouble; I want to help you, and I think I can; after you are rested I will come to you and you shall tell me your trouble and we will see if we cannot find a way out of it." All need of rest left me, driven away by a new hope of seeing some light in the darkness, and I told him the whole story.

"Come with me," he said, and we soon found ourselves in the presence of a benevolent-looking old gentleman whom I readily recognized as Mr. Benton, the father of my companion. George stepped beside his father, placed a hand on his brow, and gently smoothing his hair, whispered, "Dear father, do you hear me?"

"Yes, my son, I feel your presence," Mr. Benton answered in low tones. "I am glad to have you come to me; my life would be very lonely without your spirit visits."

Slowly, gently, George began to talk of his boyhood days and of myself. He reminded his father of visits I had made to him, and incidents in our lives interwoven together. At last the thought was given to him that I had passed from earth life. I do not think he realized that George was talking to him, but his mind was gradually led into a train of thought of which I was the central figure, and the result of these thoughts were the words spoken aloud, "I hadn't thought much about Philip Weston for years. I suppose reading of his death in the papers brought him to my mind; it seems he left a wife and child. I have a good mind to go and see them for George's sake," which resolve was carried into effect the next day.

With my boy on his knee, he expressed his sympathy, told of his son, how he was taken away in the very prime and freshness of his young life; he related many incidents concerning my boyhood and of my frequent visits at his home with George, and bringing the conversation to the present he assured her that her Philip was still living in some nearby state of existence. "You may be sure that he will not go away and forget you. Love is eternal and the soul can never die. My son is near me. I often sense his presence, and if you accustom yourself to thinking of him as near you, as still loving, and desiring to help you, you will open the way for him to come and assist and comfort you, and in time you will feel his love and protection about you."

"Oh!" said Ruth, "I need him now. I must leave this dear home that he made for me and where I have been so happy, and go among strangers," and she poured out her troubles and anxiety to the sympathetic old man. After fully questioning her and informing himself of all the details of the business that she could give him, he left her, assuring her he would look into affairs a little for her and urged her to keep up courage; "perhaps it is not so bad as it seems; trust Philip and I, and perhaps we can help you."

"There's rascality there," said Mr. Benton, as he went down the steps, "and I shall make it my business to look into it," and he did. A quiet but thorough investigation followed, with the result that one day George and I found ourselves drawn to the old familiar office where I had passed so many months. Assembled there was Mr. Curtis, Mr. Benton and Lawyer Fiske, and plainly, without many words, Mr. Curtis was informed that an investigation had been made of the affairs of the late Philip Weston, and the wrong and villainy that had been perpetrated upon his defenseless family was about to be uncovered.

"We know that he left property enough for her support in the manner in which she has been accustomed; we know that the business was in the very best financial condition; we find no trace of unfortunate investments, and we have no doubt if we demand and obtain, as we are prepared to do, an expert examination of the books of the firm, we shall find further proof of that which we already know, that you have been guilty of diverting what was rightfully and lawfully the property of Philip Weston's heirs, to your own use. We are here to give you your choice; restore to his wife every dollar that is hers, pay to some one appointed as administrator in your place, the portion of this business that belonged to him, or face exposure before the whole business world of this city."

Mr. Curtis, completely cowed, humbly promised to make amends for all injury he had done them; he would do anything that they proposed to right the wrong. The only excuse he made was, that he should not have let them suffer; he intended to arrange some way for them to have kept their home until the proper time had elapsed, and then he intended to try and induce Ruth to marry him, and so restore it to her.

The scoundrel! Oh! that I could meet you on equal terms! So, by the help of my dear old friend George, and the kind, trusting father who did not put his son away in a cold far-off heaven, but kept him by his love and trust near him, I saw my wife and child restored to their rights. I saw a strong affection grow and develop between Ruth and Mr. Benton, until in his love and friendship Ruth felt that she had found a father, and Mr. Benton almost felt that the daughter, who had passed to spirit life in infancy, had come back to him to make his old age pleasant and serene.

And so I can leave them, knowing that my boy has a protector who will care for his material interests as long as he is spared to him, and knowing that my beloved Ruth is loving me still, and growing nearer and nearer to me as the years pass on, and that the time is rapidly coming when I shall welcome her to the home I am preparing in Soul Land.

ECHOES OF THE SYMPOSIUM

LYMAN C. HOWE. MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY.

The Great Psychological Crime

A Comparison of Views and the Reasons Therefor.

Lyman C. Howe, the veteran Spiritualist Lecturer and Medium, a man well and favorably known as one of the foremost thinkers and writers in our ranks, will Champion the Cause of Truth as reflected in Spiritualism, while Mrs Florence Huntley, the well-known Author and Journalist, will defend all the statements in The Great Psychological Crime, which Mr. Howe will dare to assail, making a series of articles instructive, suggestive and inspiring, and which every Spiritualist should most carefully read.

MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY REPLIES TO LYMAN C. HOWE.

Lyman C. Howe, Fredonia, N. Y.:—

My Dear Sir:—Your third letter of the series was awaiting me on my return from Fremont, Ohio, where the remnant of our family, consisting now of one brother, one sister and myself, met to lay away the earthly body of our oldest brother.

As an incident of this experience and the large accumulation of work during my absence, I find it difficult to comply with the urgent request of Mr. Francis, to "write an answer soon." I will do the best I can, however, under the circumstances, and endeavor to save time by condensing my reply as much as possible.

If I have seemed to you unduly anxious to bring our correspondence to the specific subject of the book under discussion, it is because I have understood from the start that this was the one and only subject before us. And because of my inability to make the connection between your letters and the subject matter of the book clear in my own mind, I have hesitated lest I should anticipate you or misunderstand your intentions.

I want to be sure that I understand you, and then I want to agree with you as far as possible. But if I fail to catch your intent at any point I hope you will not hesitate to set me straight so that we may waste as little time and valuable space as possible.

Your last letter, if I understand you, seems to raise one or two vital questions to which I will address myself directly.

1. From your own "translations of nature" you "infer that the assumption of a Destructive Principle in Individual Life is a dream of the mystic." In other words, you hold that there is no such thing in nature as a Destructive Principle in Individual Life. That is to say, all is Constructive, according to your view of nature and individual life.

After expressing this conviction you say, "If it should turn out that there is no such destructive principle.. ..then the whole system of philosophy upon which the author predicates his "Great Psychological Crime" needs reconstructing; and hypnotism and mediumship may be entitled to a new trial."

I believe you are entirely right in this, and to my mind your proposition seems a perfectly fair one. It also seems to me to be quite relevant to the subject under discussion.

"IF IT SHOULD TURN OUT" that there is no such thing as a Destructive Principle WITHIN THE AUTHOR'S USE OF THE TERM, then as a natural consequence there could be no such "crime" as he has alleged, nor any other for that matter.

Up to the present time, however, I do not understand that it has so "turned out." The question before us, therefore, is what are we to do in the mean time?

Those of our readers who have also read the book, I believe, will be able to note the fact that in the matter of "Independence" you have been talking of one thing and the author of quite another. If I have understood you correctly, the same is true in regard to the "Destructive Principle in Individual Life." Here again, you are considering the matter from the standpoint of ULTIMATE conditions, while the author is not.

Chapters I, and II in Part III, of the book cover this subject very fully and explicitly. I regret that I cannot quote them here, for they make clear the fact (which is apparent all through the book), that the author is NOT considering ULTIMATES. He makes it clear in at least a dozen places throughout the book that he does not assume to know anything of the ultimate destiny of the soul. That, as he says more than once, is "the unsolved problem." Even what he terms "The Second Death," or "Spiritual Death," is not held by him to mean necessarily a total extinction of the individual as an intelligent entity.

But there is something in nature which causes an acorn to sprout and the tree to develop and grow to its seeming maturity. This the author calls "The Constructive Principle of Nature in Individual Life.' What do you call it?

There is also something in nature which causes the same tree, in due course of time, to decay, die, disintegrate and disappear as an individual entity. The author names this "The Destructive Principle of Nature in Individual Life." What do you call it?

The same is true of animals and men. The causes which result in their individual development and growth the author names "The Constructive Principle of Nature in Individual Life." But animals and men also, in course of time, go down to death and their physical bodies disintegrate. The principle which is back of this process the author names "The Destructive Principle of Nature in Individual Life." You will note the phrase "In Individual Life." It has a special significance in its connection.

I do not understand that you intend to deny the fact that trees decay, die, disintegrate and actually disappear from our sight as individual organic entities. But if I have understood you correctly, you call this a "Constructive" process.

You watch the acorn sprout and the tree grow and you agree with the author that this is a "Constructive" process in nature. You watch the same tree and you see it decay, die, disintegrate and finally disappear as an individual physical entity. You call this also a "Constructive" process. The author calls it "Destructive," so far as the individual tree is concerned. Which is correct?

You watch the infant man develop, grow and mature into a splendid physical organic entity, and you agree with the author that the process involved is "Constructive." You see the same strong, mature man stricken with disease. He begins to waste away. Here is something else. It is a process of some kind working havoc in his organism. You call it CONSTRUCTIVE. The author who stands by and watches the same process, calls it DESTRUCTIVE. Which is correct?

You continue to watch this undoing and disintegrating process until it ends in what we term physical death. And still you name it "Constructive" and the author calls it "Destructive." And still the question—Which is correct?

Once more, observe the man who becomes addicted to the habit of drink. I have no doubt that you have many times in your life noted the results. You observe that his flesh becomes swollen and inflamed with a consuming alcoholic fire, his mind begins to fail, his moral sense is paralyzed, and at last he becomes a wreck, physically, mentally and morally. The author stands by you and sees the same thing and, looking at it as it appears to him and the great practical simple-minded world, he says, "This is what I call an expression of THE DESTRUCTIVE PRINCIPLE OF NATURE IN INDIVIDUAL LIFE."

But you, with your mind fixed upon the unknown and seemingly unknowable ULTIMATE of things, insist that in the final summing up of all things it may, perhaps, "turn out" that this was only an illusion in the great scheme of "evolution," a mere trick of the senses, and that possibly it may not be what it seems.

In all this it appears that you have both been watching the same process. You have both had the same data before you. You have both been thinking upon the same general subject. And still the author says "Destructive" while you say "Constructive." Why is this? Is it not merely because your minds have been occupied with different phases or aspects of the same subject? It seems to me so.

From all that is contained in your letter it appears to me that you are considering only that phase of the subject which has to do with ultimate possibilities which are unknown alike to both you and the author. As to this phase of the subject there can be no possible disagreement between you and him, and consequently no basis for argument or dispute.

The author frankly admits that he does not know anything about ultimates nor ULTIMATE POSSIBILITIES. He seems to me to make it as clear as it is possible for language to express it, that he is considering only those phases of the subject which lie THIS SIDE of ultimates, or ultimate possibilities.

I recall that Mr. Ervin Rice, Mr. Griffen, Mr. Dawbarn, and one or two others who contributed to the symposium raise this same point, but it is clear to my mind that they have missed the author's intention, just as I am sure you have done. The author does not claim to know anything about the ultimate destiny of the soul of man. From what he has said many times, I am convinced that he has never found anyone who does really know what may or may not be within the bounds of "Ultimate Possibilities."

He does claim, however, to KNOW that the intelligent soul of man lives on after the change we call physical death. He also claims to know that even in that realm of finer things the same principle (or its analogy) which he has termed "Destructive" and which you prefer to call "Constructive," appears to operate.

HE STATES AS A FACT, THAT THOSE WHO DISREGARD OR DEFY THE LAW OF INDIVIDUAL LIFE IN THAT REALM, AS IN THIS, GO DOWN UNDER SEEMINGLY THAT SAME PRINCIPLE OF NATURE TO WHAT APPEARS TO BE ANOTHER "DEATH." He calls this retrograde movement, or the principle back of it, "DESTRUCTIVE IN INDIVIDUAL LIFE." If I have understood the import of your words you say it is "CONSTRUCTIVE."

To my way of thinking, the author's terminology is the better one. It seems to me to be much more consistent with the facts of nature and the language with which we are familiar.

Webster defines the word "Destruction" to mean "Demolition; the breaking up of a whole into parts; a pulling down; ruin; devastation, disintegration," etc.

His definition of the word "Principle" is "A source, or origin; that from which anything proceeds," etc.

These two words taken together form the term "Destructive Principle," and they seem to define very accurately and specifically that which the author is talking about in the book.

But I find no definition of the word "Construction" which would seem to warrant its use to express a principle or process which tears down, devastates, ruins, or disintegrates.' In truth, all its definitions seem to mean the exact reverse of these.

2. I think you have very aptly and concisely stated the author's position, that, "Individual sovereignty and independent, free moral agency, is the normal condition of the human soul." Do you take issue with him on this point?

You have correctly quoted his definition of hypnotism. Following this you say that in accordance with its limitations it seems to you "that all cases and conditions in which the active will of one or more persons reaches, impresses, and controls the will and voluntary powers of another, are hypnotic."

The author certainly holds that whenever and wherever the active will of one person "CONTROLS" the "will, voluntary powers and sensory organism" of another person the process is hypnotic; and that to the degree only that such CONTROL is exercised is the process hypnotic or subjective.

But you say it seems legitimate to inquire "Where is the limit?" In reply, it seems to me that the author's definition fully and specifically answers your inquiry.

But you further ask, "If the effects do not at once appeal either to the observer or the subject, who can decide when or where the hypnotic process begins?" It would appear to me quite as pertinent to ask the same question with reference to a dose of poison. Its effects may not be apparent to anyone in the beginning.

But I can scarcely believe you would hold because of this fact alone that IT WAS NOT POISON. Neither do I see any good basis for concluding that the poisonous process did not actually have a beginning point, even though no one were able to determine the exact fraction of a second at which that beginning occurred. Neither does it appear to me that with your intelligence you would, on this account, hold that the process was "Constructive," or especially healthful.

In fact, I can see no logical relation between the premise and any of the foregoing conclusions. And yet, your conclusions as to the hypnotic process appear to me to be indentical in point of logic.

Let us take another instance by which to illustrate the full meaning of your logic on this point. A criminal is condemned to die by electricity. The electrical machinery is adjusted and the current turned on by machinery in such a manner that no one, not even the victim, is able to observe the exact instant when this occurs. Nevertheless, in course of time it makes its impression, produces its outward manifestations, and the criminal dies.

Now, if your logic be sound, it would appear to me we should have to conclude in this case that it was not electricity that killed him, and in fact that there was no electricity used at all. Why? Because we cannot determine by internal conditions nor outward manifestations the exact instant, or point of time, when it began to affect its victim.

This, if I understand, is the point you make against the author's position on the subject of hypnotism. I have to confess that it does not seem to me to be well taken. For if so, then according to the same logic we should have to deny our own existence, as well as the existence of everything else in the universe.

In the case of the criminal above referred to, neither you nor I would expect the attending physician to certify that death was the result of paresis or smallpox. But if he should do so it would seem to me to be an easy thing for you to prove his error, by calling his attention to the fact that both paresis and smallpox are diseases so insidious in their inception that no man can tell the exact instant when they begin. But, if for this reason we must reject these two diseases, then for the same reason we must reject all other diseases and causes.

True, we might go back to those "causes which may be traced to antecedents, circumstances, temperament, structure," etc., to which you have referred in your former letter, and insist that it was these that killed him. Possibly, in accordance with a certain metaphysical cosmogony, this may be true. But it is safe to say this would not satisfy the attending physician nor the coroner's jury, nor any other person who is fully acquainted with the facts.

And here again we come back to the author's position. He would answer all your questions which bear upon this subject, by saying that it is not a question of DEGREE at all which he has raised, BUT ONE OF PROCESS.

He holds that hypnotism involves a certain definite and specific PROCESS. It is a process which in just so far as it operates deprives the individual of the use of his own faculties, capacities and powers.

In the merchandising transaction to which you refer, the appeal is at all times to the REASON of the purchaser. You yourself have stated that you are ready to welcome any truth which appeals to you along these lines. But hypnotism does not do so. It goes directly at those powers which sustain reason.

Again let me repeat that, as in the case of poison, it is a PROCESS that does the damage and not the degree of influence upon the mind, nor the point of beginning that is the vital thing of interest.

You hold that it is the DESIRE that is controlled in the mediumistic process, and not the WILL. You cite your own experience to prove your point. On its face it sounds well, but it seems to me to be only a play on words, after all. You consented to lie down upon your back. But you did not rise until your CONTROLS were WILLING for you to do so. You say, "I knew I could rise as easily as at any other time, if I could try; BUT I COULD NOT TRY."

In that last phrase you have stated the whole secret. YOU COULD NOT TRY. In other words, your WILL to try was paralyzed. You say it was your DESIRE that was paralyzed. But if, as you say, will is dependent on desire, and your controls paralyze your desire, do they not thereby paralyze that upon which your WILL depends? They finally reach your WILL which is the power upon which you depended to set the physical machinery in motion. It does not seem to me to be material whether they have to paralyze your desire first before they can paralyze your will, so long as they finally get your will into their power, and do it by a subjective, hypnotic process.

There may be a fine metaphysical point in your contention as to precedence, but if so, it seems to me to be one which is more likely to confuse our audience than to enlighten them.

You say that you did not understand that you were expected to refute anything in the book unless you found something to refute. Nor did I, but in your first letter you stated that you had found what appeared to you to be a number of errors, or words to that effect, and I inferred from this that you had really found something to refute.

But if, after a more careful reading, you are unable to find anything in the book which you feel ought to be refuted, then as I understand, our task is finished, and it is proper for us to shake hands across the bloodless chasm, and retire to the privacy of our respective daily avocations.

There are many suggestions and a number of direct questions in your letter which I should like to respond to. But space will not permit.

Before I close, however, let me say that I am glad to feel that I have misunderstood your own reference to the "incog" author.

In what I said concerning the attitude of Mrs. Richmond, I did not intend to convey the idea that "all Spiritualists" accept whatever comes through her or other mediums, as true. In truth, I know that the more independent thinkers do not do so.

But the point I make is that if what she or her control says concerning the author, be true, then there is not the slightest basis for Spiritualism to rest upon. For even if her control should say his name is Lincoln, or John Brown, or Ingersoll, is there any way by which the public may be able to verify the statement? In other words, the "authorship" is still "unknown." It is still "concealed," and in fact "hiding behind a woman."

In conclusion, it just occurs to me that if in reality you are unable to see any fundamental difference between sickness and health, between life and death, between truth and falsehood, between construction and destruction, in the sense the author has used these words, then there is truly nothing for us to discuss.

But I believe that there is a commonly accepted sense in which all these words have their own specific meanings, and convey different ideas to the mind. In his book the author makes it clear that he has endeavored to simplify his language to the point where it can be understood by all who read it.

The whole tenor and effect of your letter seems to me to be to fix in the minds of our readers the impression that there is no such thing as personal responsibility. If you succeed in doing this you will have wiped from their lives the very basis of all morality.

As I have said before, it seems to me the author's position is simple and plain. His whole work proceeds from the basis of "Individual Responsibility." At no point does he attempt to evade or obscure it. He holds it up in such unqualified terms that it would seem to be impossible to misunderstand him.

If we are to discuss "The Great Psychological Crime," should we not try to get at its real purpose? The book was written with a definite purpose in view, namely, TO SHOW THAT ANY PROCESS WHICH DEPRIVES A MAN OF THE POWER TO EXERCISE HIS OWN NATURAL AND INALIENABLE FACULTIES, CAPACITIES AND ATTRIBUTES, STRIKES AT THE VERY BASIS OF HIS MORAL NATURE, HIS PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY.

The book shows that both hypnotism and subjective mediumship do this thing. The author therefore claims that the subjective, psychic process upon which they depend, is destructive to individual well-being and to the moral status.

Do you take issue with him? If so, on what point?

With cordial good wishes, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

FLORENCE HUNTLEY.

LYMAN C. HOWE.

His Work Is Delayed by Severe Sickness.

I was called to Ellicottville to commemorate the emancipation of a dear soul—Mrs. Polly Vaughan—whose earthly pilgrimage began September 6, 1811. She had, therefore, been a pilgrim in the valley of time 92 years as we measure, and given eleven children to this world, all of them superior specimens of the higher humanity, of whom Mrs. John French, with whom she lived and died, is one.

Spiritualism lighted her way for forty years or more, and was a solace to the last, as it was to Mr. and Mrs. French in whose home the services were held. It was a sweet, sacred time when we took leave of the silent shadow which reflected so much of a noble and useful life. She was sister of the lates Beales E. Litchfield, known and loved as an author, public speaker for Spiritualism, and rare manly qualities. Though a trance medium for many years, he lived nearly 80 years, a splendid type of intellectual manhood, and the highest morality. Mediumship did not demoralize him nor impair his clear physical health. I have known him over forty years. Mrs. Vaughan was the last of the family of eleven children; her husband, Miller Vaughan, to whom she was married in 1832, passed on before her in 1870. From him she has often had messages which cheered and blessed her.

Returning from Ellicottville, I halted in Buffalo, dined at the hospitable home of Mrs. Dr. Matteson, found her, as usual, too busy with the sick to have time to eat, but never too busy to welcome her friends I was pleasantly surprised to meet Dr. B. F. Austin and his two splendid daughters there, and share a few moments of thought exchange. The Doctor looks hale and handsome, and aglow with the light of Spiritualism.

I called on Mrs. Atcheson, the medium and teacher, and found her, as usual, busy with sitters for spiritual comfort and instruction, but who always has a smile of welcome to her many friends. A call at my nephew's—my brother's son—finished my visits in Buffalo; but I stayed long enough in the windy city to nearly freeze my soul out of its cage, and as result a cold that blockaded my body and brain, and delayed my answer to Mrs Huntley several days longer. When the molecules of the brain and blood are all in a quarrel, and crowding each other out of their normal rhythm, it is about as difficult to think consecutively or reason consistently, or write intelligently, as if a hypnotist had his tongs on one's tongue and brain, and was squeezing the normal individuality into sausage meat for a devolutionary fry. Mrs. Howe being imitative, soon caught my example, and outdid her pattern in sneezing, snuffling, coughing and aching; and she got to a critical point about the time I began to behave like a saint. She is still at it, but I hope has passed the danger line, though she is still very feeble.

If I wanted to scare people out of their sins by preaching hell, I would assure them it is a very cold place, where blizzards are normal and "storm after storm rises dark o'er the way."

A few days after my return from Ellicottville we had a pleasant visit from Dr. Abram James, who honors Fredonia with his presence as a citizen. He is about 76, and remarkably well preserved, and his mind clear and forceful, notwithstanding he has been a medium over forty years, and much of that time in daily practice of his spiritual gifts. As proof of his intellectual clearness, he spoke in high terms of The Progressive Thinker.

Christmas Is of Pagan Origin.

This day, so universally recognized throughout the world, is now regarded by many learned men as being of Pagan origin. Whether so or not, the two following poems will be read with interest, and in connection therewith we wish all our readers a "Merry Christmas," with no attending pains.

THE NIGHT BEFORE CHRISTMAS.

'Twas the night before Christmas, when all through the house
Not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse;
The stockings were hung by the chimney with care,
In hopes that St. Nicholas soon would be there;
The children were nestled all snug in their beds,
While visions of sugar plums danced in their heads;
And mamma in her kerchief, and I in my cap,
Had just settled our brains for a long winter's nap—
When out on the lawn there arose such a clatter,
I sprang from my bed to see what was the matter.
Away to the window I flew like a flash,
Tore open the shutters and threw up the sash.
The moon on the breast of the new-fallen snow
Gave a lustre of mid-day to objects below;
When, what to my wandering eyes should appear,
But a miniature sleigh and eight tiny reindeer,
With a little old driver, so lively and quick,
I knew in a moment it must be St. Nick.
More rapid than eagles his coursers they came,
And he whistled and shouted and called them by name:
"Now, Dasher! now, Dancer! now, Prancer and Vixen!
On, Comet! on, Cupid! on, Donder and Blitzen!
To the top of the porch, to the top of the wall!"
Now, dash away, dash away, dash away all!"
As dry leaves that before the wild hurricane fly,
When they meet with an obstacle, mount to the sky,
So up to the house-top the coursers they flew,
With the sleigh full of toys—and St. Nicholas, too.
And then in a twinkling I heard on the roof
The prancing and pawing of each little hoof,
As I drew in my head and was turning around,
Down the chimney St. Nicholas came with a bound.
He was dressed all in fur from his head to his foot,
And his clothes were all tarnished with ashes and soot;
A bundle of toys he had flung on his back,
And he looked like a peddler just opening his pack.
His eyes how they twinkled! his dimples how merry!
His cheeks were like roses, his nose like a cherry;
His droll little mouth was drawn up like a bow,
And the beard on his chin was as white as the snow.
The stump of a pipe he held tight in his teeth,
And the smoke it encircled his head like a wreath.
He had a broad face and a little round belly
That shook, when he laughed, like a bowl full of jelly.
He was chubby and plump—a right jolly old elf;
And I laughed, when I saw him, in spite of myself.
A wink of his eyes and a twist of his head
Soon gave me to know I had nothing to dread.
He spoke not a word, but went straight to his work,
And filled all the stockings; then turned with a jerk,
And laying his finger aside of his nose,
And giv a nod, up the chimney he rose.
He sprang to his sleigh, to his team gave a whistle,
And away they all flew like the down of a thistle;
But I heard him exclaim, ere he drove out of sight,
"Happy Christmas to all, and to all a good-night!"

THE NIGHT AFTER CHRISTMAS.

'Twas the night after Christmas, when all through the house
Every soul was abed, and as still as a mouse;
Those stockings so lately St. Nicholas' care
Were emptied of all that was eatable there.
The darlings had duly been tucked in their beds,
With very full stomachs and pains in their heads.
I was dozing away in my new cotton cap,
And Nancy was rather far gone in a nap,
When out in the nursery rose such a clatter,
I sprang from my sleep, crying, "What is the matter?"
I flew to each bedside, still half in a doze,
Tore open the curtains and threw off the clothes;
While the light of the taper served clearly to show
The piteous plight of those objects below.
For, what to the fond father's eyes should appear
But the pale little face of each sick little dear;
Each pet, having crammed itself full as a tick,
I knew in a moment, now felt like old Nick!
Their pulses were rapid, their breathings the same;
What their stomachs rejected I'll mention by name:
Now turkey, now stuffing, plum pudding, of course,
And custards, and crullers and cranberry sauce—
Before outraged Nature all went to the wall—
Yes, lollypops, flapdoodle, great things and small;
Like pellets, which urchins from popguns let fly,
Went figs, nuts and raisins, jam, jelly and pie,
Till each error of diet was brought to my view,
To the shame of mamma and of Santa Claus, too.
I turned from the sight, to my bedroom stepped back,
And brought out a vial marked Pulv. Ipecac.,
When my Nancy exclaimed—for their sufferings shocked her—
"Don't you think you had better, love, run for the doctor?"
I ran—and was scarcely back under my roof,
When I heard the shap clatter of old Jalap's hoof;
I might say that I hardly had turned my self round,
When the doctor came into the room with a bound.
He was spattered with mud from his hat to his boots,
And the clothes he had on seemed the drollest of suits;
In his haste he'd put all quite awry on his back,
And he looked like John Falstaff half fuddled with sack.
His eyes, how they twinkled! Had the doctor got merry?
His cheeks looked like Port and his breath smelt of Sherry;
He hadn't been shaved for a fortnight or so,
And the beard on his chin wasn't white as the snow.
But, inspecting their tongues, in despite of their teeth,
And drawing his watch from his waistcoat beneath,
He felt of each pulse, saying, "Each little belly
Must get rid"—here he laughed—"of the rest of that jelly."
I gazed on each plump, chubby, sick little elf,
And groaned when he said so, in spite of himself,
But a wink of his eyes, as he physicked dear Fred,
Soon gave me to know I had nothing to dread.
He didn't prescribe—but went straightway to work
And dosed all the rest—gave his trousers a jerk,
And adding directions while blowing his nose,
He buttoned his coat, from the chair he arose,
Then jumped in his gig, gave old Jalap a whistle,
And Jalap dashed off as if pricked by a thistle.
But the doctor exclaimed, ere he drove out of sight,
"They'll be well by to-morrow—good-night, Jones, good-night!"

AN OLD SOLDIER.

He fought for his home and country in the cause he thought was right,
Young and brave at the call he sprung to bear his share in the fight.
In many a bloody battle he stood where the torn flag tossed,
For a strong belief and a principle he fought, in the cause that lost.
Crippled and old and weary he came to my door to-day.
The fire of his eyes was dimmed by age, he was bent and broken and gray.
Only a worn-out soldier too feeble for working now
So—his grateful country turned him out with a pleasant smile and bow.

We have only use for the soldier with a name and fame to carve
These worn-out hulks—what matters whether they eat or starve?
They served, and their use is over. Better be dead and gone.
Why couldn't they have the grace to die? They weary us, living on.
For this is the Christmas season—we've worlds of work in view,
Presents to buy for a host of friends (we must do as our neighbors do,
And the calls are many and heavy on mind and patience and purse,
However it pinch we must make gifts better than theirs, not worse.)

So we have no use for the soldier, and he can't come in to the fire;
He's wet, unshaven and most unclean, his shoes are covered with mire,
And he tells us the same old story of why he was formed to roam,
Trying to earn an honest meal on his way to the soldiers' "home."
Something is wanting somewhere. There's surely something amiss
But he "trusts in God!" Oh, wondrous faith, in a derelict like this!
Only a worn-out soldier with seventy years on his head.
Mark you not asking for charity—only for work and for bread.

While his Christian brothers and sisters in fur and satin and gem,
Listen devoutly while they preach of a Babe of Bethlehem.
And open their heavy purses to give at the heathen's call
Bibles—and Christian rum and vice! And I hold them as liars all.
For he who "yearns to the heathen" while his brothers around him die,
Or turns from the bitter need at hand, stands up as a living lie.
Good-bye to the worn-out soldier with his honors white on his head.
God keep us all, good Christian folk while our brothers starve for bread!

A Novel Idea of Religion.

A learned author of fifty years ago, who published many books on physiology, hygiene, anthropology, etc., had views quite out of the ordinary on religion. We venture to quote for the delectation of the critical. He said:

"Religion, or the combined passions of faith, hope, reverence, and conscientiousness, is often in a state of disease. We have no mad-house without its maniacs from religion. Of complex sentiment the modes of disease are varied. Great efforts are made in revivals, camp-meetings, and on many other occasions, to excite this feeling; and we often see its morbid manifestations. These are, at times, reflected upon the body, producing strange convulsions, swoonings, paroxysms and ecstasies. In its mild form it is enthusiasm; in its severe, fanaticism; in its repulsive, it is bigotry. This disease is often acute, and commonly epidemic. It is also clearly contagious. It spreads like small-pox or measles, through a community; disappears for a long time, and then comes back again. It is probably kept alive by chronic cases. As in other epidemic and contagious diseases, some are easier to take than others, some are not susceptible, and most have it but once in their lives; there are some, however, who suffer from repeated attacks.

"This is as genuine a disease as I shall have occasion to describe, and its effects are of a deplorable character, moral and physical. It may be treated by awakening other passions; by occupying the faculties of industry and ambition; and especially by the cultivation of science and the remaining powers. Women are more liable to it than men, and youth more than persons of mature age; the ignorant, also, much more than the educated; and those who have few thoughts, occupations, and enjoyments, more than those who have many."

Smoot!

Dr. Bristol, Methodist preacher, and known to fame as "McKinley's minister," is mad to the core at the possibility of Senator Smoot's taking the place to which he was elected by a great state. All the ministers are opposed to Smoot, and the women, under the instigation of their ministers, are sending up petitions miles in length, and hounding their congressmen with letters they never read.

What is it all for? What does it mean? Why do the ministers take such interest in the seating of a senator? Is it not because they believe that the church should be first and the law unto this land?

Polygamy as an issue is dead, and Utah is a state because her laws do not permit that institution. It has not been proven that Senator Shoot is a polygamist. Yet "McKinley's minister" exhorts his hearers, "Shall this delusion, pronounced by our laws as a crime, be permitted to override American womanhood?"

These ministers ought to know that they have no right to oppose the will of a state as expressed by the voice of its people, and the constitution is entirely against them. The only serious thing against Smoot is his name, a bad name and smile-creating, but he is not responsible for that, and unless proved a criminal, notwithstanding the flood of sermons and tons of petitions sent in by the women who are set on by the preachers, he will take his seat in the senate. Were the characters of the members of that body laid bare like an open book, probably that of Smoot in virtue, common honesty, freedom from bribe-taking and "graft," would compare favorably with the best.

The Rev. Dr. Thomas B. McLeod, in a sermon before his church, the Clinton avenue Congregational, of Brooklyn, N. Y., gave full voice to the desires and beliefs of most Protestant ministers in regard to the public schools. The position of the Catholics has been indicated from time to time, but the Protestant preachers have been too tactful to openly express their views. The Rev. Dr. McLeod for some cause has become intensely wrought up over the question of religious instruction in the public schools, and in his anger, unguardedly exposes the claws of his theocratic bigotry, with which he would rend and destroy the rights of conscience which is the boast of every true American citizen.

The following is the conclusion he reaches after long circumlocution, as to the rights of the individual to believe as his conscience dictates:

"To allow an individual citizen to count himself absolved from conformity to the expressed will of the majority because that will may conflict with his conscientious convictions, is to invite anarchy. When the state guarantees to the individual his legal rights, his constitutional rights, it does not extend that benefit to his whims and caprices; it does not pledge itself to respect the imagined rights of the Jew, the Mormon, the agnostic, the anarchist, the atheist, nor agree to make our system of public instruction godless at the instance of superstition and paganism."

Further he says: "And this being so, Christianity being thus essential to the highest national virtue, then the man who would aid in the exclusion from the school rooms of our land that means of instruction which gives light to the mind, rectitude to the conscience and power to the will needs to be labored with if he is ignorant, or if not ignorant, ought to be resisted as the enemy of free government and of the human race."

Could the Inquisition put forth a doctrine more infamous? If a man resists having his children instructed in a religion which turns such narrow bigots as this reverend teacher into the world, he is to be treated as an "enemy to free government," which means as a criminal, to be punished by imprisonment. Happily the days of torture are passed, or this reverend gentleman would have the dungeon, whipping post, pillory, and fagots for such "enemies."

Then he has the following:

"Now from these two propositions proceeds by logical necessity the corollary that it is the duty of the state not simply to tolerate, or sanction, but to make religious instruction one of the prime factors in its system of popular education. If a sound morality is an essential condition of national safety and prosperity, and if the sublime teaching and temper of Christianity is essential to the development of the finest virtues in social and public life, then the policy which dissociates religion from education, which puts secular knowledge above morality and religion, which rules in geology and rules out Genesis, which rules in science and rules out the Bible, which rules in evolution and rules out God, which rules in Herbert Spencer and rules out Jesus Christ, is a suicidal policy, which, if persisted in, must eventually provoke the common destiny of all things godless."

When we hear that such a sermon was recently preached before a representative congregation in a metropolitan church, was listened to without comment, reported without editorial reply, we almost doubt the boasted intelligence of the age and wonder how it is that such fossilized specimens of an age of darkness have been preserved all these centuries, to come now into the light of day and herald the dead dogmas of a dead past.

The National Association of Spiritualists has placed its plans for a national temple, to be erected in Washington, in the hands of Architect W. J. Palmer. SPIRIT POWER MANIFESTED.

SPOOK IN A GRAND PIANO.

Mishawaka, Ind.—The mysterious manipulations of the keys of the piano have caused consternation and alarm in the home of T. J. Cook of this city. About ten days ago, at 6:35 o'clock in the morning, the members of the Cook family were startled to hear the scales being run in the instrument while they were all in the adjoining room. Investigation revealed that no one was at the piano, and the music ceased. Every morning since, at exactly the same hour, the weird sounds are heard, although there have been several people in the room who hoped by their presence to silence the invisible player. The instrument has been carefully examined, but every piece of the mechanism is in perfect condition.

A MYSTERIOUS MIRROR.

Bowdoinham, Me.—Many people, both of this town and in other places, are greatly interested in a mysterious mirror hanging in the home of Robert Warren. It is in the room where Mr. Warren's wife died. Mr. Warren is 73 years old, and until recently has never observed the strange phenomena which have appeared in this mirror. In the centre of the glass, it is said, a man's head shows distinctly. In the left hand corner, it is declared, a hand is seen, the fingers showing plainly and pointing downward, and near the large head has appeared a smaller one, the face looking outward. The eyes seem to follow one about the room. Sometimes the smaller head looks like that of a young girl, it is said, and at other times like an old man, it is said. Beneath the two heads another picture is dimly outlined, which portrays an old wood road. Mrs. Warren was a Spiritualist in belief, and through her last illness she thought she saw and heard strange things. She was a painter, and those who believe in Spiritualism think she is causing these shadowy apparitions to come on the old glass. At first Mr. Warren was frightened by these strange visitations, but now he sits contentedly watching to see if they can be messages sent him from the spirit land by his wife.

APPARITION SEEN.

South Bend, Ind.—About a year ago a man named Ritter, living in Bremen, Ind., committed suicide in the courthouse here by taking carbolic acid just before he was recalled to the witness stand. Previously he had been so confused that he possibly feared serious consequences.

Yesterday two women sightseers entered the grand jury room, where Ritter breathed his last, but fled hysterically, screaming that they had heard groans and shrill cries from an apparition which they saw lying on a table in the room.

Shortly afterward came information that Mrs. Ritter had died in Bremen at the exact moment that the two women had suffered their scare.

While the courthouse attaches are not given to superstition, as a rule, the alleged occurrence is not without effect.

TWO DIFFERENT PERSONALITIES.

A JEKYLL AND HYDE LIFE.

While She was Changed in Nature by Drugs She Made War Upon Her Own Character—Wrote to Her Pastor Assailing Herself—Mailed Letters to Herself, and Was Enraged Upon Receiving Them.

The Tabernacle Baptist Church at a special meeting at Utica, N. Y., decided to withdraw the hand of church fellowship from Mrs. Martha Owens, a prominent communicant. The action was unanimous and taken without comment.

Last spring the minister of the church received an anonymous letter attacking the character of Mrs. Owens, and demanding an investigation. A few days later Mrs. Owens called upon her pastor for advice. She had received a defaming letter, she said, and was astonished when told that the minister, too, had received such a letter. She implored the pastor to investigate, naming a woman whom she suspected.

The letters continued to arrive, and Mrs. Owens became more and more enraged, engaging the aid of the church deacons.

Recently Mrs. Owens was called to the office of the District-Attorney and questioned very closely about the letters. She was required to write from dictation a duplicate of one of the letters she had received. The letters and her copy looked different, but a New York handwriting expert pronounced them the product of the same hand.

At first Mrs. Owens denied the intimation that she was the author of the letters. Later, with the air of one who had awakened from a dream, she gave the Church Board an explanation, which resulted in the erasure of her name from the church books. She told the minister and the deacons that she had been addicted at times to the use of opium with ipecac and sulphate of potash, and that after taking the mixture had usually lost her self-control and lived another life. On such occasions, she said, she has the hallucination that she is her own enemy—or rather, that she is some one else who has a grudge against the woman she is when her mental condition is not altered by drugs. Her theory is that she wrote the letters while in that unnatural condition and had recovered her senses when they arrived by mail She says that she did not remember having ever seen any of the letters before receiving them.

There seems to be no doubt in the minds of the church heads, the District-Attorney, the handwriting expert nor the woman herself that she was her own accuser—that she is a Dr. Jekyll and a Mr. Hyde.

Certain drugs are known to evolve sensitiveness to that extent that spirit control follows, and such may have been the case in this particular instance. But mediumship induced by drugs is always injurious, in many cases leading to obsession and insanity.

A Prophetic Mourning Dove.

Fiend, the pet mourning dove of Dr. Roch R. Gareau, 238 Jefferson avenue, Detroit, Mich., (says the Journal of that city) which for several years enjoyed the distinction of being the oldest bird of its kind in existence, died Friday just at midnight, of old age. The doctor did everything he could to prolong the life of Fiend, and made her last hours comfortable by placing her in a little bed made out of his sealskin cap, where he strove to tempt her appetite with moist bread crumbs and other delicacies craved by sick birds.

At the present time Fiend's emaciated remains repose in a wreath of bright-colored flowers, placed beneath a glass cover on the center table in the doctor's parlor, while heaped around her are dozens of little eggs she laid, bearing the dates on which they were laid, and hand-painted designs of all descriptions.

According to a certificate owned by Dr. Gareau, Fiend was hatched December 23, 1878, at Montreal. By certain mysterious signs, peculiar to mourning doves, and readily interpreted by the doctor, she has warned him of the death of nine family relatives and twelve cases of serious illness among friends and relatives, so that her master formed an attachment for the bird that was truly touching.

"I made the statement some time ago that Fiend was the oldest mourning bird in existence," said Dr. Gareau during the morning. "An article published in the Journal at that time made quite a stir in the scientific world, and was translated into French and published in the French Courier, New York. I have also had considerable correspondence on the subject, and no student can be found who knows of a mourning dove who ever lived beyond the age of 12 years. I had hoped to keep Fiend alive to celebrate her 25th birthday.

"On the day of her death the bird made 99 respirations a minute, 59 above the normal number and I counted 299 heart beats a minute instead of the usual 120. I think her longevity is mostly due to the excellent care I have taken of her feet, for most birds die of disease of the feet. She has had as good care all these years as a child.

"Some of my acquaintances have bought mourning doves, but they will find that these birds will not be prophets. One must get a pair of them and the prophet bird must be hatched in the house of the family, to be of any service.

"In studying this bird for a quarter of a century night and day, I have ascertained that when a mourning dove warns of death, it cuckoos once and falls to the bottom of the cage as if dead. In case of sickness it cuckoos twice; in case of bad news it cuckoos once and shakes its wings, and joyful news is heralded by one short, metallic cuckoo, followed by three others of the same duration. This may sound like a fairy story, but it is all true, for no one has ever studied the mourning dove more thoroughly than I have, and no one was ever more interested in her, for she was the Master's chosen bird."

Bright Lad of Sixteen.

Lad of Sixteen Who Claims Spiritualistic Powers, Successfully Treating People Suffering From Lingering Diseases.—Writes Prescriptions Like a Professional—Knows Nothing of Medicine, But Compounds Herbs With Skill and a Minuteness of Detail.

Brussels, Dec. 12.—Miraculous cures are said to be performed by a lad of 16 named Edward Pirsch, who lives with his parents and two brothers in the hamlet of Chevelipont. Three years ago the boy became a Spiritualistic medium, and since then he has been treating people suffering from serious lingering diseases from all parts of the country. He has become the leader of a large and enthusiastic group.

Pirsch is an intelligent, healthy-looking boy with dark, dreamy yes. He works with his father, who is a marble mason. During his leisure time he studies languages. He says he receives constant communications from spirits, sometimes from as many as fourteen consecutively. The most important of these is the spirit of deceased Servian doctor named Cypriet, who dictates prescriptions of herbs which the inhabitants say perform astounding cures. Many of the herbs used are not known in Belgium, and have to be procured abroad. The boy knows nothing of medicine, but the prescriptions are drawn up as by a professional hand and are given in minute detail.

Pirsch writes spirit messages in French and very curiously they are often written backwards. The handwriting is of quite different character when different spirits are supposed to be speaking.

The boy shows photographs which he has taken depicting what he says are spirit hands. The members of the family, who are in a good position, have all become Spiritualists. They prepare the herbs that are prescribed by the young medium and supply them gratis to all seeking treatment.

Every Sunday the house is full of patients and seances are held in the evening. Local medical men are up in arms against Pirsch's "cure" and the parish priests declare that he is a medium of the devil.

Little Spirit Child, Junior.

The article of Mr. J. H. McClure, of Douglass, Arizona, in The Progressive Thinker of October 3, perhaps is the strongest force that impels me to write out this experience: During the afternoon of September 28, my little spirit child Junior, said to me as plainly as any person in earth life could say it: "Papa, you will get $100 to-morrow," and on the morning of September 29, he again said: "Papa, you will get $100 this afternoon," and on going to my mail box at 4:15 that afternoon, I got a letter from my sister containing a circular of some land firm in Portland, Oregon, which had the figures "$100" in great big type, and I said to myself, "Well, little boy, you missed it this time." In a few minutes he came to me as joyous and happy as could be, saying, "Well! papa, you did get $100 in type, but I told you of it just to show you that I could read it in the mail, coming from Oregon!"

What next—I cannot tell, but that little messenger is around me very frequently, and how far he will be able to exert his power I know not, but recently his little brother Charlie, who is at Turner, Marion county Oregon, tumbled down fifty feet into a mountain ravine, and escaped with his life, and no bones broken, and only court plaster on his bruises at the end of nearly one month, and Junior, my spirit sister Mary, and my spirit mother, with ten other spirit friends, all took turns in watching over Charley and advising me as to his recovery which was as wonderful as his escape was miraculous!

Perhaps one little incident illustrating how the love nature of my spirit child caused him to misconstrue a message to his spirit grandmother, who had sent me a message by Junior that Charley is all right and will get well, and I said "Junior, go and tell your grandmother that I send her a kiss," and in a few minutes my spirit mother came to me and said: "Seldon, Junior says you want me to come and kiss you," and I said, "Oh! bless the little heart, I said to him that I sent you a kiss (meaning by him,) and the little angel took the most natural view of the situation and said: 'Grandmother, papa wants you to come and kiss him.'"

Little do we know how much trouble our spirit friends take to reach us and how many mistakes they must make in trying to help us.

JAMES SELDON COWDON.

OUT OF THE "SOMEWHERE."

Up from the inner depths of being, the question rose—
Seeded, and planted in each life, this question grows.

Who is this "I" and, what am "I"—and from whence came "I?"
Day after day, and hour after hour, did I seek reply.

Out of the unknown fared I forth, in the form I wear—
Into the unknown shall I pass, when I'm summoned there.

Brief are the years, and fast they fly, ere my task is done;
Clear is the call that I shall hear, when life's race is run.

"Soul of the silence, speak, I pray, to my soul that waits, Give me some symbol, I may know—O, unbar the gates!"

Out of the "Somewhere," then I heard, or seemed to hear,
Tones of a voice, like drops of music, falling clear.

"Forth from life's centered source, that is, and will always be,
Part of Primitive Cause, and of love's infinity,

Thou art—thyself—a branch of being, a soul divine,
Dweller on earth, enwrapped in flesh—there to serve thy time.

Ask then of Self—thy soul will answer thy cry, be sure,
Journey within—the path is peaceful, and sweet and pure.

"Whither" nor "whence," belong to thee—neither time nor space,
Up in the "Always" standest thou—for ever in place.

"Enter thy own being's templed door—walk with feet unshod—
There shalt thou find the answer sought—there, shalt find thy God."

Notice to Ohio Spiritualists.

I wish to express through your most valuable paper that the Ohio Spiritualist Association is ready to do missionary work wherever called, and is desirous to correspond with all societies in Ohio.

I am forming a circuit and the missionaries expect to start out the first of January, and wish to assist all societies that desire their services, at a very little expense to the local societies; this offer is for two months, and by that time we will know whether the plan is practical and will prove a success.

Let me hear at once so I may have the route formed by January 1. I also wish to announce the O. S. A. convention will convene in Columbus, Ohio, Board of Trade Building, May 27, 28, and 29, 1904. The West Side Spiritual Church has furnished said building.

Mr. J. C. Hemmeter, Cleveland, Ohio, has resigned his office as secretary of the Ohio Spiritualist Association, and Mr. R. C. Baird, of Elyria, Ohio, has been duly elected secretary for the O. S. A. for the remaining part of the year. Mr. Baird will be pleased to furnish any information pertaining to his office and is in hopes to become better acquainted with Ohio Spiritualists. The address is Mr. R. C. Baird, Elyria, Ohio. He is also president of the Progressive Spiritualist Society, Elyria, Ohio. The notice of the liberal offer in The Progressive Thinker and the value of that paper, not only does Brother Baird urge the audience to subscribe for the paper, but has same on board and also premiums and prices; it would be well for other societies to follow their example.

RESOURCES OF THE PAPACY.

An Enemy to Progress, It Has Any Amount of Money to Carry On Its Nefarious Work.

Prior to the loss of the temporal powers of the popedom, the papal states had an independent budget. The pope, besides other revenues, enjoyed a civil list of $800,000. When Victor Emmanuel, however, took possession of Rome in 1870, and the states of the church were abolished, a perpetual allowance—represented by the interest on a capital amounting to $16,000,000—was appropriated for the papacy and was added to Italy's national debt.

The vatican, as it is known, has never recognized the abolition of the pope's temporal power, and therefore has never accepted the allowance. Its annual expenditure of about $1,750,000 has to be defrayed from other sources. It is interesting to note the various items of the expenditure. About $125,000 is required for the cardinals and the diplomatic agencies abroad; $625,000 for the up-keep of the vatican and its annex, libraries and museums; $375,000 for charitable purposes and subsidies to Catholic schools in Rome; $375,000 for bounties and presents, and $250,000 for sundry objects. To these expenses must be added the maintenance of the small papal army, which is 600 men strong.

As to the revenues of the vatican, they are mainly derived from the "Patrimonium Petri" and the "Peter's Pence"—two sources different from one another. The former is constituted by the yields of gilt-edged investments and properties belonging to the Vatican, besides the dues for dispensations, notably in connection with marriages. "Peter's Pence" is a voluntary tribute to Catholic Christendom. In the '70s and '80s the "Peter's Pence" enriched the papal treasury every year by $2,500,000, two-thirds of which came from France. Since then, however, the tribute has considerably decreased. Nevertheless, under the reign of Leo XIII, the coffers were fully replenished on the occasion of his numerous jubilees in 1888, 1893, 1900 and finally in 1903. The presents given to Leo XIII at each of these jubilees amounted to from $5,000,000 to $15,000,000. While these presents are looked upon as the popes personal property, they are used to maintain the papacy. The "Peter's Pence" is at the entire disposal of the pope.—New York Commercial.

Is Spiritualism a Fraud? Reply to Rev. J. M. Fields.

Editor Journal Gazette:—The report of the sermon of Rev. J. M. Fields against Spiritualism, filled four columns. I cannot expect you to grant that much space for reply, and content myself with a small part thereof. Consequently I can take up only the most salient points, and if in these my contention is proven, the dependent propositions go with them.

He begins with quotations from the Bible, wherein it is forbidden to the Israelites when they occupied the Promised Land, to follow after the customs, or in any way worship the gods of the people they dispossessed. "And when they shall say unto you, seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and mutter. Should not a people seek unto their God?"

This he applies to Spiritualism, but cannot the most obtuse see that the cases are as different as light and darkness? The Israelites were constantly running after strange gods, and they were cautioned beforehand that when they reached the Promised Land this practice must cease, and they must not consult soothsayers or diviners, or give themselves to idolatrous practices. They might do this through their priests, and there is not a word said about spirits of departed friends, or Spiritualism as it is at present understood.

He Admits the Facts.

Rev. Fields admits the fundamental facts on which Spiritualism is based: "That there is world of spirits as well as of mortals, I trust we all believe. Most heartily do I agree with those who call themselves Spiritualists, in the doctrine of the existence of spirit as distinct from matter. The Bible abounds with the doctrine of the reality of the spiritual and invisible. "There is no doubt in my mind that spirits, good and bad, come rushing into this mundane sphere, though unseen by mortal eye, influencing us in one way and another."

On this point there is no contention, for he is a Spiritualist of Spiritualists! His trouble seems to be that it is not "new." "While the air is tremulous with the march of spiritual battalions," and "this has been the belief and teaching of the churches of Christ from the beginning till now." Yet the Spiritualists claim it is "new!" Rev. Fields in this is greatly mistaken. I quote from "Mediumship and Its Laws," which may be considered as expressing the belief of all Spiritualists: "Spiritualism is not new. History records it. Poets have sang of it in all ages. It forms a part of the literature of all races. The Old and New Testament are inwrought with it. It is as old as mankind." Again, "Modern Spiritualism came as a reaction against materialism, and the single idea which gave it birth was that ghosts or spirits were individualized entities subject to law. It holds that the realm of spirit is ruled by law just as law holds supreme in the material world." It is this difference which makes Spiritualists speak of Spiritualism as new.

It is much "newer" than the story Rev. Fields relates in illustration. The point of this story is that he says it occurred "in a community where I was raised," and hence he was personally cognizant of it. It was about an old "tartar" of a woman who hounded her husband to death and then at a seance was told by his spirit that he was happier than when on earth for he was in hell. It is more than twenty years since I saw that story in an English spiritual paper, but it was in a dialect that dropped the h's. In various forms it has been the rounds of the press, and it is kind of Rev. Fields to tell us that it started in his neighborhood!

There is one more fundamental point the reverend gentleman admits: "There is another thing connected with Spiritualism that we believe, namely, the possibility of communion with spirits and the return of the departed. But the return of the departed is always under the conditions determined by the Almighty God himself."

Why, then, the antagonism to Spiritualism, which he appears to hate with strange vindictiveness. It is right here—spirits must return in his way. He says: "But when the Spiritualists declare their belief that disembodied spirits can and do communicate with the living, especially through a person particularly susceptible to Spiritualistic influences, then we must part company."

Why part company? How does Rev. Fields or any one know that the sensitiveness of mediums is not the very conditions furnished by "Almighty God" himself for our departed friends to communicate with us? Can he produce a Bible text to prove it is not?

Toward the close he gets woefully mixed and declares that his mother "cannot come back to me,' forgetting that he had previously said of spirits coming "rushing into this mundane sphere."

Then he brings up an old objection, one that has been met scores of times. "Spiritualism has never given to the world one new truth of religion—a new thought about art or history or science. Astronomers, not the Spiritualists, have called our attention to the new stars. The Raphaels, not the Spiritualists, have opened to us the treasures of art."

Spiritualism in its modern form has been before the world a little more than fifty years. Side by side has flourished the various Christian churches. It may have brought forward no new ideas or inventions. Have any of these churches? Any one who bases an objection to christianity on this ground would be declared an imbecile. The church has not given the telegraph, the telephone, electric lighting, steam engines, telescopes, etc., because that is not the mission of the church. Its mission is in the field of morals, and yet in the past fifty years it has not given the world a single moral concept that is new!

Why, then, declaim against Spiritualism because it brings nothing new? We do not, however, admit that it has not brought anything new. Before it was received in its modern form, superstition held its terrible sway over the realm of spirit, and astrologers, diviners and priests held the key to that mysterious world, and could by incantations call the ghosts of the departed from the vasty deep. Now Spiritualists hold that law rules supreme over the spirit world as the world of matter.

There is one new thought, one of far-reaching significance. He says spirits can and do return. If this is possible, is it not clearly logical that they can and do influence their friends? If they cannot, what possible purpose has their coming? Is not the evangelist a little arbitrary and presumptuous when he determines the power and purpose of the Almighty?

There is no consolation in this belief, he declares. Well that is not argument, either way. It may not be to him, but to hearts broken with grief over the loss of those dearer than life, when they call to the loved and there is response out of the dark clouds gathered over the yawning grave, there is unspeakable consolation.

Now comes the crowning objection. It is not put in the form of an argument. Spiritualism is all a fraud! From beginning in remotest times, among pagans and the holy people, it has been a continuous fraud.

If this be true, why, then, all this contention? This is the major proposition and rules out all that precedes it. Why does he preach two hours admitting more than half that Spiritualists claim? Why not say at once, it is all fraud and that is the end of the contention? It is true that there are frauds in the name of Spiritualism, and there are frauds in the name and to the disgrace of the church. These do not destroy the genuine. The Rev. Fields may fill his pockets with bogus coin, and say that he can get nothing but counterfeit paid him, as he says he can get nothing but deception from mediums he has consulted; would that prove that there is no genuine coin in circulation.

An Ideal Spiritualist Paper.

Letter From a Prominent Eastern Lecturer and Test Medium.

I consider that in The Progressive Thinker we have a near approach to an IDEAL SPIRITUALIST paper, with its grand Symposiums and Editorial, and its varied, extensive and noteworthy correspondence and selections. Spiritualism appealing first to each and all through its phenomena, generally, finds all classes of minds interested, some materialistically and others spiritualistically inclined; some of worldly tendencies, while others are religiously disposed, and some indifferent as to its trending; at the same time others seeing in it a great factor to reformatory results and ennobling philosophy. Hence, a paper like The Progressive Thinker, with its great scope, its free forum, so to speak, and its newsy columns, enlists the interest of every Spiritualist, not to say liberalist, in the land; and I wish it might have to the extent, at least, of a yearly subscription, the support of such to an individual. Yours with best wishes,

J. FRANK BAXTER.

Stepping Stones to Glory.

Inspirational Address, Delivered Nov. 15, 1903, at Washington, D. C., before the 1st Spiritualist Association, through Mrs. Mary T. Longley.

THE PATH OF LIFE.

The Path of Life, though hard to climb,
Yet leads to Heaven above,
Its track is evermore sublime,
Gemmed by the stars of love.

Though chilling clouds may hover round
And darken all with gloom,
The sunny hill is brightly crowned
With lily buds of bloom.

The path of life, beginning with this mortal expression of being, through these bodies of flesh, may seem at times very steep and hard to climb, because of the experiences that come to us here, there and all around, that appear heavy and hard to bear, that we hardly know how to meet when they confront us with the obstacles which apparently must check our progress and growth; they may be obstacles to our progress in worldly affairs, to our growth as men and women of material affections, and we may shrink at the thought that these obstacles must be overcome in some manner, by severe struggles and with a deal of pain; and yet when we come to realize the power of the spirit—that which is moving and surging through intellectual activity and soulful force within us—we shall not be dismayed by these obstacles, nor shall we be held back by the hindrances which hedge our way. We shall begin to plume our wings for loftier flights and in thought, in effort, and in the aspiration of our being, soar above these conditions of pain and sorrow, over the obstacles and impediments—not to a position of worldly ambition, perhaps, but to the fruitage of glory in a spiritual sense.

That which appears oftentimes to be a hard and severe condition in life, which is perhaps a bar to our thought and stands in the pathway of our progress, may after all prove to be a stepping stone to glory for our spiritual life and our intellectual growth. We will often find in our observations of life that many of those who are cramped by the adverse conditions of material existence, and who at first seem to be held back in the expression of mental force, find a stimulus coming to them simply through the very circumstances which held them down. They are determined to rise in spite of these limitations; they are determined to reason upon the things of life in spite of the prison walls around them. Their thought cannot be chained, and it will soar up and express itself in some way independent of these crude surroundings and circumstances which environ.

It is a fact, as we may observe if reasoned on closely, that in this twentieth century man need not be held back in the development of his mentality in any great degree, even though he is forced to struggle with the conditions of poverty and other adverse circumstances, because as a rule he who has the health to go out among his fellow men, even though he has to go from hovel to mine, has the opportunity of exchanging thought or opinion with those whom he meets, and in some way he and his fellows find opportunities of picking up somewhat of information as to what is going on in the world.

In this twentieth century a man is not held down as he was a few hundred years ago, when a peasant could not obtain any light upon the questions of the day—when he was debarred from all association except with those of his fellow men in a like condition, and as a consequence he was held in a very servitude of ignorance. To-day that is largely changed, although there are exceptions to the rule, where ignorance profound prevails upon even the simple questions of life. The rule is that human beings do have an opportunity of coming in contact with life and its forces, and with other individuals and experiences to such an extent that they can and do gather up something that stimulates their own thought, that gives a quickening power to their own mentality and thus brings it into some sort of expression that helps toward progressive life. We find that human beings to-day may take advantage, to an extent at least, of the conditions of life, and thus make stepping stones, if they will, of those very things which seem to confront and hamper them, to gain a higher force and a grander uplift toward a glorified being which in its manifestation showeth the handiwork and life-principle of God.

Yes, dear friends, we may all find our stepping stones to glory—not the self-glorification that is displayed; not that condition or expression which calleth attention to self and which saith in manner, if not in words, "I am greater than thou, I am holier than my fellow men," but to that glory which is the result of spiritual unfoldment, of mental activity, of the combination of mentality and spiritual force manifesting through the ego into the external life and which giveth beauty, sweetness, holiness and power to the individual being.

It is very hard—and we recognize this—for one to have to meet constantly with the adverse conditions of this mortal sphere; to be crowded and hampered in the manifestation of talent and of mentality, and of all that goes to make up the real being, because one is limited in time, in wealth, in power of expression. It is hard to see our loved ones suffer for the things of life which we would give them but cannot because of lack of means; it is terrible to see our loved ones suffering upon beds of pain and illness when perhaps had we the means to provide them with proper training and service they might be lifted up to health and happiness. All these things are terrible in the life of humanity, and yet with the present condition of human mentality, they must exist. But we do not feel that these conditions will always exist.

The time is coming when human beings will have far less sickness, pain and misery than they have to-day. We do not know that the time will ever come when there will be no physical pain whatever; we do not know that the day will ever dawn when there will be no violations of natural law to the extent that one may become crippled for life through what is called accident, but we believe a time will come when all these things will be swept away and that day will come to humanity when freedom from pain shall be, but before it comes humanity must learn its lessons, and it is learning them year by year; painfully and slowly is the consciousness of this experience coming to human beings.

It is by halting degrees that one comes to realize the consequences of violated law, and by and by, after he has had his terrible afflictions and his sorrowful experiences, he will realize that if he puts his hand into the fire it will be burned; he will understand that if he plays carelessly with edge tools they will cut; that if he comes in contact with whirling machinery it will injure, perhaps cripple him for life or be the cause of his painful death. These lessons come to him, and by and by they will make such an impression or registration upon his brain forces, that they will be transmitted to his posterity, and individuals in coming years will intuitively know how to avoid these dangers, how to live in consonance with natural law and to work in harmony with the operations of this great universe of ours, and thus avoid the conditions that make for inharmony, disturbance, suffering, ill health or pain.

Just as the human race is developing along these lines, and science is coming into harmony with the people at large and making investigations and experiments in order to bring forth that for modern convenience and comfort which will have the greatest beauty and utility with the smallest degree of danger, just so human beings will come gradually into a knowledge of these things of the spirit which annoy and fret and which create inharmony and hardship and pain and sorrow. They will come to learn with the passing ages that whatever is productive of trouble and misfortune to the human race, with combat and strife between human beings for supremacy or the gratification of ambition, personal or national, it matters not, is only a deathly, destructive agent in the pathway or life of humanity. So they begin to call nations together, to send out their committees and representatives, that they may come in contact and devise ways and means by which differences may be adjusted and human rights maintained and human privileges not be abrogated, without the shedding of blood.

Thus we find that the nations are profiting somewhat by the experiences of the past—by the written and the unwritten history of races and of countries we learn that the human family, through the spirit of tolerance, which is growing, not by any means perfected yet, but feebly like the lily bud down in the mire of the pond, unseen, almost unknown, yet feebly living and putting forth its power—this spirit of tolerance, this spirit of arbitration and of spiritual altruism is alive, it is growing, and it is reaching out little by little, because of the deadly experiences of past years.

What, then, does this mean?

It means that the progress of the ages is moving on; that the spirit of life makes for progressive unfoldment and spiritual growth. It means that stepping stones to glory are and have been simply these unfortunate conditions, these unpleasant experiences, the struggles and failures and the achievements of the human family.

Nations can not step on to the plane of spiritual unfoldment until they have had their experiences of warfare and of varying conditions of strife sufficiently to compel them to call to their head centers, men and women of HUMANITARIAN INSTINCTS and UNFOLDMENT, those who know that the highest development of the spiritual brotherhood—those who know that true altruism is not manifested by speech alone—not by profession and expression of thought through beautiful words and rounded sentences—but that the spirit of true altruism is manifested only when we come so into accord with our fellow beings that we are willing TO GO DOWN INTO THE SLUMS AND TAKE A BROTHER BY THE HAND AND HELP HIM ON TO FIRMER GROUND; when we are willing to go out into the quarters of the "submerged tenth" of the great population of the earth and bring them up into better conditions—into the free air, clear sunlight and sweet environments—help them to gain the necessary influences which will come into their souls and give them light.

True altruistic expression is found IN DEEDS, not in words, and the nations of the earth as well as individuals will never learn their lessons well and manifest the knowledge they have gained until they adopt the systems of fraternal brotherhood in their attentions and manifestations to each other independent of personal interest and of selfish desire.

When this is brought to bear through the movements, attitude and expressions of our nations, we shall see a coming together, we shall realize that the redemption on the outskirts of civilization, that the unfortunate pariah in the midst of the mountains of India, the poor Chinese leper on his island forsaken almost by God and man, IS AS MUCH A HUMAN BEING AS THE POTENTATE UPON HIS THRONE, and when this is realized and understood the true spirit of altruism will go forth like the mantle of charity, beautiful and fair, for the healing of the nations, for the uplifting of the individual, and there will be no sectional strife, there will be no effort to gain supremacy, but only the desire to send out the SWEET, SPIRITUALIZING INFLUENCE THAT WILL BLESS MANKIND. But we must wait. We cannot expect this all to be accomplished in a century, or in a hundred centuries; we cannot expect that all this will be the crowning glory of our mortal life, yet we are to work toward it.

Every little thought expressed in kindly love, in beneficent helpfulness to our fellow men, is an aid, it is an impetus pressing the world forward to the desired height.

The upward way is hard to climb, but we do not or should not expect the desire to find a flowery path that leadeth at once to the highest glades of life. We should be ready and willing to meet with the stones, brier and thorns along the pathway, and get over them the best we can.

We must remember that our forefathers went with bleeding feet over the highways and steep altitudes of time, bearing their spirit of courage onward to victory in every strife, and looking back upon the history of the ages we may discover that we are to-day profiting by the experiences, by the struggles, of those who went before, and so we are preparing the way and making it a little more easy, a little better for those who are to come after us.

We need not fret and fume because we can not make the world right at once, but it is our duty to do our best in making it as well as possible, not only for ourselves and our fellow beings here, but for those who shall follow us by and by.

The conflicts of nations, the terrible experiences which have rent them asunder time after time, all are having their effects upon the lives of countries in the present day, and yet we see warfare. We have wars and rumors of wars almost every year, and have done so for so long that it is disheartening, for we have thought that perhaps the wars of earth had closed and that no longer should human beings be rent and torn by the terrible conditions of armies and brothers in arms one against another, but we find in the present years that wars continue, that strife obtains and that the crash and clash of arms is heard on every hand, but nevertheless those who think deeply upon the subject must know that the spirit of the age is toward peace, toward the altruistic system of association and of dealing one with the other.

But we are not ready for it yet. The lessons have not all been learned, the experiences have not all been gained. Your brother, your son, and your beloved companion have not yet been swept away by the hand of strife to bring you up to a consciousness of the horrors of war, but when these things come close home to the hearts of humanity and lives are desolated and homes swept bare by the terrible carnage and strife, then you will realize; but never until universal peace prevails and nations sit down with nations in amity together can you do away with this horrible slaughter and confusion and bickerings in nations and communities that brings forward a combative posterity.

But the time is coming.

You are to learn your lessons, perhaps not individually, you who are present, because you may not need that now—you may have been in spirit some time or other in that same situation and have had your experiences and are here with spiritual exaltations and desires to have all this swept away and to have peace maintained. Your work is to help bring about a condition of peace and harmony that shall bless the world. Nevertheless we are to remember that all of these conditions are necessary and have been necessary in the progressive growth of humanity in individual unfoldment and in spiritual progress. These are all necessary as the emphatic expressions for our minds that we may learn the lesson and have it registered not only upon the mortal form but on the internal mentality as well, and when this registration is completed we send out our influence. we do our work and are helping on the progressive march of life. Yes, dear friends, all these things are stepping stones to the higher and more glorified conditions of life that shall in coming ages be so helpful to man on earth that he will be able to manifest his higher self, his grander being in whatsoever line his talent may deal. He will not be hampered and crippled by conditions then as he is now. He will be able to send out the song of sweetness, the music of harmony from his life; he will be able to prophesy, and when the soul within is glorified into spiritual expression he will be able to carve from the massive stone an image of symmetry and beauty that will stand godlike in its manifestation, and prove to the world that he held the angel within which he has been able to represent in snowy stone. And he will be able also to exercise these other talents and abilities of his—those which call for mechanical execution and for inventive expression—those which individualize him apart from all his fellow men, and in doing this he will stand forth godlike in personality, filled with power of the spirit and different from his fellow men, yet one with them, each making up the particles and parts which compose the whole of life. This will be his accomplishment and his work by and by, but you are to help him. You have your work to do. You are doing your best, we know, to express your own lives, to bring about the higher unfoldments of yourselves, to help your fellow beings, to bring comfort and peace to those whom you love, and we trust something of comfort to those whom you meet who have no special claim upon your attention.

We know that as you pass along from day to day you are doing your duty as it appears to you.

We have faith in human nature. We have faith in the human brothers and sisters plodding along these pathways of mortal life to this extent, that we believe each is trying to do his best according to the conditions and circumstances around him. True, all have certain frailties, all have weaknesses and perchance the folly and the weakness may crop out now and then in each human life; sometimes the selfishness will get a little the uppermost, and we find ourselves drawing in what is external instead of giving out that which is within for the blessing of others. Sometimes we feel that our children and our particular people should have certain things that others have no right to have, or that they can have certain things by bearing a little heavily upon others, and perhaps we do that which in reality we know we should not have done. We understand that that is one side of human nature expressing itself, but on the whole and in the average we believe in human nature of a higher expression. We believe that you are all striving to do your duty; that you have no aim to injure a fellow being; that you have no wish to injure anything in life, but that you desire to bless and uplift.

And we know that you will constantly try to do the best you know how, and as you do, you will send out the INFLUENCES WHICH WILL HELP THE COMING GENERATION to do better and to be better than any of you have been able to do and to be in this present age.

You are climbing over the stones of experience to the glorified condition of a higher existence. You have your lessons to learn, YOUR DEBTS TO PAY, and everything that comes to you in the after life is that which YOU HAVE EARNED, as we have before expressed—that which belongs to you. No one has the right or power to take it from you. Others may help you spiritually, and they may thus give you courage, cheer and blessing that will be of as great assistance to you as the gift of a thousand dollars might be to you here from a wealthy friend, but they are not able to make you over in the spirit world any more than a teacher is able to make you over here; he can help you by stimulating your minds to higher effort and to greater research and study; so they can help you on the spirit side.

But you earn all that is yours and it belongs to you, and, therefore, as you go stepping over these conditions, not in wrath but with a persistent earnest desire to rise higher and to do better, you are constantly giving to the spiritual manhood and higher womanhood a grander strengthening of power that is leading on to glory; not such glory as one may find in a high seat in that which is called heaven; not such glory as selects you out of many to be placed upon the right hand of any potentate or monarch; not such glory as appeals to the outward senses with flashing gems and gaudy display, but the true spiritual selfhood that has been unfolded by the lily bud into the sweetness, bloom and fragrance of spiritual exaltation which giveth life and new strength and enables you to accomplish more for your own elevation through your efforts to bless your fellow men. This is the glory that one can attain. This is the glory that all may attain who desire to do good and to live aright. This is the glory toward which we may step and climb day by day upward over the stones, steep though they be to our feet, onward above the briers though they sting, ever reaching higher towards the stars whose light is never quenched, toward the great sun of eternal life whose glory can not fade—onward forever we march, unfolding the selfhood or the soul-life and spiritual power which makes for righteousness and truth.

As with individuals, so with nations. The forward march is on—it can not be stayed, though the stones and the boulders be steep and rugged, though the experiences to individuals and to countries be such as to dismay and wound, yet the march is on, and because of the experiences, because of the failures, because of the conflicts, because of that which chagrins and confounds people, because of all which may be even blighting and gloomy, the way is on and leadeth to the stars; it is upward and bright, although many have to fall by the way because it gives its lessons and makes its discipline felt.

By and by the whole world will be aroused to a knowledge of the truth and of the right; to the recognition of the rights and privileges of humanity wherever it may be, and because human expression, public sentiment, popular feeling and demand will be such that nations will be obliged to consider the rights of each other, will be obliged to come into contact for close association with the idea and understanding that all shall be conceded to them which is their due. Because in the onward march of human unfoldment countries and their managers will gain wisdom, will grow in strength, will become strong in mental power, WILL GAIN SOMETHING OF SPIRITUAL VIGOR, and will come to the highest understanding through which they will learn that only by the SYSTEM OF EQUITY AND EXACT JUSTICE FROM MAN TO MAN, NATION TO NATION, CAN LIFE BE PROSPERED, CAN HUMANITY BE GLORIFIED, CAN THE WORLD BE UPLIFTED FROM THE CONDITIONS OF ERROR, OF WRONG AND SIN, TO THE HEIGHTS OF MAGNIFICENT INTELLIGENCE AND OF PROFOUND WISDOM AND LOVE.

CURES DEAFNESS AND CATARRH

ONLY ONE REMEDY IS CERTAIN AND THAT IS "ACTINA."

Deafness is the direct result, in 95 out of every hundred cases, of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The effect of catarrh is to fill up and clog the air passages with deposits, these in a short time stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Deafness ensues, and the hearing cannot be restored until these deposits are removed. It is impossible to reach the inner ear by probing or spraying, and that is the reason why the greatest aurists and physicians find their skill baffled. But science has discovered a way to reach these heretofore inaccessible portions of the head. This discovery has been named "Actina." It is a vapor current which, passing through the Eustachian tubes attacks and dissolves the clogging catarrhal deposits, so that they pass away, and at the same time loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, so that they immediately respond to the slightest sound vibration. Ringing noises in the head are also caused by catarrh, and are the premonitory signs of deafness. "Actina" never fails to cure this distressing affliction; we have known cases of years' standing to be cured in three weeks. "Actina" is also a certain specific for asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are either directly or indirectly caused by catarrh. THE GOLDEN RULE.

The Religious Position of the National Spiritualists Association.

To the Editor:—Allow me to express my heartfelt thanks to Brother Baldwin for his straightforward dissection of the Golden Rule, and to yourself for publishing it. He is the first man who has come out and affirmed the position advanced by myself, some years since, that this rule makes selfishness the supreme authority of moral obligation. Its wide theoretical acceptance is on a par with many other shallow and foolish sayings of the reputed Jesus. It is fortunate that human nature is such that its observance is impossible. Think of an inflated egotist obeying that Rule.

But I am fearful that Brother B. has overlooked one important fact. I have before me the Declaration, or Creed of the N. S. A., which I understand was readopted at the recent meeting at Washington. It is made up of four believes and two affirms. The last paragraph reads: "We believe the highest code of moral ethics to be embodied in the Golden rule—to do unto others as we would that others should do unto us." Now, if Brother B. belongs to the N. S. A. he thereby proclaims that what he terms "the shibboleth of the Christian theology" is "the highest code of moral ethics." I disclaim entirely the supposition that the critical mind of Brother Baldwin could ever blunder into calling a simple precept "a code," or be guilty of writing "moral ethics," as though there could be immoral ethics, or that morals and ethics were not synonymous terms. But the world is told that the above paragraph is the belief of the Spiritist public. Does Brother B. endorse the creed by supporting the organization which made it?

This sixth article was not in the original creed, but was added afterwards as an additional sop to the Christian church.

At the recent meeting in Washington, an attempt was made to still farther degrade Spiritism by imposing an elaborate ritual. It appears from the meagre report that it was adopted only in part. But it undoubtedly will be, for President Barrett, who was one of the getters up of the ritual, in his annual report says, "This convention should declare to the world the religious side of Spiritualism and place it squarely and reverently upon the basis of Scientific Theism." This language of President Barrett is confirmatory of the report that he voted against the creed originally because it did not go far enough in the religious direction; and this recommendation for placing the "religious side of Spiritualism before the world," upon the basis of Scientific Theism" shows that he has not relinquished the purpose to make the N. S. A. a distinct sect. In this, he will no doubt be successful.

With its "Infinite Intelligence," "Scientific Theism," baby christenings, "A more devotional, religious spirit," and "the communion service that should follow the address of a settled speaker," it will have what the president so ardently desires; its "phenomena, science, philosophy and religion with no trespassing upon the prerogatives of either branch."

Scientific theism, infinite intelligence, Golden Rule, baby christenings, communion service, ordaining reverends, prayers and invocations all arranged in a voluminous ritual defines the character of the N. S. A. as it has been manipulated by its president and his assistants. And, as the late convention endorsed his address, and re-elected him its president, it thereby accepted the entire religious rigmarole of the address as well as the "Shibboleth of the Christian theology" as a true definition of modern Spiritualism.

Now, will Brother Baldwin endorse this vast mass of semi-christian fads with the single exception of the Golden Rule? Is "scientific Theism" and religious devotion, etc., to be "reverently" accepted and the Golden Rule kicked under the table?

Modern Spiritism has but two basic affirmations. 1. Discarnate spirits communicate with spirits still in the flesh. 2. The method or laws of communication is purely natural. These two propositions sweep away all the Gods—all the miracles, and all the religions of humanity, unless we except pure Buddhism.

I hope to see Brother B., with his critical mind, come to the defense of pure Spiritism against the persistent effort to convert it into a contemptible, semi-Christian sect.

THE GOLDEN RULE.

He Thinks It an Excellent Rule to Go By.

To the Editor:—I see in The Progressive Thinker of Nov. 28, 1903, that Mr. E. W. Baldwin of Madison, Wis., takes a tilt at the Golden Rule, saying that if strictly lived up to it would wreck and ruin the world!

Whistle him down the wind!

It is the noblest rule ever uttered by mortal man, and the purest men and women that ever lived on our planet believed in and commended it.

If anybody ever harmed Mr. Baldwin it was because that person did not live up to the Golden Rule. If Mr. Baldwin ever harmed anybody it was because he did not live up to the Golden Rule. He says no man has ever lived up to it, and he seems to think this proves the rule to be bad. There are many that will not live up to it, and there are many that will not live up to the laws forbidding murder and theft, but this does not prove that the laws forbidding murder and theft are bad. It only proves that the people that violate these laws are bad.

Mr. Baldwin's proof is no proof at all. The Golden Rule is not enforced because the ruling class in the government does not want to live up to it. They get their bread and fine clothes by violating it. If they would live by their own honest labor, then they would have a better opinion of the Golden Rule. Living up to it would not wreck and ruin the world, but it would reform the world into a paradise It might be a little hard on the worthless schemers and idlers who live by exploiting labor in violation of the Golden Rule. They would have to live by their own labor.

The Golden Rule, as Mr. Baldwin says, is not lived up to, and that is just why there is so much crime, poverty, distress, strikes and strife among the people. Civilization is breaking down. Society, the ruling class, puts a premium upon crime and rascality, especially if the crime and rascality is committed on a large scale. Injustice breeds discontent. It is not right for some to have to toil till they fall down exhausted while others do nothing. It is not right for laborers and their children to have to wear rags and starve while idlers wear robes and feast on the luxuries of the land. It is not right for a rich idler's dog to fare better than a poor laborer's child. These infamous conditions exist, as all know, under the competitive system, and they would not and could not exist under a co-operative commonwealth based upon the Golden Rule. J. H. WIMPEY.

ETERNITY.

I am very sorry that my article on "Eternity" was so poorly expressed, as to be taken as a wall, or cry of anguish. I did not mean it should convey that impression by any means.

I only meant it as an earnest appeal for light upon what to me was the most important question that ever entered my inquisitive noddle.

Was there ever a time when I as an individual did not exist? If so, then I am satisfied that the time will come, when I will not be.

Whatever had a beginning will have an end. Then, did my individuality ever have a beginning?

God, spirit, matter, material, never had a beginning.

Has existed from all eternity in the past—will exist to all eternity in the future.

But—things created from them, including worlds, have beginnings and endings. If man is immortal, is to retain his individual existence to all eternity, I am satisfied that nothing he can do, or leave undone, can change, or take it from him.

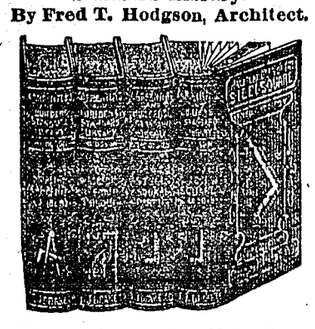
It may be that I am asking too much, to want to know the truth in regard to this mighty question, but if there is any evidence lying around loose, that has a bearing upon this theme I am just boy enough to want to pick it up and see how it looks.

But I am not fretting or worrying about it. If I do not find what I seek for, I will go on whistling until I find something else that is desirable.

In reply to Henrietta Straub, who so kindly and nicely reviewed my former article on Eternity, I want to say, I do not expect to know the unknowable, measure the unmeasurable, or prove the unprovable. But I want to learn all I can about God or Nature's infinite plans.

I know the finite cannot comprehend the infinite, but I understand what Eternity means, and I am mighty anxious to stay with it, to never drop out.

I want to thank Henrietta and others who replied to my article. Opinions do me some good.



So far as it goes the grand and glorious philosophy of Spiritualism is very consoling. I do not worry over the future, for I incline to the belief, that all things considered, whatever is, is for the best.

There is nothing criminal in aspiring for truths that are beyond our reach, and when I tire of it, I will take Henrietta's advice and listen to the lullaby song of "Rock me to sleep, Mother," and take a rest. JOHN T. DOW.

Can Telepathy Explain?

Results of Psychical Research.
By Minot J. Savage.

Dr. Savage, in this book of 243 pages, discusses problems that have vexed intelligent minds probably to a greater extent than any others, saving those of the religious life. He states a great number of well-authenticated instances of spiritist revelation or communication. His discussion is frank and fearless, and merits the widest reading, for he deals with facts and experiences. Price, cloth, $1.00.

The Influence of the Zodiac Upon Human Life,
With Character Readings of Persons Born Upon the Cusp.

The principles found in this volume are both a science and a religion, for a better and a far happier humanity. It points to the planets as an index to the human character and liability to diseases; also gives the gems and colors suited to temperaments evolved under certain planets. But the author, ELEANOR KIRK, lays special stress upon the fundamental principle that "All maladies known to man can be entirely dominated, forever cast out, by those who realize that mind is the master and body the servant." ..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Wm. E. Smith writes from Springfield, Mass.: "The First Church of Progressive Spiritualists opened its doors after a rest of two months, to a large audience in Memorial Hall, on September 6. Not quite a year ago when this society organized, some of those who remained on the outside to kick, prophesied its death in less than two months; others delegated it to a warmer climate, but it has moved right along unmindful of false prophets or opposing forces, and to-day it is more alive than ever. Mr. R. Chester was the one under whose guidance this society was organized, and for three months he worked Sunday after Sunday for just what contributions might be forthcoming. Meetings were held in a third story hall, and through the able ministrations of Mr. Chester these quarters became too small, and it was again necessary to look for larger quarters. These were soon found, and we now have a very commodious location, nicely furnished and heated, and best of all, no debts. This has not been accomplished without earnest endeavors, both on the part of pastor and people. While we have an energetic and beloved leader we also have earnest workers who devote much time and money to the cause they love, and which they are determined to show forth to the world for the betterment of humanity. Our membership now reaches over sixty, while we have many adherents, who are not yet members. We are certain we have now established in our midst a movement for the betterment and advancement of mankind, that is making itself felt. We take great deal of pride in our church and we struggle on feeling assured that greater victories are ours. We wish that some of our Spiritualistic friends who think that the cause is declining could see the audience that comes out to hear Mr. Chester. Our hall has been crowded Sunday after Sunday with some of the very best people of Springfield. His platform work and his readings at his residence are truly phenomenal, and has received great praise not only from the people who know Mr. Chester, but from the secular press as well. He devotes much time to those who are skeptics and has done more for this class of people than any other medium they ever have had here. This society sells The Progressive Thinker, and we sell more of them than any two societies here, and we will increase our supply after the first of the year."

Brother A. C. Priest, of Spokane, Wash., writes that some one has been appropriating his paper in its passage through the mails, much to his disgust. Papers will occasionally go astray in the mails in spite of the most careful supervision. We are glad to supply missing numbers when requested to do so by postal. Mr. Priest says: "For two or three years my wife and myself have held our public meetings, at which we have been always ready to give our copies of your valuable paper to those who have never read them, with the object of enlightening them and getting them to subscribe; but we have a decided objection to buy copies or subscribe for your paper in order to supply mental pabulum for people who cannot appreciate them."

Otto Sippell, president, writes from San Diego, Cal., giving a graphic account of the meeting of the Second Spiritualist Society at the home of Mrs. C. E. Thing, to help celebrate the 37th anniversary of her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Wells. There was an original address of welcome, by Miss Loreitta Thing, aged 11 years, which contained some excellent sentiments. Then followed instrumental and vocal music, and recitations, short talks from many who were present. Then the little 6-year-old granddaughter Natella recited 'Grandpa's Glasses,' and she and her sister sang the pretty song, 'True hearts never grow old.' Mrs. Thiebaud's guides gave a beautiful talk to the couple. Those present expressed themselves as having spent a delightful evening."

C. E. Tobey writes in answer to S. H. White, objecting to the idea of colonizing the colored race in South America; he thinks they should be taken back to Africa, where railroads are now being built. He says: "Then there is a free negro colony on the West Coast. Plenty of room there, and many blacks ready to go. Not long ago a lot of them went to the governor of Georgia for transportation to Africa. Arrangements could be made with the African powers for homes for such desirable immigrants, and our useless men-of-war ships could carry them across the Atlantic. Take out those big guns, lighten the ships and load them with black humanity, and build up a powerful nation of civilized negroes, and help civilize the barbarous tribes already there. England, France, and all the European nations with possessions there would assist in the work. Yes, Booker Washington is working nobly for the black race. He is a reasonable man. I have lived the most of my life in the South and owned negroes, and I certainly wish him success. I don't think he should be censured for eating 'possum with the president; but appearing in public with the ponderous Cleveland, I cannot so easily forgive."

Harmony writes from Long Beach, Cal.: "Perhaps you would like to hear from this gem by the sea. On Oct. 15, a few earnest Spiritualists organized the First Spiritual Society, and are going along nicely. Mrs. Emma D. Hammin, of Los Angeles, formerly of Topeka, Kans., has been speaking for us for the last five Sundays. Mrs. Lettie M. Allen will finish the balance of this month at the Sunday evening meetings. She has a hall in Los Angeles but comes to us as we need earnest workers. Our Thursday night socials are a success. We have a true, pure, earnest soul as our president, Miss C. J. VanAlstine."

Mrs. M. T. Kessing writes: "That book, The Seers of the Ages, which I regard as a gift, has arrived all right. Many thanks. It is just grand. I wish to say that I was born and raised a Roman Catholic, but left the church over twenty years ago. I was converted to this grand truth.

Dr. Beverly writes: "At Lakeside Hall, next Sunday evening, Mother Virtuzia will lecture. She is the founder of the Circle of Light. She dresses in white from head to heel, thus illustrating the spirit resurrection and life. She is a fine speaker and very spiritual, and her revelations are very wonderful. All should hear these representative speakers, and attain to the highest and best in this present life. It is the pure honest life that tells the tale. The people want demonstrated truth, and your paper has no fear in declaring the latest and best."

Mr. Henry Brunhaus, president, writes that the association in Wheeling, W. Va., is in a flourishing condition, and large attendance.

Laura G. Fixen, on Dec. 10, took a steamer at San Francisco, Cal., for Australia.

G. H. Brooks writes: "My address while in Ashtabula, Ohio, will be 24 Center street. I will respond to calls for funerals. I go to Toledo, Ohio, for January. Send all mail and telegrams to 24 Center street, Ashtabula, Ohio."

A special dispatch to the Inter-Ocean from Rome, says: "Pius X. is likely to exercise the prerogative of papal infallibility for the first time since its definition by the Vatican counsel in 1870. Neither Pius IX. nor Leo XIII, ever had occasion to define any dogma, but, it is said, Pius X. will in the near future declare the assumption of the Blessed Mary to be a dogma of faith. It has always been the belief in the church that Mary's body was taken by angels to heaven, so that no particles of it were preserved among the relics of the church. Catholics, however, have thus far been at liberty to believe or not believe the truth of this assumption, which was proclaimed first by St. John Damascene and by the council of Ephesus. A dogmatical definition by Pius X. would bind all Catholics to the belief." Verily, what fools in this world of ours.

The "Divining Rod" or "Dowser," is up for consideration before the Psychical Research Society of London. Professor Barrett has satisfied himself that neither luck nor special knowledge of the surface indications of hidden water or ore, nor special susceptibility to electrical influences, will suffice to explain all the cases of dowsing that he has studied. He thinks, rather, that the dowser possesses a mysterious perceptive faculty, akin to the "homing" instincts of pigeons. "Any particular object sought for—it seems immaterial what that object may be—" excites an impression on the dowser when he approaches it. The impresion may rise to an obscure sensation or to an emotional disturbance, but at any rate it starts the dowser's muscles to contracting, and that starts his rod to shaking—and there you are. Professor Barrett has further observed that "children of nature, simple country folk whose minds are free from preconceived ideas or reasoning,' are the best dowsers. He feels justified in drawing the conclusion that "the intrusion of reason or of any conscious volition is fatal to the end in view."

Dr. J. H. Randall writes: "I have been engaged by the Society of the Students of Nature for the next month or two, meetings held every Sunday evening at 7:30 at Perl's hall, 1546 Milwaukee avenue. I also conduct regularly the meetings of the Church of the Golden Rule at Hall 210, 52 Dearborn street, Sundays at 3:30 p. m. Am doing this work more because I love the work of advancing scientific truths than for any money reward there is in it."

Mrs. F. C. Kramer writes from Rockford, Ill. "In behalf of the Spiritual Science Society of Rockford, Ill., I wish to say that we are flourishing. We have a society of which we are proud. Our members are all working harmoniously together. Our officers are all zealous, and fill their places with perfect adaptation to their work. They have proven themselves to be the right persons in the right places. We have been fortunate in securing the best of talent. Since the close of the camp season, and the reopening of our meetings, our rostrum has been occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Sprague, Mrs. Mattie E. Hull, Mrs. Ella Johnson Bloom, Mrs. Nellie S. Noyes, of Boston, Mr. Harry J. Moore, of Chicago, and Mrs. Frances Wheeler of LaCrosse, Wis. We have had foreign talent with us twice every Sunday. Mrs. Wheeler was with us last Sunday and will be with us again next Sunday. Her lectures are given while she is in a trance condition. They are full of good things from beginning to end. Her message work is fine, and very convincing to investigators. Mr. Harry J. Moore, who immediately preceded Mrs. Wheeler, is an able speaker, and his lectures are deep, logical and forceful. He is an earnest, zealous worker for the cause, and thoroughly competent to fill his place in the lecture field. Last Wednesday evening, the ladies of the society gave a sociable in the hall, and we had a very pleasant time. Mrs. Wheeler gave a short lecture, followed by messages. Special music was rendered by a quartette and others. Refreshments were served, after which the young people indulged in dancing. Our president, Mr. I. S. Getchell, has been ill, and unable to be with us the past two Sundays. He has been earnest and untiring in his efforts to build up the society, and is highly appreciated by the members. We have a Ladies Auxiliary that is doing a good work and is an able assistant to the society."

Wanted, by the Church of Truth of Denver, Colo., a No. 1 speaker and medium. Address the secretary, I. T. Niles, 2011 Scott Place.

Harry J. Moore closed his engagement with the society of Rochester, Ind., last Sunday. Mr. Moore serves the First Spiritualist Church of Battle Creek, Mich., the last Sunday of this month, and his address while there will be 90 Lathrop avenue.

Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission holds services every Sunday, afternoon 2:30, evening 7:45, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue. Good singing. Speaking and spirit messages. All Welcome. The first Spiritualistic ceremony ever performed in Decatur, Ill., took place on Wednesday night at the home of Burchard Jensen, 414 East Marietta street. The contracting parties were Henry Bauer and Miss Pauline Jensen, and the minister was Mrs. India Hill, head of the Spiritualistic congregation of Decatur. Not much difference exists between the Spiritualistic marriage ceremony and the usual form. The minister stands before the couple and pronounces the words of the form. Some changes are, however, made in the wording. Thus the woman, instead of being asked if she will "love, honor and obey," is asked to promise "harmony, peace and love." Again, the minister does not say, "What God hath joined together let no man put asunder," but substitutes the word "love" for the word "God." This change she explains by saying that if all marriages were made by God, that wording would be all right, but it is an evident fact that many marriages are not made by God, because of the inharmonious spirit and the records of the divorce courts. The couple then join right hands and promise mutual love, and the groom puts a ring on a finger of the bride's right hand. Both the bride and her mother are Spiritualists, and the groom often attends Mrs. Hill"s meetings. Last night's marriage was the second performed by Mrs. Hill, who has been an ordained minister for eight years. She once married a couple in Lafayette, Ind., but this was her first in Decatur and in Illinois. Mr. Bauer is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bauer, of 984 East William street. He has spent most of his life in Decatur and is well known in the east part of town. He works in Kraft's bottling works. Mrs. Bauer is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Burchard Jensen. She is likewise well acquainted in Decatur, but has more friends near Brush college, where she lived with her parents until five years ago. Mr. Jensen is a retired farmer. He owns considerable city property, for which he traded his farm five years ago. The wedding took place at 7:30 o'clock. At that time the couple went into the parlor and stood before a window draped with smilax. Mrs. Hill entered behind them and repeated the marriage service. When the ceremony was finished she made a prayer. The couple were attended by Walter Jensen, a brother of the bride, and by Miss Martha Kresin. Mrs. Bauer's gown was of drab broadcloth, trimmed with white silk and applique. She carried a large bouquet of white roses. The maid, Miss Kresin, wore blue silk and carried pink roses.—Decatur Review.

H. F. Coates writes: "Our meetings at Kenwood Hall, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue, are well attended and much interest is manifested. Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt has lectured for us the past two years and too much cannot be said in his behalf as a teacher. An audience after listening to one of his lectures cannot help but be impressed with the truth of it. Messages are given by myself and others each Sunday. All who can attend will find a hearty welcome."

Mrs. Alice Baker, of Cleveland, Ohio, writes: "I have commenced my services with the Truth Seekers Spiritualist Society, Dallas, Texas. I find a small society here of good, earnest workers, so I am hoping for the best results in our spiritual efforts, and for a return of health in the sunny South. I would be pleased to correspond with any society wishing my services for meetings, through the week, and will officiate at funerals. Address me at 193 Grand avenue, Dallas, Texas."

Virginie Barrett writes: "I shall be away for the holidays, but letters for calls to funerals or societies will reach me by addressing me at my home, No. 1915 Broadway, Indianapolis, Ind. Mrs. J. B. Harris, from Columbus, Ohio, has been here holding trumpet and test seances. She held two at my home, giving entire satisfaction."

Berlin, Dec. 12.—The Meyer girl, of the village of Grambeke, near Bremen, who recently awoke from her seventeen-year trance, first went into a trance state nineteen years ago, after a bad fall from a cart. She then complained of a pain in her head, and gradually went to sleep and remained so for two years. She was aroused, and for a month she was herself again, but gradually grew weaker, complained of being tired, and fell once more into the trance which continued seventeen years, with slight returns to consciousness. During all that time she took food and drink, expressing her desires by almost imperceptible movements of her hands. All natural functions remained normal. She was even subject to toothache and colds, and once had the grip. The doctors who have visited her since her awakening declare that she is now restored to health and that there is no danger of a relapse, but they are puzzled to explain the cause of the trance. Naturally the close confinement to her room has had its effect on her appearance. Her skin is the color of parchment. Her eyes, so long unused to light, are gradually growing stronger, but they are changed in color. They were brown when she went to sleep; they are now a greenish blue, utterly unlike any other person's eyes. She knows nothing of what has happened during her trance, but her memory of everything that preceded it is perfect. Although now 36 years old, she has still the voice of a girl of 17 or 18.

Miss Mattie Woodbury, of Shaftsburg, Mich., writes: "I have given satisfaction here in Bay City for the month of November, both in private and at the hall, and I desire to correspond with societies in the state for platform messages and private circles. I remain here until after Jan. 1, 1904."

The Light of the Truth Society meets each Sunday at the northwest corner of 47th street and Cottage Grove avenue. Conference at 3 p. m., and lecture and tests at 8 o'clock. Mrs. M. A. Burland, pastor.

The Progressive Spiritual Society will have a Christmas tree at their hall, 183 E. North avenue, Dec. 27, at 8 p. m. All the little ones attending will be treated to a box of candy by Santa Claus.

One who has heard Dr. Hewitt lecture, writes: "Societies wishing to engage a speaker for a long or short engagement should correspond with Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt, 533 W. Madison street, Chicago, Ill. The doctor ranks among the ablest speakers on the Spiritualistic platform, and besides answering calls to lecture, will officiate at marriages or funerals."

Thos. S. Kizer, of Decatur, Ill., writes of the serious illness of Mr. Pettibone, the well-known medium for physical manifestations: "The many friends of these famous mediums will be pained to learn of Mr. Pettibone's affliction. He has been unable to do any work in his mediumship since leaving camp last summer. His limbs are in a weakened condition; in fact his entire physical system, due to overwork and nervous prostration. He is surrounded by friends here and has all the care and attention that any one could desire, and is being treated by one of Decatur's eminent specialists, Dr. C. Taylor Ball, who says that he can certainly cure him. Mr. Pettibone thinks he is on the up-grade, but doesn't feel that he is entirely out of danger, and wants to hear from his friends, and desires that they should send out their best thoughts for his speedy recovery. The Doctor says he should not do any public work for at least one year. The Sunshine Club here is moving along slowly but surely, and our mediums are improving in their development."

John B. Chrisney writes: "Now brothers and sisters of the readers of The Progressive Thinker, let us make a united effort this coming year to circulate our spiritual literature wherever we can. Let us sow the seed of this grand truth broadcast, and the harvest will come by and by. Let us encourage Home Circles everywhere we can. We meet at our Home Circle two and three times a week and we have the prospect of developing three or four young people for trumpet mediums. We have been sitting for development regularly for the past 12 months. Let us work while we can."

Aug. Recht writes: "The Society of Spiritual Truth which meets at Crosby Hall, 423 Classon avenue., Brooklyn, N. Y., had a well-attended meeting Dec. 13. Mr. Delere, George P. Clark and Mr. Rassmussen lectured."

G. W. Wilson writes: "I will give my experience with Mrs. Keguin, of Jeffersonville, Ind. I think she is one of the best of test mediums. She can convince the most skeptical with her powers of slate-writing and hear the independent voices. When you are receiving the writing, your loved ones speak in an audible voice to you in broad daylight; such tests Mrs. Keiguin gives daily. She has been in the field for thirty years and over, and is now answering all calls. Her address is 112 West Front street."

Mr. Stewart and Mr. and Mrs. Folsom are having splendid meetings at Howard Hall, St. Louis. Mrs. Folsom has invited all genuine mediums in St. Louis to come to their meetings and feel at home there, as they propose to eradicate all jealousy from our work.

Marcenus R. K. Wright writes: "I am 73 years old. I have been a Spiritualist since 1848. I was one of the first to visit the Fox family and listen to the rappings. I have made psycho-mental science and phenomena a study. The field is broad and not as difficult of access as it used to be. Any honest man may gain some knowledge of the spirit world if he looks after it in earnest. I haven't usually said much but have been rewarded for my fidelity to spiritual interests with the gift of 'voiced mental speech.' This is a great comfort in old age, but it is not one to be trifled with. There is a degree of familiarity allowed in intercourse with the dead, but there is a line of restriction which forbids too much intimacy. Death is a great change and brings with it a greater transformation of life than even our spiritual friends are aware of. Our supplications for an understanding of all the facts concerning the future are not likely to be fully answered, but our investigations may reward us with such light upon the subject as we are entitled to possess. There is great need of our bringing our inquiries within the province of scientific research and deduction. This would do away with much quibbling over doubtful inferences and results."

David Sanders writes: "I will let you know what I think about The Progressive Thinker. A friend of mine gave me a copy of your paper, and it was just what I wanted. I would not be without it for any sum of money. I got the books all right and I am more than pleased with them."

Chester Martin writes: "Spiritualism is old enough to stand alone. It has no connection with Bible or the religion of that book. What is the use of our speakers or writers quoting anything written in those days of ignorance and assumed gods.

Julius Wagner writes: "It is quite surprising and amusing to read the great controversy of those two intellectual giants, Lyman C. Howe and Mrs. Florence Huntley, in regard to The Great Psychological Crime. So far as I am concerned, I cannot agree with either on all points. Each one has a great deal to say, and with equal force. I read both sides, then decide. Hypnotizing a medium by a spirit, IS AN ACTUAL FACT, whether for good or evil. There are no exceptions. Even a medium is like any other subject when hypnotized by a mortal operator, and must obey the biddings of the hypnotist. Spirits can and do operate and entrance a medium. No matter how morally inclined the subject may be, still he can be made to do some of the most degrading things of which the mind can conceive; precisely the same with certain mediums. The will power is weakened to a certain extent while in that state. We may call it suggestion, hypnotism or psychology, just as we choose. I rather call it soul force. In this discussion of The Great Psychological Crime some infer that that author is not what he represents himself to be, and does not give his name. Not necessarily so. It does not follow that because a writer gives his or her opinion in regard to a supposed truth that the name should accompany the same."

Dr. Geo. Hardcastle writes from San Francisco, Cal.: "The crime of being a fool, of eating too much, of drinking too little, of drinking too much, of eating a bad combination, of wearing too many clothes, of wearing clothes in swimming, of spitting on the floor, sidewalk, etc., of making a fool of yourself, of trying to fool others and make money out of it, of doing the book 'act,' and keeping your name a secret, of eating onions just before going to a party, of a mouth with one or more rotten bones in it, of wearing a plate instead of a gold bridge, of swallowing food not thoroughly masticated, of obesity, of being sick, of being 'cranky,' of being lanky, of being a dwarf, of being sensitive yourself, and yet 'rough' to others, of snoring, of not taking a 'rain' sweat at least once a week, of not doing your own washing, of having teeth that are not clean, of not always being cheerful and happy, of being a miser, of believing in spirits and hiding it, of being a moral coward, and of a thousand and one things too numerous to mention, and not omitting, being an ingrate to the spirit world."

Dr. L. Hawkins writes from Winchester, O. T.: "I consider The Progressive Thinker the banner Spiritualist paper of the world. Whenever you receive the name of Dr. L. Hawkins, no difference what the address, you can be pretsure it is this individual. I have been greatly interested in the discussion of The Great Psychological Crime. The author may frighten away some of the weak-kneed, dry-weather Spiritualists, but he might as well tackle one of our Oklahoma cyclones as to silence this great truth. I can talk with the invisibles at will, and I find it is an immense benefit to me instead of the reverse. I have learned enough to remove an obsessing influence in any part of the world in a short time, without being present or near the subject. If you come up against a case of obsession that is too much for you, send it to me. I CHARGE NOTHING for that work. I am usually able to help such cases in a very few minutes."

Prof. M. De Mork, the gifted magnetic healer of Bridgeport, Conn., writes: "Dr. Bland's book, 'In the World Celestial,' lifts the veil of the future life, illuminates the dark valley of death, and gives abiding faith in a realistic and enchanting realm awaiting the soul. After reading this book one can joyously exclaim, 'O, Death, where is thy sting! O, Grave, where is thy victory-' I earnestly hope this charming book may have a large sale and wide reading."

C. H. Figuers writes: "The East End Spiritual Society, 1749 Superior street, Cleveland, Ohio, will have Moses Hull, of Whitewater, Wis., with them the last Sunday evening of December (27) 1903. We expect a large crowd on this occasion as Moses is a great favorite. I expect to open additional halls next month. There will be a children's lyceum organized the first Sunday in January, 1904, in a large and well-appointed hall at the corner of Wade and Pearl streets. There will be an afternoon meeting at same place with C. H. Figuers, lecturer and medium. This meeting will meet a long-felt want of the South Siders. The location of the other hall has not been decided upon, but it will be in a part of the city where it will not come in conflict with any other society or their work. Both meetings and the Lyceum are missionary efforts of the parent society. We shall make them self-supporting by using the same plans that have enabled the East End to live and flourish for five years, and still has a future before it. All the societies of Cleveland have done a good work this winter and none of them are showing any sign of weakness. There are more and more people becoming interested and some of them end by becoming Spiritualists. The East End Society has a 'Poor Brother's Fund' of $25 which will be turned over to the Salvation Army for their winter's work in feeding the hungry. We have raised this money by taking a collection the first Sunday evening in each month, and hope to raise $100 next year for the same purpose and by the same means. Give the people plain, primitive Spiritualism and they will thrive on the diet."

Mrs. M. A. Logue writes: "I do not want to miss one paper. I think the book, The Great Psychological Crime, is doing a grand work; it tells many truths in the abuse of mediumship. It is a valuable work for the thinker. I have been a medium since childhood; am now near 70 years. I know the dangers of opening the doors to all who come, and I know also the great and glorious blessing, solace and comfort mediumship has been to the tens of thousands aching hearts."

Louise E. Zimmerman writes from Elmira, N. Y.: "It is some time since there has been a report of the work in this vicinity, but it has not been spent in idleness. Home circles and home meetings have been held, at which local talent and young developing mediums have been doing good work. There is material here which will be heard from in the interest of our cause, at some future time, all phases of mediumship being in evidence. After a vacation of five months, the doors of the First Spiritualist Church were again opened for the promulgation of our truths, Sunday, December 13, with Mrs. Clara L. Stewart, of Whitewater, Wis., as speaker and message bearer. May the good work continue and hungry souls be fed and sorrowing hearts turned to rejoicing in the knowledge 'It is not all of life to live, nor all of death to die,' but continuous progression and the doorway between the two worlds never closed."

Dr. Geo. Hardcastle writes from San Francisco, Cal.: "I have not heard from my letter to you except in the way of receiving The Progressive Thinker as ordered, but no answer to the questions asked. My chum wants the paper himself—this after his having had the perusal of one or two copies. I enclose one dollar to pay for same. By the way, the way you are advertising that colossal 'Crime' you ought to soon get rich, if you receive all the 'ad' is worth, and if you only got it it wouldn't then be so much of a crime as it otherwise is. Of course 'any old yaup' advertises the subject of Spiritualism, even frauds of the deepest dye. In this view, then, growth is the result. Dropping this subject, let me refer to a newspaper interview which appeared in last Sunday's Examiner, written up by the prince of interviewers, Ashton Stevens. It shows what the great mass of the amusement world are getting. Quite frequently such marvelous mediumship is exhibited on the vaudeville stage, before audiences of two thousand or more, and the mediums travel over circuit after circuit of play-houses all over the world. In this way 'newly-fledged' believers are made by the hundreds every hour that passes in this day and generation, and inside of a year some of them will tell us 'all about what Spiritualism is and what it is not.' Demonstrated spirit return and identification sufficeth the best purpose. There can be no dispute as to the meaning of this."

J. L. Foster writes: "The citizens of Elwood, Ind., have enjoyed a spiritual feast at the hands of our highly esteemed missionaries, Brother and Sister Sprague. They came to us last week and gave us three rousing lectures such as has never been our pleasure to hear Without any disrespect to those whom I had previously heard, I never heard a more forceful and logical lecture in my life: They surely have poured in the oil and the wine of gladness, and made many of us rejoice with joy unspeakable. While they were here they organized a society of twenty, and it is to be hoped that this grand philosophy may go on and on till it permeates the whole human family. It was our great pleasure to entertain Brother and Sister Sprague during their sojourn here, in our plain and simple manner, but we tried to make them feel that what was ours belonged to them. We have seen the time when our hearts overflowed with sorrow and grief; but this was a season of joy and gladness. Remember, friends, that these dear people are traveling all the time—one continued strain on them all the time, hence need good care."

Geo. A. Haynes writes from Council Bluffs, Iowa: "Herewith money order for $1 in payment of another year of the much appreciated Progresive Thinker, which I should have attended to before this. I have enjoyed and profited by reading the different ideas and opinions of the many able correspondents of The Progressive Thinker in reference to The Great Psychological Crime. In my humble judgment it is probably quite evident to those of ordinary intelligence, that in the last fifty-five years the question of modern spirit manifestations, in the mind of the Christian and scientific world, without regard to the moral effect on mediums, has brought about a radical change of sentiment of the civilized world, as to the conditions of the future state of existence and in support of the philosophy of Modern Spiritualism as is evidenced in the expression of the secular press and the popular literature of the day! 'Truth is mighty and will prevail.'"

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society will be favored by a lecture by the higher thought advocate, Mrs. Nancy McKay Gordon, on Dec. 27, at the hall, 323 East 55th street, at 7:45 p. m. She lectured last Sunday evening, and gave us a treat, and we are glad to have her with us again. Messages by Mrs. Kline and others. We wish to state that the Bazaar held at our hall was a success in every particular, especially so, considering that we have not been organized a year yet. The receipts over and above expenses were about $70. We worked hard for the bazaar because we needed funds to work with and we feel well paid. Our dance ast evening, the 17th, was a pleasant affair, and we will announce in the near future the date for another."

Laura G. Fixen, now on her way to Australia, says: "I subscribe for all the leading Spiritualist papers in America, but I consider the Progressive Thinker the most helpful."

John G. Stewart writes from Alamogordo, N. Mex.: "I have been sitting back here on my ranch, not much to do but to read the argument pro and con in your symposium, and what astonishes me more than anything else is the display of talent. I don't believe that it can be surpassed in the world, and as to Mrs. Richmond, I did not believe there was a woman living who could make such an argument."

R. A. Daugue, one of California's leading minds writes: "You are doing a grand work for humanity. You deserve an angel's crown and you shall wear one. I have been for thirty years an editor and publisher, and I cannot understand how you can furnish so splendid a weekly paper for $1 a year."

D. W. Hull writes: "Why does not Brother Jamieson make some reply to Mr. Sweringen's statements published some time ago? If he can't explain them, the manly thing would be for him to come out and admit that he cannot. This is not my question alone, but one hears it frequently. Let Jamieson come out now and either reply to Sweringen or admit that he may be mistaken. He is ever playing to the grandstand by a parade of his bravery, manhood and honesty. Now let him give us a sample."

Mrs. Lily LeSieur writes about the Band of Harmony bazaar: "We would like to thank all the friends and members, as well as our patrons for working and helping so generously in every way, in making it such a financial success. We had seven booths beautifully decorated and three tables of articles. The card reader, palmist and fortune tellers (seven in number), reaped the harvest of all past records. The fish pond, the post office afforded no end of sport. We had a variety of goodies for our New England supper. The tables were very attractively decorated, many thanks to the ladies in charge."

The First Society of Universal Religion (J. C. F. Grumbine lecturer) Boston, Mass., gave a most successful bazaar on the 16th of December, in the rooms of the Metaphysical Club, Huntington Chambers. One hundred were realized from the sale of one day. The hall was thronged, and all articles were sold. Much praise is due Mrs. Twiss, Miss Adelaide Badger, Mrs. Hart, Miss Bromley, Mrs. Nash and Mrs. Parker.

Aug. Recht writes: "Mr. Rasmussen, the president of the Society of Spiritual Truth, conducted a materializing seance at his home, No. 1110 Bedford ave., Brooklyn, N. Y., on Saturday evening, Dec. 12. The medium was Mr. Thomson of Kingston, N. Y. After he was seated in the cabinet, we found on entering that both his hands had been tied down to his knees by the spirits, and after several attempts were made to remove the rope, it was found impossible to do so. He remained tied in the same position throughout the seance. One young man who entered the cabinet, had his coat removed and placed on to the medium, and in an instant the coat was thrown out above the curtain. Another gentleman received a message written on his cuff, signed by his mother. A number of spirits materialized. One was a man who had been a master Mason in life, and after beckoning to a physician who was present, he took his hand and gave him the secret grip of the lodge. Mr. Rasmussen will engage Mr. Thomson's services for a materializing seance every week at his home."

Mrs. C. Brayshaw, a leading Spiritualist of Peoria, Ill., has a good word to say for Frank T. Ripley, as follows: "I feel impressed to write a few words of praise and encouragement for our good brother, F. T. Ripley, who lectured for the Peoria Progressive Society for five Sundays. Each Sunday our audience grew so that we had to get more chairs, and our hall was well filled with intelligent people. Brother Ripley's lectures and tests were good. I am glad to say strangers received a goodly share of tests, and they were all recognized. Readings given at home gave good satisfaction. I am pleased to say our good brother's daily life and actions correspond with his spiritual teachings. When he came to us our society was at a low ebb financially and spiritually, but it has been aroused to such an extent that our brother is engaged for us during January, 1904. After each meeting Brother Ripley called special attention to the fact, that we have a grand spiritual paper printed weekly, called The Progressive Thinker. Every Spiritualist ought to have it in their home. It is drawing near Christmas time, and I would suggest to the many readers of The Progressive Thinker to send in a year's subscription for a Christmas gift. It will bring a blessing every week the whole year around to those who get it, also those who send it."

Correspondent writes: "Mrs. Alice Baker is lecturing for the Truth Seekers' Society of Spiritualists in Dallas, Texas. She reports pleasing prospects, and the friends there seem well pleased with her ministrations."

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

I have been selling "Non-Alcoholic-Flavoring Powders" for the past six months and have made $815.00. Every family buys three or four boxes. The flavoring powders are better in every respect than the liquid extracts, and are lovely to sell. I do not have to canvass. People send to me for the powders. Any intelligent person can do as well as I and average $30.00 per week. I get my flavoring powders from the California Fruit & Chemical Co., St. Louis, Mo. Write them and they will start you in business. E. O.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

Hudson Tuttle.

Address him at Berlin, Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. Publican: Q. What is the present salary of the two chaplains of congress?

A. Nine hundred dollars a year each. There is a movement on foot to increase this allowance, which is thought too trifling for the work done. The chaplains every morning open the sessions of the senate and house, respectively, with prayer. That is the sum total of their labor. During the time when Congress is not in session they have nothing to do, and during the sessions ten or fifteen minutes' prayer to offer. That is all. Seventy-five dollars a month is royal pay for the service. The chaplains are not remarkable for talent; the are not successes as preachers; they are given the place because they are failures in everything else. If prayer is of any benefit, there is no body of men in this world who stand in greater need of it than the United States Senate—barring the House. If prayer will help to infuse honesty of purpose or stimulate statesmanship, or in the least draw the attention of the Almighty in aid of right and justice, $900 is a pitiable sum, and the cost of a warship would be a bagatelle. Two chaplains! There should be a dozen, and a praer go up before every vote!

But have the prayers of the chaplains been known to have been useful or to have accomplished anything? Never in a single instance. Can a member of either house remember a sentence of any prayer offered during a session? Not one. Has a vote ever been gained by a just cause; a wrong righted; a bribe turned aside, by a prayer? In not one instance. The salary will be increased, for never an official asked for increase but it has been granted. By the people? Oh, no, they have nothing to say about it.

And yet this chaplain business, in civil service, in the army and navy, is in direct antagonism to the claim that our government is free from the church. The employment of chaplains is a senseless custom handed down from the time when the church and state were united, and the chaplain was superior to the king or the general.

Protestant: Q. Can a child be led to take the veil in a Catholic convent, against her parents' wishes?

How many convents are there in the United States?

A. This correspondent thinks that while this was possible in the past, it would not be sustained by law, nor demanded by the church. He forgets that the church is infallible, that is, never changes in its purposes. The veil is being constantly taken and advice or consent of those outside is not asked. The Catholic institutions are everywhere the same and hence the following sad story of a recent occurrence, given by a correspondent of a metropolitan paper is to this point:

"Popular indignation and excitement had been aroused by what was known as the Ulca case. A young woman named Ulca, who was heiress to several millions of money, had been placed in a convent during her childhood by her mother, but when she became of age and it seemed advisable for her to return to the world and marry, the nuns refused to release her. The mother appealed to her priest and bishop, who sustained the nuns, and the case was taken into the courts, which decided that the young woman, having reached the years of discretion, should have the privilege of deciding whether she should remain in the convent or return to her home. The mother was not allowed to communicate with her, and when she was brought into court, accompanied by the bishop and the superior of the convent, she declared it to be her wish and intention to remain in the convent, take the veil and give her property to the sisterhood."

There is no crime on the calendar more diabolical than this. A young girl hypnotized by those who should protect her, and brought to believe her only way to heaven was by taking the veil, giving herself to Jesus, and her money to the church!

This is in Spain, made a nation of brigands and beggars by priestcraft! In America! According to Sadler's Catholic Directory, there are of convents of all orders between 1,200 and 1,300. Some are in the heart of cities, others in the remote isolation of the country. It is difficult to arrive at the number of attendants in these institutions, for this is purposely withheld. There is one, however, given in full, the "Mother House of the Sisters of Charity." It has 921 professed sisters, 10 postulants, 120 novices, or 1051 in all. Taking this as an average in 1,300 such establishments there would be one million, three hundred thousand and more of these "sisters," cut off from the world, and held behind locked and guarded doors and impenetrable walls.

Thirteen hundred institutions in the United States, where women are cajoled into taking the veil, and sacrificing friends, affection, love, everything the heart holds dear and sacred. And these institutions recognize no law but the will of the priests. No one outside knows or can know how many are held against their will, in a slavery of body and soul as degrading as pitiable. No one outside knows of the horrible crimes the blind walls conceal. There is not a legislative body in the United States that dares to enact a just law, which shall compel these institutions to to open their doors to public inspection.

MR. AND MRS. E. W. SPRAGUE.

They are doing a most excellent work for Spiritualism, and meet the approbation of all. Their labors carry them among all classes, and they always uncomplainingly adapt themselves to circumstances. They are certainly accomplishing much for the good of our Cause.

Messages from spirit land came over spiritual wires, through spirit telephones to Medium Sprague, who related them to the people who attended his seance in Eureka Hall last night.

"You are borrowing trouble by worrying so," came the advice to a gray-haired, anxious-looking little woman from her mother beyond the grave, and the little woman nodded her head affirmatively, as though recognizing the wisdom of the advice, but she looked as though she would go on worrying just the same.

Another woman recognized the summons of a newsboy she used to patronize, and still another her sister. There were other messages given until the medium announced that the seance was over, and dismissed the audience.

Mr. and Mrs. Sprague, who are both noted mediums, arrived in the city Saturday and appeared at Eureka hall Sunday night and last night. It had been the intention to give a series of lectures during the month, but Mr. Sprague announced last night that he could not remain after to-morrow, and that the closing meeting would be held this evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bright, 711 East Wayne street. This meeting will be for members of the society, or those who have signified their intention of joining. The Fort Wayne Spiritualists' society, which was formerly large, has practically disintegrated, and it is the intention to reorganize to-night.

Mr. Sprague, who is a very interesting speaker, gave a lecture on Spiritualism, and it had been announced that Mrs. Sprague would give a number of "tests." When the lecture was over Dr. D. B. Cary announced Mrs. Sprague, but her husband said that she was suffering from a toothache and he would have to take her place in interpreting the messages from the spirits.

"I hear a voice saying 'Charlie,' and I seem to be drawn to this side of the room," and the medium, after a moment's pause, pointed to an old man who sat near the wall. "Do you know the name?" he asked. The old man nodded, and the medium went on:

"He is a young man. He is standing beside you. I think he went to the other world when he was very young, but he developed. He is your son, is he not?" and the old man nodded again.

"Now there is another spirit beside you," continued Mr. Sprague. She is old, rather under middle size. Do you know her?"

The old gentleman did not recognize the description.

"She has a message for you," said the medium, who then recognized the shade as the spirit of the old man's mother, and recited an improvised poem, dictated by the spiritual visitant. "My son" occurred several times and the poem was full of good cheer and hope.

"I see a little child walking down the aisle," came next from the platform. "It walks over to that lady back there," pointing out a gray-haired woman near the rear. She looked puzzled and said she did not know of any child relative in the other world.

"Now a woman stands beside you. She lifts the child onto your lap. Now she pats your cheek and calls 'sister,'

"Yes, that's my sister," said the woman addressed, her face brightening, "and it's her baby."

"I hear a voice say something like 'Dallie,'" said the medium. No one responded.

"You know how the wires get crossed when you are talking over a telephone," said Mr. Sprague. "Maybe the spirit telephone wires are crossed. Anyway, I can't make anything out of it."

"I see a lady very much emaciated, her face discolored by disease. She walks down to you," pointing to a young woman in the front row. The woman addressed could not recognize her caller, although the medium gave a full description, and even said the spirit was unable to utter a sound, and had gone from earth because of an affection of the lungs. Repeated efforts at recognition failed, and then the medium discovered a boy spirit by the young woman's side. "And I hear the word 'Willie,'" he said.

"Why, that's little Willie, the newsboy, who used to belong to our circle," said the young woman.

"That's it, exactly, exactly!" exclaimed the medium.

Another man, apparently the husband of the woman on whose lap the spirit child had been seated, recognized the shade of his brother in the description the medium gave of an appearance beside him. Then the medium had the vision of a battle-field. He described a body of troops in a strip of woodland, facing a heavy fire. "I see you there, like the others, dodging from tree to tree and firing ahead," he said, pointing to the man he had addressed last.

"It looks like a skirmish. But now you close up your ranks and go right into battle. You are fighting one body of troops, but another closes in from your rear. You retreat, but hold your own all the way. Now I see a body of cavalry coming from this direction, crossing a stream, and you beat your foes back, although they are four to one. I hear the cannon roar and the muskets rattle. Do you recognize the scene? Were you ever a soldier?

"I was," replied the tall, gray-haired man he had addressed his remarks to. "It was our fight at Buck Creek, and I recognize it all."

"Now, there is a tall, soldierly looking man with an officer's uniform, beside you. He is six feet tall and a fine looking man. He slaps you on the shoulder and points to his wound, and says, 'My boy, I carried this to my grave.' Do you recognize him?"

"Yes," said the veteran, "I recognize the man you see. He was shot before Atlanta."

"He was wounded in the side," said the medium, and the veteran affirmed the vision.

This ended the tests, but the medium, still under control, said he would improvise a poem on any subject that might be suggested, preferring to receive the title from a skeptic. Col. John Scott took rank with the unbelievers by suggesting "What is a soul?" while two others called out "Truth" and "Love," and Mr. Sprague recited a lengthy poem based on these three subjects.

In his address Mr. Sprague strongly defended Spiritualism and spoke a good deal at random. He scored the church for its opposition to Spiritualism, which he said was the religion of truth and science. He denounced the doctrine of the infallibility of the Scriptures, which, he said, was a mass of contradictions, although it was full of beautiful truths and sentiments. "If we could detach all that is obscene, false and wicked in the book from all that is good and true and pure and beautiful, we could all accept it. It teaches Spiritualism, pure and simple. It tells how Abraham conversed with spirits, and how an angel appeared to Hagar in the desert, when Abraham, who had ruined her, drove her forth into the desert with her child to starve. Christ was transfigured on the mountain and talked with Moses and Elias. All the old prophets and seers were nothing more nor less than mediums. Why, I've seen a medium transfigured and his body surrounded with a bright halo. The Bible tells us how the great medium, Jesus Christ, walked on the water. Well, I've seen a medium lifted from the floor and wafted through the air by unseen hands. Christ was a medium. Why should he not be supported on the water?"

"All great religions," Mr. Sprague said, "were founded by mediums like John Wesley. The trouble with them all is that, like the Methodists, as they get wealthy they drift away from the truth."—Ft. Wayne (Ind.) Gazette.

WHOLLY INNOCENT.

J. G. Hinderer, an Excellent Medium, Shows the Utter Falsity of the Charges Made Against Him.

The Logansport (Ind.) Reporter of Nov. 20 says: "J. G. Hinderer, for a number of years one of the best known Spiritualist mediums in Indiana, was arrested last night at Anderson and locked up. He will be taken before an insanity board. Hinderer has been acting queer for more than a year. He has had trouble with his family and especially his daughters, all of whom have left home. He was out with a revolver yesterday and wanted to kill his brother. He went from saloon to saloon and drank heavily during the afternoon. He dropped his gun in one of the saloons and there said that he was after his brother. The police were notified and he was locked up."

To the Editor:—I was handed a clipping from The Progressive Thinker, which you copied from the Logansport (Ind.) Reporter, published Nov. 20, 1903,—first, that I was arrested and locked up, and to be taken before an insanity board, etc.; that I had trouble with my family, and especially my daughters, and that I was out with a revolver to kill my brother, and went from one saloon to the other, etc. Please publish this with the attached signature of the mayor of Anderson and myself. I, J. G. Hinderer, brand the copy attached hereto as published in The Logansport (Ind.) Reporter, later in The Progressive Thinker, as a falsehood, with the exception of that I am a Spiritualist and medium. I want my many friends throughout the United States to know that there is no truth in the article. The very best of feeling and friendship exists in my family; no trouble with my daughters. Witness my signature and sworn to this 15th day of December, 1903, before the mayor of the city of Anderson, Madison county, state of Indiana.

J. G. HINDERER.

The article above referred to is erroneous as to J. G. Hinderer being arrested and tried for insanity. His brother J. D. Hinderer, was arrested for carrying concealed weapons, and pleaded not guilty in mayor's court. The question of his sanity was raised, and I ordered him examined. The commission found that he was sane, and he afterwards appeared before me and pleaded guilty to the charge of carrying concealed weapons and was fined therefor, and his fine was paid. J. G. Hinderer has never, to my knowledge, been considered insane.

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond in Michigan.

Mrs. Richmond made a flying trip to Michigan, leaving Chicago Sunday evening, the 6th, and returning Sunday morning the 13th, in time for her regular service of the Church of the Soul.

Mrs. Richmond gave two public addresses in Michigan, and officiated at the funeral services of two pioneer Spiritualists in Owosso.

The people seem hungry everywhere for spiritual food, and Mrs. Richmond was received with delight and appreciation by the audiences that greeted her.

The following brief notice is from the Daily Argus, of Owosso, Dec. 10. The audience at Chesaning was very enthusiastic:

"A large audience greeted Rev. Cora L. V. Richmond at A. O. U. W. hall last evening.

Her address upon "The New Psychic Era' was a masterpiece of accurately arranged facts, outlining psychic periods, progress, evolution, the advent of Modern Spiritualism, a comprehensive outline of the truths underlying spiritual philosophy and psychic laws, and an interesting description of the religious beliefs as expressed by representatives of nations of the world during the congress of religions in 1893 at Chicago, at which gathering Mrs. Richmond was a distinguished worker.

"From start to finish the lecture was deeply interesting and greatly appreciated. An effort is being made to secure Mrs. Richmond at a future date.

To-night she addresses the people of Chesaning at the Spiritual hall."

THE HAND OF THE DEAD

A brooding silence reigned over the vast plain of sand and sage brush. The great range of purple mountains that stretched across the country like a giant wall battered by Titans, rose as a barrier along the horizon, as if to stay prying man from entering upon the mysterious land which lay beyond—a land once the home of countless Indians, Spaniards and Mexicans.

The Ojo Caliente river, like a glistening serpent, crept through the yellow clay banks on throughout the valley, overshadowed here and there by the dense willows.

As one traversed the silent land the monotony was broken by now and then a Mexican appearing mysteriously from some unseen doorway, or stepping from the sage brush which bordered the trail. Light-footed as an Indian, a moment later he would vanish; and you would become conscious of another at your side.

In the pure air which fanned the cheek with a tender caress was an exhilaration which drove out the cares and weariness of life and flooded the soul with a sense of joy and strength, until it cried involuntarily praises to the Power which had given us life in a land where all seemed given over to death.

A small party of tourists was congregated on the porch of an adobe casa within a stone's throw of the famous Ojo Caliente.

Among these was a wise old Professor, who knew the history of the cliff dwellers and their antecedents; he knew their modes of living and where they buried their dead.

As he pointed out the many interesting places about them to two women of the party, he aroused the curiosity of the older, and she asked that she might accompany him on his next visit to the ancient burying-ground.

The next morning found the party ready for a long tramp over the rocky foot-hills. An hour later, gasping for breath, the party stood about Professor Deans as he related the history of a once large city teeming with human beings, busy tilling the soil, bartering, employed in the industries of their time, and bound by their established customs and laws.

Helen Turner, readily pictured laughing, happy children romping about her in spirit form. She felt their warm kisses on her pale cheek and brow—yes, even toying with her beautiful titian hair, as if they were strands of bright-colored ribbon to be used for a May-pole decoration.

"This sunken basin here, is where they met and held council of war and peace," the learned man was saying. "Now I will show you where they buried their dead."

He led the way to a western slope of the mesa and with the assistance of two Mexicans he began excavating a grave. The two women seated themselves near the mould of fresh earth, while the men stood in a group in the background. Not a word was spoken; the click-click of the spade rang out more audible as it struck the small boulders imbedded in the rich black soil. A harsh metallic sound grated on the sensitive ears of the women.

A startled cry came from their lips as they beheld the well-preserved skull of a human being roll toward the Professor's fet.

An earthen jar was lifted from the head of the grave and placed near the women, that they might see its beauty and good preservation, when there came a gust of wind—perhaps the stroke of an unseen hand, and the jar lay crumbled to dust at their feet.

The Professor, disappointed, deplored this misfortune, as he had wished to take the beautiful specimen to a museum of ethnology.

In unearthing the bones the skeleton of a little babe came in sight. It had been laid away to sleep in its father's arms, and now each frame was shattered and strewn about as the Professor selected pieces here and there to be taken as souvenirs of the day.

Helen Turner's relic was a bone of the forearm. She shuddered as it was tossed into her lap. Vainly she tried to avoid touching what she must carry home, or give unpardonable offense to the learned man. Rosa Lee, her companion, to whom had been given a similar token, laughed at the involuntary shudder that ran over the frame of Helen.

Shutting her lips firmly and clasping the dead man's arm tightly, Helen felt as if he were fleeing with her over the vast space to regions beyond. She scarcely knew how she made the homeward trip. Hastily she washed her hands, vowed she would return to the dead their own. The thought haunted her through the day, and when night came she crept into bed feeling branded with the blood of the unknown dead.

In vain she courted sleep; her brow was feverish; her hands numb; about the heart clung a fear that chilled her as in death.

At last the tired eyelids closed over the balls of fire. How long she slept she never knew. The old-fashioned fireplace was lit up in a brilliant hue of carmine as the embers of the pitch pine died away in shrouds of gray. The room was bathed in a mist of hazy red gray light in which the bones shone whiter than a specter hand.

Upon these her eyes fell as she suddenly rose to a sitting posture, as an indefinable and unreasonable terror shook her from her sleep. To her straining ears came a sound as of heavy breathing, broken at intervals by a brief cessation or a long-drawn sigh. With all the force of her will she strove to restrain the mad impulse to shriek, to leap from her bed, to fly from the dreadful presence which seemed to hang over her. By a supreme effort she calmed herself sufficiently to reason. It was her room-mate, she told herself; but no, impossible! Or some half-starved Mexican who had sought shelter on the porch; but the sound was in the room!

Dimmer grew the misty haze in the room. Grasping her friend by the shoulder, she fairly shook her as she called her to listen. Rosa Lee amused at her friend's fears of the supernatural, listened a moment, and then comfortably settled herself once more to sleep, with the drowsy advice that Helen do likewise, thinking that the day's excitement had unnerved her, this she tried to do.

Again she was fast asleep. Slowly a large, bony, white hand passed over her face. Then the great form of a man bent over her. Now he picked up one of the long braids of hair and tenderly laid it back on the pillow. Then he bent his face close over her own as if he were doubtful of who it was. Assured—a low mocking chuckle rang out in the dead silence of the room. A small child came and stood by his side. He picked it up, held it over her face. The baby's lips met her own. A deep moan, a sobbing sigh of the babe brought Helen back to earth. With a spring she bounded into the middle of the room, determined to ascertain the cause of her awful vision. The room seemed to vibrate with moans and sighs as she desperately sought for a lamp and match. With a light secured, calm reason asserted itself and her bravery returned. A moment sufficed to show that there was nothing unusual in the room.

She swept her hand across the clammy brow as if she doubted her sanity. Her friend chuckled. Helen surely heard it again.

In vain she besought Rosa to go with her to see if anyone was on the porch. "It is the wind, Helen," Rosa ventured.

"Listen, there it is again," cried Helen, in despair. Summoning courage and strength, she opened the door and peered out onto the porch. The moon in all its glory came from behind a huge fleecy cloud and made all as bright as day. Nothing was there. Closing the door, she now stood as marble. Clearly before her came the skeleton hand from the corner. Slowly it arose from the valise and pointed to the direction of its ancient resting place and vanished. Silently she sought her bed, leaving the light burning, to lie awake until the gray glimmer of breaking day crept through the windows.

The early morning found Helen stealing forth from the casa with the bones secreted in a valise hurrying to the mesa to return that which belonged to the troubled spirits. She returned home with her soul at peace with the hand of the dead.

COLORADO COLUMBINE.

Oklahoma City, Okla.

When I removed to this wonderful city about a year ago it was with the hope of making some converts to our sublime teachings, as all good Spiritualists will do, wherever they may go. And as I have found quite a good many old-time Spiritualists, and still more interested that could be won by us, if we had an organization, I think it really time to make an effort to bring this about, as all our people here are unanimous on that point. But we need a good speaker and medium to help us accomplish this. If once organized I have no doubt that this city could be made another burg of Spiritualism, as we find them all over the other states, with several hundred members. As it is at present, we are overrun by fake clairvoyants, plamists and other humbugs generally, who reap a bountiful harvest. One of them, calling himself "the only real clairvoyant living," only recently defrauded one of his clients.

Our home circle has strengthened us in our belief in the immortality of mankind, and convinced some doubters, through my instrumentality, as imperfect as my mediumship is as yet.

Oklahoma City is one of the liveliest communities in this country at present; being only fourteen years old, it has grown from 10,000 to 30,000 population since the last census, making rapid advances every day. They are a wide-awake people here generally, having come from every part of our country, and any able lecturer stopping off will not only be not disappointed, but find an attentive audience. So please let some good medium consider this matter and give us assistance. It seems to me that this territory is unreasonably neglected by our workers. Where is Brother T. W. Woodrow located. I would also like to correspond with him, as his home is not far from here. Address me at No. 516 Pottawatomie street, Oklahoma City.

BANE AND ANTIDOTE.

The Great Psychological Crime, and the Arcana of Spiritualism.

By special effort The Progressive Thinker has broken the record in calling the attention of its readers to "The Great Psychological Crime." It has probably awakened a more wide-spread interest on the part of the general reader, and more controversy on the part of its critics than any other kindred work published for a generation of years.

Though personally recognizing its ability in the presentation of its views, and the candid spirit manifested throughout its pages, I nevertheless hold that many of its opinions, when not assumptions, and many of its conclusions, when not partial and unwarranted by many accepted facts of an opposite character—are erroneous.

That it is the most seriously studied attack on mediumship that has yet appeared, is conceded by many of the most experienced, intelligent and self respecting mediums and writers among us. I am constrained to hold that the effect of the book on the average reader, unaccustomed to discriminate between the strength of assertions as against known facts to the contrary, between the weight of evidence adduced and its incomplete conclusions, that the effect of the work, as a whole, is sadly at variance with a true knowledge of the principles of comprehensive psychology, and a stumbling-block to spiritual progress.

The question, however, is not as to what is my opinion. That is of but little consequence to any one except myself. But I want to call attention, in this connection, to the fact that some time ago the respected Editor-at-Large, Hudson Tuttle, than whom no one has written more fully and instructively, covering the whole field of psychic phenomena—announced to the reading public, that as one of his first scientific works, "The Arcana of Spiritualism," published, I believe, in 1860, had been out of print for several years, that he would issue a revised edition, provided a sufficient number of subscribers indicated a desire for a copy. As this work, which received several European translations, relates very largely and wisely to the fundamental principles involved in the discussion of the matter which forms the bulk of The Great Psychological Crime—the public interested in the subject could do no greater service to themselves and others, than to call just now for the reprint of this philosophical exposition of psychic science. It would prove a valuable antidote to the bane found in this anonymous Psychological Crime. Let there be a general demand for it. GEORGE A. BACON.

"WAKE THEM UP AGAIN!"

To the Editor:—I have a strong admiration for the good you are doing for humanity through your admirable paper. The symposium and subsequent numbers to date are just calculated to startle some of our sleepy heads into doing a LITTLE THINKING on their own account. WAKE THEM UP AGAIN, Brother Francis! Wake them up again! With best wishes, I am, fraternally yours,

STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Items From the President of the State Spiritualist Association.

To the Editor:—I enclose a few items that, if space in your valuable paper will permit, I would like them printed. As my physician forbids me any company, this is the only way I can talk.

Overstudy and overwork is assigned as the cause of the break-down, but time will remedy all that.

The societies throughout the state seem to have fully recovered from their summer vacation, and at present writing are showing good work. News comes from Seattle that the powers that be seem to show considerable reluctance in pushing the case against Mrs. Lole Prior. She, it will be remembered, refused to pay a license. Since she refused, other mediums have done likewise. We now await results that will decide whether we are to be considered by the courts as a religious body, as our national and state charters claim, or a body of fakirs, as many city ordinances claim.

The state board met in Tacoma at the residence of the President and transacted considerable business; among it was the appointing of standing committees for the ensuing year; also fixing the date (August) for camp-meeting. Last year the state purchased ten acres of land on Surprise Lake, about nine miles from Tacoma, on the Interurban, a line from Seattle to Tacoma. It is one of the most beautiful places for a camp in the state of Washington. For anyone desiring a summer outing, a more lovely place cannot be found in the northwest. Anyone desiring to get terms, apply to Mr. Julian Smith, who is chairman of that committee as well as state secretary. Mr. Geo W. Head, 1915½ First avenue, Seattle, was appointed state reporter. We hope societies will note this appointment and send items to Brother Head for publication in the secular press.

Mrs. Margaret Tetzloff, Mackay, P. O., will receive all gifts in the way of bedding. This being a new camp we hope the friends will be generous, as bedding will be needed.

Mr. H. L. Klein, vice-president, met with quite a serious street car accident. We are glad to note his almost entire recovery.

The writer was taken sick about the 15th of October. I have not been out of my room since, and until this week have not been able to attend to any correspondence. I would ask that patience be exercised in my behalf as the doctors enjoin complete rest for three months; but will attend to correspondence as fast as health will permit.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Mrs. Ruth E. Sargent, of Rutland, Vt., passed to the higher life, Dec. 8, 1903, aged 75 years. She leaves two daughters and three sons to mourn her loss. Mrs. Sargent was a firm exponent of the beauties of Spiritualism. Services conducted by the Rev. Dr. Norman Seaver.

LINUS E. SARGENT.

Johnnie Mahatma Ray first budded into life Feb. 6, 1898. His mind at once expanded like a full grown rose, seeking for the knowledge contained just across the threshold into which he entered on December 3, 1903, laying down all that was mortal to continue his life immortal. He left those sweet imprints of a few happy days on the memory of his mother, father and two brothers, covering his happy retreat by little kindnesses towards all his little friends and playmates. The twig was broken at his spring-time. E. L. R.

Dunnellon, Fla.

Passed to the higher life, from his home in Owosso, Mich., James Frazer Yeats. Had he lived until Feb. 14, he would have been 77 years of age. He was born in Aberdeen, Scotland; came to America when 12 years old. He has been a resident of Owosso Fifty years; was an active business man and filled offices of public trust. He has been a consistent and earnest Spiritualist for nearly a half-century. The brief illness that bore his spirit hence could not mar the brightness of his kindly and well-prepared spirit.

Two sons and a daughter remain to bear forward the heritage of his goodly life. The latter, Mrs. C. H. Allen, is a resident of Chicago. She with her husband and two sons were present to perform the last affectionate service to the deceased.

It was the one joy of the occasion that Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, of Chicago, could officiate at the services. Many old and prominent citizens of Owosso were present and testified that the glowing tribute paid to the life and character of Mr. Yeats was fully merited. The funeral service was Saturday, Dec. 12. COR.

Another pioneer Spiritualist, resident of Owosso, passed to spirit realms during Mrs. Richmond's sojourn in Michigan. The family at once engaged her services for the funeral and also to accompany the cortege to Holly, some 28 miles by rail where a brief service was held at the cemetery. The following is from the Daily Argus, of Owosso, Dec. 12: "Mrs. L. D. Wynkoop, for many years a resident of this city, died of cancer at 7 o'clock last evening at her home on East Williams street. She leaves a brother, Stephen Cornell, who with his family, resided with her, and two nieces, Mrs. S. H. Whalen and Mrs. W. H. Clark, both of this city. The funeral will be held at 9:30 to-morrow from the house, Mrs. C. L. V. Richmond, of Chicago, officiating. The interment will take place in Holly." Mrs. Wynkoop's life was one of sweetness, good works and loving charity for all. Though a great sufferer she was the embodiment of patience. COR.

NOTES FROM A LEADING SPEAKER.

To the Editor:—I have thought each week as The Progressive Thinker came I would write to you, and also express a few of my thoughts and experiences along the line of mediumship, but I have been kept busy with the duties of my home and of the office as state president.

I find so much that needs to be done in our state. I find many of our Spiritualists so indifferent. I am surprised when I ask to see the spiritual paper when I am away from home, stopping with Spiritualists and mediums, TO FIND THEY DO NOT TAKE ANY SPIRITUAL PAPER. I have taken The Progressive Thinker ever since the first issue, authough I have been away months at a time; if they were not forwarded to me they were kept at home so I could look them over on my return.

Brother Francis, you are doing a grand work of educating the people along psychic lines. I believe The Psychological Crime has been the means of giving food for thought, and to me it has been a great light. It is a book one needs to read carefully and thoughtfully. I believe the ground has been well covered by our able writers, and I will sit in the silence, only express myself to you of the great good you are doing. Language is inadequate to express my gratitude. Long may you remain on this side of life.

I admire your fearlessness in always speaking your candid opinion and curry favor with none, doing right for right's sake. When I read your article concerning Mr. Kates I thought I certainly would write you and say "Amen!" to nothing more.

A Remarkable Doctor Book
HAS JUST BEEN ISSUED, ENTITLED
THE NATURE CURE
BY PHYSICAL AND MENTAL METHODS, ILLUSTRATED.
A Bridge from the Old to the New; the Dawn of a New Day in Medical Practice. A Clear, Short-Cut Treatise on the Cause and Cure of Disease.

By MARVIN E. CONGER, M. D.
Assisted by ROSA C. CONGER, M. D.

The light is turned on to objectionable medical mysteries, latin prescriptions, dogmatic theories and dangerous experiments of the present expensive medical practice.

Every pains has been taken to make the leading points so plain that all, young and old, may easily understand. Condensed facts, short, clear-cut paragraphs are some of the attractive features of THE NATURE CURE.

The new and better methods of curing the sick and preventing disease, have never been so clearly stated in plain English for the plain people, as in NATURE CURE.

Our Definition of Medicine.—Any method or remedy that will remove, alleviate or modify pain and restore the sick to normal condition, is practical medicine.

Stripped of mystery and deception, the study and practice of medicine can be carried to success in every intelligent home. NATURE CURE will lead the way to certain success.

The best medical practice is the one that will cure in the least time with the least risk and expense.

Nature Cure is a true exponent of the practice of medicine as defined, and stands squarely upon truth and demonstration, rejecting theories and experiments wherever health and life are endangered.

The book contains 375 pages, and is finely illustrated; the mechanical and artistic work are the very best. Bound in fine English cloth, marble edges, $2.00; common cloth $1.50.

Nature Cure teaches how to heal by simple home remedies.
It teaches how Nature cures.
It does not use poisonous drugs.
It does not endorse dangerous experiments with the surgeon's knife.
It will save money in every home.
It is entirely free from technical rubbish.
It teaches how typhoid and other fevers may be cured at once.
It teaches how pneumonia, la-grippe, diphtheria and other forms of disease considered dangerous, may be cured in twenty-four hours.
It is, as a medical book for homes, THE BEST, and is up-to-date in every particular.
There is no similar book, no medical, hygienic or reformatory doctor book that compares with THE NATURE CURE.

Materialization---Thoughts for the Benefit of Investigators.

"How can I span the distance between the two worlds?" you ask the one at this end of the journey which at last leads into that where those with a clearer vision see the spirit forms so fair of our loved ones gone before us into that mysterious strange somewhere. How shall I span the distance between the two worlds and know that the loved ones long gone from my sight and touch remember me here below? How can I open my blinded eyes that their faces I may once more behold? How unstop my ears that have grown so deaf, that their voices I may hear as of old? How shall I steady my trembling hands as they reach out into space, and know that the loved form I clasp so close is the same I embraced while on earth? The answer comes quickly! Just trust and believe—ask not these questions with lips alone, but open the doors of your soul, doubt not, wait, and be still.

The above was given to me as a preface to an address that I was making a few years ago before the First Spiritual Society of Portland, Oregon, and came as I firmly believe from a dear one who had been in spirit life for many years, and they were brought to my remembrance after reading some of the earnest words as published in recent numbers of The Progressive Thinker, and are but the echo of thousands of earnest souls desiring absolute knowledge on this the most important subject that can positively engage the attention of the human mind.

I can deeply sympathize with the position taken and so earnestly maintained by Brother Jamieson, and I am glad to know that we are living in a day when two such earnest and able minds as he and Brother Sweringen can engage in such a controversy and manifest as they have, the spirit of brotherly love.

These letters written in the spirit that they are cannot help being beneficial to the cause of Spiritualism.

As true Spiritualists we should be seekers after absolute knowledge, but I have found in my experience at least that I have never obtained very much knowledge on any question unless I had a goodly degree of faith and trust as the basic foundation upon which to work, and no class of people should have more faith and trust in the spiritual and unseen forces of being than those who are seeking to develop mediumship, or those who are seeking knowledge along these lines. But the facts are that no class of investigators are so regardless of the required laws of spirit manifestation as are the majority of those who are investigating the phenomena of spirit return. No greater truth was ever uttered than that spoken by the great teacher and psychic, nineteen hundred years ago, when he said: "Unless ye become as little children ye can in no wise enter the kingdom of God"—expressed as the basic principle for the investigation and understanding of the spirit or divine law of being.

No one expects to accomplish anything with electricity without complying with the laws so far as understood of handling electricity; and yet there are thousands of persons like Brother Jamieson, who are seemingly anxious to ascertain the facts about spirit return, and yet do not comply with the required conditions, or having complied with them themselves, there are others associated with them that create conditions that make it impossible for the manifestations to occur. I have a case in mind bearing on this point. I have a friend who at the present is holding a prominent diplomatic position abroad under our government, and who is a very strong and clear-minded man, who together with his wife took up the investigation of Spiritualism some years ago, and after a careful and thorough investigation through mediums of different phases of mediumship, they became convinced beyond the shadow of a a doubt of the truth of being able to communicate with those that had passed on before; but on the subject of materialization they, like many good Spiritualists, were skeptical, and in talking the matter over on one occasion they each agreed with the other that the first one that passed to spirit life would return and let the remaining one know of the absolute fact, and they each agreed how they would appear, so as to make it impossible for any one to impersonate.

A few years later the wife was called to spirit life, and some months after her passing, the husband was called upon to make a trip east and he took advantage of the trip to visit every materializing medium that he could learn of in Boston, New York, Washington and other large cities, that he visited, but all to no purpose—there were plenty of what appeared to him to be genuine materializations, but no wife came. He therefore came to the conclusion that there was something wrong, and that genuine materialization was not a fact.

On his return home he was led by a seemingly unknown power to stop off and visit an old schoolmate at some point in Indiana, who was strictly orthodox. While gathered about the hearthstone on the evening of his arrival, the friend told him of the wonderful things that were coming through the daughter of a neighbor, saying he had not been to see, but he had been informed by those who had, that those who had passed into spirit life came back so as to be recognized by those who knew them while in this life.

My friend at once became interested, and wanted to know when he could see this girl. "Why," said his friend, "it is not far, and we can go over and see her to-night if you wish." So the two went right over, and arranged with the girl for a sitting. The first spirit that came out of the cabinet was his departed wife, dressed exactly as had been agreed upon, and as she put her arms around his neck, she said: "Oh, darling Henry, words cannot express the joy that I feel in thus being able to come to you as we agreed, and proving to you that materialization under proper conditions is absolutely true. I have been with you in all your journey," she said, and have tried in every way to materialize, but in all of the many seances that you have attended, this is the first one that the conditions were such that I could come, and yet many of the mediums were genuine, and those who came were able to do that which I could not."

So my friend was saved to the absolute knowledge of materialization by his continued faith and his willingness to continue investigating and not condemn it all as a fraud because he did not get what he was looking for the first time or even the tenth time trying.

I heard a very prominent minister at Oakland, Cal., declare from his pulpit on Easter Sunday, "that if it were not for the fact that Christ rose from the dead, the world would not have one iota of evidence that there was a future life." I asked the same minister if he had ever investigated spirit return through mediumship, and he said: "Yes, I attended two seances and found the same to be all a humbug, and nothing but works of the devil."

So I find that in spirit investigation as in everything else, men are finding just and only what they are earnestly seeking for.

The trouble with mediumship is that but few mediums understand the true conditions that surround them in their unfoldment, and the majority as soon as they have a little touch of psychic power manifest, they at once hang out a shingle and give sittings at 25 cents per head, and the reason why we have no more mediums like Jesus is because there are so few that are willing to comply with the conditions required for its unfoldment. But notwithstanding this and all of the opposition of the churches combined, Spiritualism is making a decided advance, and like a snow ball that I used to roll when a boy, it grows more rapidly the longer it is rolled.

If each to each be all he can,
A very God is man to man.

CHRISTMAS GREETING.

Oh, Christmas bells, your music sweet,
Fills the hours with joy complete;
Let faith be steadfast, hope be true,
Like gleaming depths of ocean's blue;
Let memories round our hearth-stone twine
While friends sincere quaff ruby wine.

A happy Christmas, one and all;
May homes be blessed, sweet voices call,
Roses blossom round each path,
Kindness scatter every wrath,
Let all griefs forgotten be,
Sing to the blesed ones now free,
'Tis Christmas-tide and Love is here,
Rejoice and banish every fear.

Ring joyous bells, ring loud and long,
'Tis Christmas day, we join in song,
The stars of Bethlehem shone bright,
On that glorious, wondrous night,
The loving kine bent humble knee,
So the history says, in Galilee.

Ring ye bells, ring ye with praise,
Christ's grand teachings came to raise,
Let's join in anthems jubilee
And wait the bliss that's "Yet To Be."
We gather round the laden board
With friendship's charm, and pleasant word—
Christmas morn, noon, and eve,
In God's great love we must believe.

THE GREAT MYSTERY OF SPIRIT FORMS

Salvarona steps to the front on The Progressive Thinker's platform, and gives his views in an exceptionally suggestive and interesting manner. We take pleasure in introducing him to our readers, and we believe he will become guest among them.

Much could be gained for the spiritual and moral unity, and harmony of humanity, Christianity and idealism, if we could agree to tentatively use as synonyms the words spiritual and psychological. For the greatest cause of moral inharmony is our diverse conception as to what constitutes the spiritual. The spiritual continues to be the great mystery. The phenomena of physical things, i. e., "matter," does not seem so mysterious. How can we bring the spiritual and psychological side of things within the ken of the senses, so that their forms can be seen to be distinct from the forms of physical things? There can be nothing spiritual that is not psychological. Everybody believes in the visibility of forms caused by physical forces. But not in the visibility of forms of psychological or spiritual origin. Neither can they conceive that spiritual forms are psychological forms, and that psychological forms are spiritual. As a matter of unquestionable fact, there are only two classes of forms ever capable of being perceived by the eyes of man, viz., the physical and the spiritual or psychological. To make the matter clear I offer a rough list of some of the classes of spiritual, mental or psychological forms visible to man; and of visible physical forms produced by the action of spiritual or psychological forces, as distinct from physical.

1. Forms of changed tissue, sensations and conceptions, produced by M. Charcot, Bernheim, Kraft-Ebing. The practitioners of Salpetrie and Nancy, who were assistants, also furnishing data. Mental illusions produced by public hypnotism.

2. Forms of figured consciousness arising from Subjective Sensations.

3. Forms of figured consciousness originating in Conceptions.

4. Forms of the three hundred and fifty figures of persons who appeared to others after death. Society for Psychial Research. See Harper's Mag., April, 1900.

5. Forms of changed tissue, sensations, and conceptions produced by the practitioners of Christian Science, and by Mind Healers generally.

6. Forms seen by persons of genius, as Pascal, Heine, Pardan, Tasso, Gerard de Nerval, Lenare, Hoffmann, Blake, Cellini, Shelley, Caesar, Napoleon, Hobbes, Lincoln, Byron, Oliver Cromwell, Goethe, Van Helmont, Brutus, Kermner, Coleridge, Anna Lee, Paul, Luther, Mohammed, Job, De Quincy, George Fox, Boehme, St. Teresa, Plotinus. By Mary Magdalene, Joanna, Mary, Cleopas, Simon, Luke 24: 4, 10, 18 36.

8. Forms seen by clairvoyants, mind readers and trustworthy mediums.

9. Forms seen on persons having stigmata; figures of angels.

10. Forms seen by martyrs, mystics, ecstatics and prophets.

11. Forms seen in dreams and the chemical forms of Prof. Elmer Gates.

12. Forms seen by unbalanced persons and in fever deliriums.

Among the psychological forms, produced, on the other hand, by physiological stimuli, rather than psychological stimuli (as in the foregoing) are the fantastic, and often horrible psychological forms, seen in hasheesh or chang intoxication; nitrous oxide mystical trance, alcoholic delirium tremens, and morphine or opium dreams. In these last cases, while it is always the psychological forces of the soul herself which psychologicaly constructs the deceptive psychological forms seen under these conditions, nevertheless the soul constructs them solely at the suggestion of anaesthetic physiological stimuli.

Angels—admitting their orthodox existence—are the formal effects, or, constructions of prior conditions of constructive psycholgical force. A psychological force, therefore, is a force which is capable of psychologically reconstructing the nature, figure and movement of some preceding form or force. Hence the one essential point to remember is that there are no physchological forms ever constructed to appear to the eyes of man without the previous existence of some classes of psychological forces to construct them.

In all stages psychologists, owing to their homeopathic as deadly as the not had the time to KILLS, it seems laws governing the importance to construction of the it is homeopa of psychological forms less and rem in the foregoing. They pathic and der, unanimously in affirmy that the soul, by her own powers of construction, duplicates within the brain—by picture processes—the outside forms of the physical universe. no s, the modern mind healer and Christ of th scientist, in their psychological sory, simply extend their belief of this wi chological constructive principle, ac- pted by the classic psychologists, in ef ther practical direction. Hence they ually claim that experience proves conceptions as well as sensations mo sess psychological constructive powoth My own special contribution to the mine general constructive idea of the conic psychologist, and the mental In her, was to show in the "Wisdom of operation," the laws whereby the pas as us construct psychological forms. reds, the classic psychologists of Harvard, Yale, Oxford, Paris, Berlin, teach that sensations possess the power to construct psychological forms. The mental healer teaches that conceptions also possess this power. And in my own book, I showed the three-fold law by which the passions exert this constructive force. In the natural psychological order by which the soul constructs her forms, figures of passion precede figures of sensation, and forms of conception are absolutely conditioned upon pre-existing forms of sensation. In the natural order of the construction of mental forms, passion, i. e., hunger in the child at birth, precedes its sensation of taste, and the child would never have any conception of the taste of sugar and milk if its sense of taste had not previously given it the mental materials, out of which the conceptions were formed. But the experience of the mind healer and mental and Christian scientist, has proven to him that he can invert this natural order. He begins first with conceptions. Not with sensations. By first telepathing conceptions, he finds that he can change the nature of sensations and passions. Experience, therefore, proves that the soul can begin her construction of forms, either by conceptions, sensations or passions.

But the shock comes in remembering that the psychological construction, by the soul of the forms of its sensations, on either the physical or the psychological plane, is the construction of forms of phenomena, viz., of pictures, appearances, apparitions, mirages, semblances, images, visions. This is the modern doctrine of phenomenology, taught in various disguises by Kant, Berkeley, Hume, Malebranche, Cousin, Hegel, Emerson, Fichte, Hartman, Schopenhauer, Plato, Schiller, Rousseau, Richter, Descartes, Spinoza, Aristotle, Leibnitz, Pascal, Coleridge, Goethe, Tasso, Dante, Heine, Darwin, Spencer, Vardan, Byron, Carlyle, Montaigne, Fenelon. Thus it is that whilst the construction of psychological forms implies the construction by the soul of one class of form-phenomena, on the other hand the construction by the soul of physical forms implies the construction of another class of form-phenomena. Both classes of forms, therefore, implying the soul-construction of pictures, appearances, mirages, semblances, images, visions. Thus, accepting the orthodox view of Jesus as an illustration. Before his death the form of his body (arising from the appearance of physical forms of phenomena) impressed the disciples. After his death, accepting Luke 24, his disciples were impressed by the form of his body as having its origin in the construction of psychological forms of phenomena, i. e., that his body was spiritual or psychological. But the philosopher recognizes the fact that the visible form of Jesus, both physically and psychologically, was a phenomenon. Thus, if we accept the Mystic's interpretation of phenomenology, it implies that human life—both physical and psychological—being stages of self-evolving educating appearances, visions or phenomena; that this very fact involves the soul's subsequent existence in possibly other advancing stages of self-education, according to grander visions and semblances. Therefore, the Great Mystics assure us that no matter how we managed to get here, whether with a blaze of angelic pinions in a garden of ruddy apples, guarded with archangels, with swords, in a day before ever a sword had been invented on earth, or whether the soul has climbed up the dark, slippery dungeon steps of organic evolution, the fact nevertheless exists that all saints and criminals alike are evolving souls, allowed to assemble on earth as in one of God's innumerable universities.

LIKE MY MOTHER MADE OF YORE.

Let me bubble o'er with trouble,
Let me pass through woes galore,
But give to me some hominy
Like my mother made of yore,
Good hominy,
Sweet hominy,
Like my mother made of yore.

This baker's bread that we are fed,
Which is sold from every store,
Is but a paste thrown up in haste
Compared to that of yore.
Good home-made bread
Give me instead,
Like my mother made of yore.

Oh, give me back the old "flap-jack,"
With pure sorghum all spread o'er,
And ginger bread of brownish red,
Like my mother made of yore.
Oh, please do, make
Just one good cake
Like my mother made of yore.

I eat the grade they call home-made,
Of all that is set before,
But that milk and toast and turkey roast
Like my mother made of yore—
And cranberry sauce—
(How I feel the loss)—
Like my mother made of yore.

The old mince pie will never die
Till I reach the shining shore,
There's naught tastes now the same, somehow,
As my mother made of yore.
Please use for me
The recipe
That my mother used of yore.

Belief in a "living Father" who unceasingly guides the destinies of one billion, five hundred million men on our planet, and is attentive at all times to their millions of contradictory prayers and pious wishes, is absolutely impossible; that is at once perceived on laying aside the colored spectacles of "faith" and reflecting rationally on the subject.—Ernest Haeckel.

Not because I raise myself above something, but because I raise myself to something, do I approve myself.—Jacobi.

The Light Among the Hills.

A Charming Narrative.

Most Beautifully Suggestive is "The Light Among the Hills," by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt. It is a narrative founded on facts alone, and every Spiritualist should read it.

"Martha," said Mrs. Grey, earnestly, "this is a clear case of spirit manifestation. You surely cannot doubt that the girl so closely resembling you was a spirit friend bound to you by the tie of love and congeniality. The tie of blood is nothing so strong as the tie of spirit. Be glad, child, for you have ever near you a kind and faithful friend. I told you that I was very fortunate when I found my room-mate. I had ceased to weep and had settled into a hopeless apathy. One day when I was thinking over the various arguments I had heard for and against the inspiration of the Bible, I suddenly arrived at a decision. I said to myself, 'If it is not the word of God, then there is no cause for alarm, but if it is, then I will stand my chance with the rest of the unbelievers. I will never go to any heaven without my boy. If he goes to hell I will go with him. I can stand it as well as anybody can.' I put my Bible in the stove and tried to dismiss the subject from my mind. My work in the shop occupied my mind largely as I had expected. I thought if I had got to live, and had no intention of sneaking out of it, I would try and make the best of life. I liked my room-mate from the first. She was a middle-aged woman, quiet, tidy and refined. She was very kind to me in little ways as women can be if they wish, and will be if they are really kind and unselfish. Kindness comes from within and if it is there it will work out.

"One day I said to her, 'What makes you so good to me?' She said she was trying to do by me just as she would want me to do by her if our places were changed about, and then she added, 'I can see that you have had a great sorrow come to you, and the light and joy has gone out of your life, and my soul goes out to you in sympathy for I know what grief is. I sat in darkness once,' and her beautiful eyes filled with tears.

"I was deeply touched by her words and tenderness, and acting upon a sudden impulse I went and laid my hand upon her arm and said: 'You are not in darkness now; you have found both light and joy, I know, or you could not seem so happy.'

"'Yes,' she said, smiling, 'I have found light and peace and joy,' and a beautiful light brightened her eyes and she seemed to see something that I could not. For a moment I was frightened, lest I had found a religious enthusiast, and then I resolved to know, and I said, 'Please, Mrs. Austin, will you tell me what your religious belief is?'

"'Perhaps, if I tell you you will not like me any more,' she said pleasantly. I told her that it could make no difference with me so long as I found her such a pure lovable woman. 'I have no religious belief myself,' I said.

"She looked into my eyes and said quietly: 'I did not believe in anything but my own misery once, but dear spirit friends who were watching over me, spoke to me and taught me the truth. I am a Spiritualist.' For some unknown reason a feeling of joy came to me and I exclaimed, 'Oh! am so glad!'

"Mrs. Austin put her arms around me and kissed me, and from that day to this we have been the best of friends, and I expect we always shall be here and hereafter.

"The next day after our conversation was Sunday and I asked Mrs. Austin to tell me about her conversion to Spiritualism, and we talked about all day, but I am not going to tell you what she told me for you are going to hear the story from her own lips."

"I hear Mrs. Austin? Oh, auntie, what do you mean?"

"I mean that when I go back you are going with me."

"Oh, Aunt Laura! if I only could; but mother will not let me."

"Yes she will. Your father says that you may go and your mother will not object when she finds that it will not cost her anything. I am going to pay your expenses."

Mrs. Grey and Martha were up to breakfast the next morning. When they entered the kitchen they found Uncle Ezra waiting for them, for the old man was an early riser and took the words, "morning call," in a very literal sense. He rose as the two entered and with extended hand and a face beaming with pleasure exclaimed: "How be ye, Laury? You're lookin' pritty pert—not much as ye did when I saw ye before. What's come over ye?"

Mrs. Grey had known the old man for the greater part of her life and she laughingly replied, "I have had a change of heart, Uncle Ezry, and life looks brighter since."

"Huh! made up yer mind for sartin that ye haint got any folks in hell, after all, I reckon."

"That's about it, I guess."

"Wall, I'm mighty glad to hear it. Hell is a bad place 'cordin' to all accounts, 'specially for yer own folks. I never took no great stock in it myself, and I never knew but jest one man that it 'peared to me really did; that was Deacon Wise, and his actions proved that he believed what he perfessed ter. When his boy John was dyin' of consumption the Deacon would take his Bible and set by the boy's bed and read, and arger, and pray, and git all worked up and holler at the Lord as if he was as deaf as a stone post, but the boy wouldn't pay any 'tention, and one day he told his father that he did not want to go to heaven. He said he should git sick of the everlasting singin' and havin' things always jist so. Wall, that worked the Deacon up dreadfully, and the next day the boy died, and within a week the Deacon was ravin' crazy, and it took three men to hold him. He jist kept yellin' all the time about the fire and Johnny's bein' in hell. Ye see that's what comes of believin' instead of pertendin' to. Now if ye don't mind tellin', I'd like to know what kinder religion ye've hitched onto."

"Spiritualism."

"What! yes—wall—how come ye ter git inter that?"

Mrs. Grey hesitated for a moment, and then said quietly: "I could not deny the evidence of my own ears and eyes."

"No, of course not. What did ye see and hear?"

"My boy came to me one evening. I saw him plainly, and spoke to him, and he answered me. I could not possibly have been deceived, for the room was well lighted and there was no one with me but the medium. I have talked with him several times since, and also with my mother. I have also heard music from an instrument unknown to me, fill the room where my friend and I were sitting, with a wild, sweet melody I can not describe, and I knew beyond a doubt that no being in the flesh was responsible for it."

"It does my old heart good ter hear it," said Uncle Ezra, "for I have seen and heard some queer things myself."

"Are you acquainted with a medium?" asked Martha in surprise.

"Never saw but two, as I know of. One was a slim sorter chap with a breath smelling of bad whiskey, and I didn't want anything of his kind of spirits; the other was a slovenly lookin' woman creetur. I sized her up and made up my mind that none of my folks that I wanted to hear from in particular would want much to do with her, so I gave up the idee and jogged back home."

"I am sorry you were so unfortunate," began Mrs. Gray.

"Oh, it come out all right," said Uncle Ezra cheerfully. "I jist had ter work out my own salvation; that's scripter, ye know."

Mrs. Grey looked puzzled, but Martha came to the rescue: "Oh, Uncle Ezra," she said pleadingly, "please tell us some of the things you have seen and heard."

"What! you don't want to hear about such things, do ye?"

"Yes, indeed, more than anything else I want to know the truth."

"Even if 'taint the way ye've been brought up?"

"Certainly. A person who has always lived in a cellar may want to get up into the sunlight, I suppose."

"I rather guess they may; they'd be a fool if they didn't. Wall," glancing at the clock, "I guess I shall have to be makin' tracks fer home. S'posin' ye two come up ter my house ter night after the chores are done. Liddy will be purty glad ter see ye, I guess."

That evening as the shadows gathered around the stately maples crowning the eastern hillsides, Mrs. Grey and Martha made their way through the green fields sweet with the odor of violets and unrolling fern fronds, where the notes of the whip-poor-will, the hoarse croaking of the frog and the roar and gurgle of the brook blended in a joy melody. They paused unconsciously to take long breaths of the sweet, pure, life-giving air before they entered the little weather-beaten farm house where Uncle Ezra and his widowed sister Lydia were living out their simple lives together in peace and contentment.

The room Mrs. Gray and Martha entered was small but clean and cheerful. Like the most of the farm houses the plastered ceiling and the wide pine boards forming the floor seemed to a tall person to be very near each other. The small-paned windows were now concealed by white curtains and on the little table, also draped with white, burned two tallow candles set in brass candle-sticks. The second candle was in honor of her guests, for Aunt Liddy would not tolerate kerosene. Several flag-bottom chairs with patchwork cushions were drawn up before a little fireplace where some light wood was blazing, for the evening was chilly. Her guests seated and "the folks" inquired after, Aunt Liddy resumed her work upon the clouded blue sock she was knitting, and Uncle Ezra, leaning back in a chair tilted against the wall, looked at Martha and said: "So ye want I should tell ye a story, do ye? Wall, I haint much ter tell, but sech as 'tis yer welcome to it.

"'Twas forty years ago last fall that my sister Ruth died, and one night some three years after I was goin' home from a corn huskin' at one of the neighbors. There was a full moon and not a cloud in the sky. The road was kinder soft and lots of mud puddles. All at once I saw a woman walking along beside me. I didn't think anything funny that I had not heard her step, but thought it was queer she didn't speak. She had on a dark colored dress, and a large plaid shawl thrown over her head and it covered her shoulders and arms, only one wrist and the hand that held together the shawl showed write in the moon light. As I was watchin' her and wonderin' whether I better speak or not, she turned and looked right at me. I saw her face more plainly than I see yours now, and it was my sister Ruth. Wall, you might a knocked me down real easy. I guess I made purty hard work of breathin' for a spell. Then I remembered reading a story about a man that saw a ghost walkin' with him one night and he was so scairt he run for all he was worth, but the ghost run as fast as he could, and come to find out 'twas nothin' but a straw hangin' over his eye, and foolish as the idee was, I stopped and made sure there was nothing over my eyes.

"Then I went on and the woman went on, too. I turned out on one side of the road to keep out of a mud puddle and she turned out on the other side. Wall, it jist beat me! I'd hearn tell of ghosts but they was always dressed in white and looked spooky, but this woman had on a dark dress and wore a plaid shawl! 'Whoever heard of a ghost with a plaid shawl on?' says I to myself. I tried to speak but I could not make a sound. Then I stopped and looked at her and she looked straight at me. The moon shone full upon her face and as sure as I set here it was my sister Ruth. As I stood lookin' at her not knowin' what ter do, she was gone—jist vanished right before my eyes without movin' one step.

"Wall, that affair set me ter thinkin', I tell ye. I told my brother Jim 'bout it and he said that 'cordin' ter scripter, folks did come back. Jim was great, handlin' the Bible, but he had some curious idees. 'Cordin' to the Bible, says he, angels are spirits and it don't nowhere say they are not the spirits of dead folks either. He said Moses and 'Lijah came back long after they died and there warnt a mite of any reason for thinkin' other folks couldn't come back if they wanted ter. He said he didn't know what ailed all the preachers that made them so mad if you talked any sich thing, unless 'twas because they were afraid folks would get ter b'lievin' something different from their preachin' and they would be out of a job. Wall, Jim and I talked it over for quite a spell and we couldn't see but one sensible way and that was ter b'lieve it was Ruth come back, and so we let that settle it. I expected I would see her again, but I didn't. I guess she only wanted ter set me ter thinkin'. Sometimes when you have set a feller ter thinkin' you've done enough.

"Some time later on I was drivin' some cows erlong the road. 'Twas early in the mornin' and most folks was abed. It had rained hard in the night and the road was washed clean. I got erlong to a place in the road where there was a steep bank up on one side and down on the other. The sun, jist risin', shone through a notch in the hills full upon the road so that every little stone and mark was plain. All at once them critters stopped stalk still and looked at a spot right in the middle of the road. I hoeyed and hollered, but they didn't pay a mite of 'tention to me, but jist kinder circled round that spot in the middle of the road and snuffed and stared. I stepped in between two heifers, and stared, too, but I couldn't see a blamed thing but the bare road washed clean, and not a track on it. My eyes were good and so was the sunshine, but the critters had the better of me that time, and there they stood with their eyes er stickin' out and their hair standin' on end till all at once they jumped right up inter the air and swingin' around up onter the bank at the left so as not to touch that spot in the road they ran up the hill as if the old boy was after them. I follered after and for some reason I was careful not to touch that spot in the road. Now all this proves but one thing and that is that them critters saw something invisible to me.

A SPIRIT MESSAGE.

Spirit Bands and Their Work for Mankind.

It is my desire to tell you something about spirit bands and their work.

There are many bands of spirits and angels which have come together for the purpose of elevating mankind, although all do not have this object, as I will endeavor to explain later.

They also are formed to help those in the lower circles of spirit life, for we cannot confine our mission work entirely to those on earth; for there are so many that need our help in the spirit life as well.

The great work accomplished by these bands of spirits and angels you cannot fully comprehend, but I will try to give you a little light on the subject.

When a newly-born spirit enters spirit life, and they are advanced enough in spiritual thought, and their earth life has been such as to enable them to pass into the fifth circle of spirit life they are looked upon as being in a condition to join some of these bands.

It is in spirit life as it is on earth, those in the same grade or school differ in their tastes, desires and hopes; all have not the faculty or ability to work successfully in the same direction, so they seek to know of the wise spirits or leaders what is best for them to strive earnestly to do.

It is for them to strive earnestly to help those not as advanced as they are in the spirit life, or to perform missions of love to those on earth.

Now if a spirit is capable, or if conditions are favorable for them to control the hand or speaking faculties or clairvoyant powers of some earthly medium, they then join some band which has come together to give to those on earth the truths which exist in the spirit land.

There are those who have been long in the spirit world, and those who are constantly coming who are anxious to give to loved ones some message of comfort, but the magnetic conditions are such that they are unable to do so but they do not become discouraged or disheartened, but join a band whose mission is to come as ministering spirits, and although there is no visible manifestation they accomplish by their unseen presence much that affords great comfort, and many times wrong motives are checked and crimes averted by their silent power.

There are many who are constantly passing through the change called death, who have never had a thought of spiritual things, their lives have been of the lowest kind and they were most at home in surroundings of the same nature; of course they retain the habits of earth life, and for this reason are not in a condition to desire anything better after passing through what is called death.

They cherish the same desires to help on, by wrong influences, crimes which they have committed on earth.

So you see there must be helpers for these poor unfortunate ones.

They must be brought out of the low conditions in which they are found to a higher plane in which they can find happiness for themselves and for those with whom they mingle.

Many of you on earth may think that it lies entirely with you to make the conditions right in order that we of the higher life may commune with you and teach you. Such is not the case, and in so doing help us, but we of the higher life must become acquainted with natural laws so as to know how to accomplish the best results.

It is when the mediums and we in the spirit life have learned and work in harmony with these laws that we are enabled to be successful in giving unto the world our teachings.

There are many that come into the spirit life who do not believe in spirit return or communion, with those on earth, and so when they enter into this life, they do not attempt to return, and many times they do not so much as wish to make the attempt to do so.

The reason I will try to explain to you.

There are many who selfishly look for their own comfort and ease, if this can be attained they do not worry what becomes of others; many times we see this even in families on earth, the members of which would be as closely united in spirit as in the ties of relationship.

Such spirits when they find that they have passed through the change of death, and are safely landed on the other side, feel satisfied and have no desire to make the effort themselves, or for others, too, to reach those they have left behind, knowing perhaps that all they might accomplish would be ridiculed and the thought of spirit return be laughed to scorn.

But they say, heaven, as far as they have already found it, is by no means, like that locality which is portrayed by most of the preachers on earth.

Such expressions we often hear, but we try to lead such to a better understanding of what they should try to accomplish. Truly, friends, the great work that has been accomplished and that which is being done each day, and its lasting benefit for humanity cannot be fully realized by you of earth.

Friends, I have endeavored to tell you in a plain way of our work, trusting that it may be of interest to some of the seekers after truth for which this is given.

"It has been written, So shall my word be, that goeth out of my mouth; it shall not return to me void, but it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it."

By that I mean that the truths which I have just given unto you of earth, will not return to me void, because he which received this will place it before the world, that those who will, can read and be benefited thereby, and from that reason it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it, which is unto those who inhabit the earth.

Woman from a Freethought Standpoint---Trenchant Thoughts on an Important Subject.

The following article written by a critical Freethinker will be read with deep interest, illustrating as it does the status of woman in Pagan and in Christian Countries.

In the issue of Nov. 8 of the Chicago Record-Herald, F. C. Weed asks one or two questions to which I wish to give attention.

His little pleasantry, in opening, of calling me insane because I disagree with priestly dispensation is quite characteristic of the Christians who lived during the "dark ages," though, had such declaration of insanity been made at that time the victim would have been burned at the stake along with innumerable other heretics. For be it remembered that after the church had been established the schools of medical science were closed and the "insane" were cured by prayer and the laying on of hands, with the rack as a persuader, or, if the case proved obstinate, the stake inevitably cured the "insane" patient. So I am very glad indeed that my article excited only "pity" instead of the practical vindictiveness of past centuries.

Mr. Weed recommends the study of the condition of women in China, Turkey, India and Africa and then in countries "where the Bible is recognized as containing the highest known rules of conduct." Now that is just what I have done, and I find that in southern Europe, where the priest with Bible in hand rules women more despotically than in any pagan country, and that in Italy, Spain and Portugal, those intensely Christian countries, the degradation and subjection of women is the wonder and regret of travelers with human impulses.

Marriages in India.

Bishop Henry Codman Potter, head of the Episcopal Church in the United States, in his book "The East of To-day and To-morrow," says there is great misapprehension in America about the customs of early marriages in India and the burning of widows and that the accounts of these things are much exaggerated and ought to be corrected. Swami Abehananda says that widow burning became prevalent after the British invasion, when widows threw themselves on the funeral pyre of their husbands to save themselves from a worse fate at the hands of Christian soldiers. The child marriages of the Orient also finds a parallel in this country in the sect calling themselves the disciples of Jesus Christ, who seal a boy and a girl to each other at a very early age. Then the marriageable age for girls of 12 years in England is not to be boasted of, even though they be bargained off by male relatives. And what of the purchase of titles?

The story of the sacrifice of female children in India and China is feelingly dwelt upon by missionaries; but we are told by unprejudiced historians that the children consigned to the so-called sacred rivers are already dead and the parents are too poor to furnish other burial. If the female children are destroyed it is only from the economic necessity of supply and demand. Could any stories of the wrongs of women in the Orient surpass the horrible details of the traffic in female flesh by England and Germany and Austria for foreign countries, for lumber camps and resorts in cities? These are all Christian countries, the church supported by the state and its tenets taught in the schools. Could the condition of Chinese women in pagan China and India have been worse before than it has been since the invasion by Russia, England, America and their missionaries? I do not think so.

Church and Humanity.

Mr. Weed attempts to explain that the mistakes of the church as a body should not be charged against the teachings of Jesus Christ, but "By their fruits ye shall know them." If the church has perpetuated false doctrine it must accept the consequences. After centuries of its teaching we find its adherents breaking every bond of humanity, overriding every barrier of equity and silencing any attempt at investigation of other systems or the practice of other methods. After ages of the teaching that we are to prepare for a home in heaven at the expense of earth life it is not to be supposed that economic or social conditions would receive any attention, hence in a recent report we read of 40,000 homeless men in Chicago. But why worry about them when they have the assurance that the bearer of the cross here is the wearer of the crown hereafter? The warden of a western penitentiary says that his experience among convicts has proved to him that the teaching of vicarious atonement has been the means of producing many criminals. Why should they try to be upright citizens when the thief on the cross was promised a place in paradise by simple belief? When exploiters of labor, such as the child slavery in Southern mills, sit high in the sanctuary, and when we are told by the highest authority—the vicegerent of God, the pope—that the poor should be satisfied with their condition, it shakes our confidence in the beneficence of Christian teaching, and we are willing to accept the statement of a former British consul to China in favor of paganism. He said: "I have lived in China twenty years, but have seen more degradation and drunkenness and misery in London in one day than in all my years of residence in China." This is not so unfavorable for the celestials as the missionaries would have us believe, and when such a condition exists for men in Christendom it is still worse for women.

Conditions Desirable.

A recent writer on China says: "In many parts of the empire women hold places of respect and influence, and we know that the mothers of Confucius and Buddha directed their education from infancy, and these great teachers have more adherents than all the other religious of the world. What of the mother of Jesus?

It seems plain that the condition of pagan women is just as desirable as that of Christian women, but the difference is that Christianity makes the claim of having bettered their condition and takes unto itself the credit which belongs wholly to the advance of scientific investigation, to commercial interchange of nations and the indefatigable work of reformers, and let us hope that long ere another two thousand years have pased they will have worked out a more just method, and again I say, if the teaching of Jesus Christ has given us "our present conceptions of life and duty," then let us be pagans.

The Views of an Egyptian Spirit.

EGO AND GUIDE.

It was morning by mortal reckoning, near the hour of 3 o'clock. The guide interpreted to me the pale roseate shades in the eastern sky proclaiming the glorious dawn. The rapport was of the nature wherein the ego or self vouchsafed to question the stately guide. And thus prefaced her remarks and inquiries to the spirit:

"You are the utterly proud and deeply dignified Egyptian, Taurus by name, and a great Mogul who deigns ever to appear to this medium in these trances.

"Where perplexity and distrust have assailed the children of mortals, you, my guide, have countless times sent the downcast one away with renewed hope. And not infrequently the over confident one away in profound meditation.

"When first my soul-self beheld thee, O Taurus, it was in far-away Egypt, in the entrance of a white-pillared temple of worship, among others of thy race and degree, watching the passing by of the glorious Christ Jesus of nineteen hundred years agone. My attention was first attracted to thy deeply thoughtful and expressive countenance and the wondrous depths of sympathy shining as a heavenly light thereon, as the fate of the gentle savior seemed foreshadowed to thee in that innate mysterious language not of the tongue but of the perceptive faculties of sensitiveness rarefied by esoteric influences from other realms and other spheres. In this realization of mediumistic powers of expression to which my soul awoke, thou wast the kind and patient one ever lucid to my growing sensitiveness, until thou hast indeed become a part of my better self, the soul.

"Now I will question thee upon simple topics over which the mortal is daily wondering and stumbling; light and frivolous some of them may seem to thee, yet deign to answer me, as these many unsolved quandaries set my nerves on edge, rendering me cynical and tired of earth life.

"Why does every man and every woman believe that his or her own particular share of troubles and trials is greater than those of any one else, yet in no sense of the word would they individually exchange lots and destinies with their neighbors?"

Ans. "The sun shineth upon the just and upon the unjust. Mortal is prone to desire sympathy from fellow mortals, and for the attaining of this result will resort to exaggeration and even fiction, while he innately knoweth that the true state of affairs is overdrawn and unjust to the all-wise Creator, the giver of good and never of evil."

When this beautiful truth issued from the fine lips of the guide, a silvery mist coming from the same source seemed to permeate the surrounding atmosphere as well as the trance medium, so that for a while, contemplating the efflorescent phenomenon, the scent of Eastern lilies seemed all about, as she was lost in admiration of the simple yet far-reaching explanation.

"O stately Taurus, is the body of light which mortals designate as the sun, the centre of electrical energy?"

Ans. The sun is not alone the centre of electrical energy as far as it is recognized upon this plane, but the very centre of all life. This magnificent sun source, energy and power is the cause of life and life everlasting. Before the sun was, man and all things animate were not existent. To the mortal it represents or should represent God, if he would but reason upon it. The Creator of the sun is the unthinkable or God we blindly worship, who was never seen, but is, forever and ever.

"This electrical energy is the perpetual motion for which deep thinkers have striven and persevered to reach out after and grasp, ultimately to perceive their littleness, their insignificance of personality, and utter inability to furnish means of operation on the small scale of their apparatus. Magnificent stupendity is necessary to the formation of perpetual motion.

"This electrical sun energy by one single stroke or flash under right conditions, namely lightning, absorbs soul from matter as nothing else thinkable can do.

"Were there no cellars or sunless holes in the earth, disease would be unknown. Water from sunny springs would be drunk and ice housed away for months in darkness never used as food, only to intensify summer heat to the imaginative, thus subjecting him who seeks comfort to dangerous extremes for which he was never planned or created."

"And again, my sympathetic guide, in the nature of healthful colors: What are those which would be most conducive to the health and consequently happiness of the earth people?"

Ans. Soothing colors which involuntarily draw electrical rays from nature's source, and which may not be unpleasantly perceptible upon the fleshly nerves, are colors or tints which should be adopted throughout the sun's cycles. Black should under no condition be worn. To wear black in token of mourning, only draws the death germ to and through families. Very frequently several deaths follow consecutively in families where for many years all were safe, for resorting to these somber shades in which to publish their bereavement.

"Dark colors are depressing as the cloud-hung November sky, which cause mortals to despair, because of having for a time severed the supply of electrical life principle for joy and laughter. And those habitually depressed and imaginative become dilated upon imaginary slights and discourtesies. For illustration, should rainbow and evening sky show forth mere degrees of blackness, O, the direful effects on minds."

"And now, noble Taurus, the pressure of the trance state upon my brain becomes very great, almost unbearable, so I must hasten; this double control of ego and guide is too deep. What more terrifying to the uninitiated and equally as expressive could appropriately take the place of the word Spiritualism?"

Ans. "That word or namt, Medium Louise, has had more power to retard the universal acceptance of spirit return than any one word has ever had to nearly annihilate systematic progress in this grandest and only truthful version of the hereafter for all time. It should be Inspirationalism, alpha and omega."

"And now give me a little poem made out of 'Nothing.' Can you do it, noble guide?"

Ans. "Yes."

"Do not mind Louise's smiling, will you?"

Ans. No. Taurus has learned to do many seemingly impossible things."

Nothing.

Once a little tiny "Nothing,"
Scrap of summer evening breeze,
Sprang to life amid sweet blossoms,
'Neath the rifts of sheltering trees.
Just a tiny breath so wee,
Started by the wing of bee,
Then in ecstasy of living,
Timid glanced, and full of fear,
Hovering near the fragrant violets—
"O, how lovely to be here!"
And those dazzling beads of dew,
Came they from the sky so blue?
Vanishing the woodland pathway,
Carpeted in living green,
Past the dark old forest trees.
Spying there the silvery sheen
Of a summer moonlit lake,
"Nothing" will a fine sail take.
In the boat a form, O dear!
Sad, and deeply torn by sorrow,
Sighing deep and falling tear.
"Nothing" gathered up his sigh,
As it swiftly floated by.
On the uplands, down the vales,
"Nothing" full of wonder sails,
Then a garden shadowy, fragrant,
Paused "Nothing," the little breath.
Wondering strangely, saw one kneeling,
Childish face and pale as death,
Cold and set as chiseled stone.
From her lips it caught a moan,
Oft-enforced so, broader, stronger,
As the summer days grew hot,
Little "Nothing" grew, a storm-cloud,
Death, destruction—well, why not?

Doings and Status of the Summerland Society.

Thinking the numerous readers of The Progressive Thinker would be interested in hearing from our Summerland Spiritual society and workings spiritual, financial and otherwise, I have taken the liberty to jot down its condition at the present time of writing. The bazaar recently held in their spacious hall was a complete success and must have netted them some hundreds of dollars, besides affording amusement and pleasure to a large attendance of all classes of people.

The ladies of the Mite Society, attached to this society, were the instigators of the project, and instrumental in carrying out the work in every detail. The ladies deserve great credit for their untiring efforts and zealous service, not only in contributing liberally of artistic articles, useful and otherwise, for sale, as well as in making the fair such a social and enjoyable success. To mention all the ladies' names that so liberally helped make the affair such a success would take up too much space in your valuable paper, but of the number I am constrained to mention Mrs. Lees, Mrs. Parsons, Mrs. Baisley, Mrs. Shields, Mrs. Smith. Of that number the first named lady, Mrs. Lees did great service as a decorator, as with assistance she converted the large auditorium, dining-room and rostrum into a veritable paradise. The auditorium will seat six hundred people and the whole vast height was converted into a garden of tropical verdure. The California pampa, a plumb-like product, that grows abundantly in marshy districts, was artistically used and their feathery plumes, colored in all the hues of the from the ceiling among the jets of electric lights.

A sumptuous banquet was served in the dining-room in the afternoon to a large number of participants, and the whole concluded with a masked ball in the evening, which was enjoyed by old and young alike. The music both afternoon and evening was furnished by a fine string band and interspersed with songs and music by Prof. J. S. Lillie, who presided at the piano.

This society probably is the best equipped and supplied with financial means of any one on the Pacific coast, and owning their own hall, with all conveniences and organ and piano, has much the advantage over some others less provided for. Besides it has a large membership of interested workers, with a leader, Mrs. Spring; whose ability as teacher and moral worth, make the society a strong one and growing intellectually and spiritually. The Progressive Thinker is largely patronized here and has the largest circulation of any Spiritual paper published and is eagerly looked for from week to week in our Summerland hamlet.

BISHOP A. BEALS.

THE HAUNTED PALACE.

In the greenest of our valleys,
By good angels tenanted,
Once a fair and stately palace—
Radiant palace—reared its head.
In the monarch Thought's dominion,
It stood there;
Never seraph spread a pinion.
Over fabric so fair.

Banners yellow, glorious, golden,
On its roof did float and flow
(This—all this—was in the olden
Time long ago),
And every gentle air that dallied,
In that sweet day,
Along the ramparts plumed and pallid,
A winged odor went aawy.

Wanderers in that happy valley
Through two luminous windows saw
Spirits moving musically,
To a lute's well tuned law,
Round about a throne where, sitting,
Porphyrogene,
In state his glory well befitting
The ruler of the realm was seen.

And all with pearl and ruby glowing
Was the fair palace door,
Through which came flowing, flowing,
flowing,
And sparkling everymore,
A troop of Echoes, whose sweet duty
Was but to sing,
In voices of surpassing beauty,
The wit and wisdom of their king.

But evil things, in robes of sorow,
Assailed the monarch's high estate
(Ah, let us mourn, for never morrow Shall dawn upon him desolate!)
And round about his home the glory
That blushed and bloomed,
Is but a dim-remembered story
Of the old-time entombed.

And travelers now within that valley
Through the red-litten windows see
Vast forms that move fantastically
To a discordant melody;
While, like a ghastly rapid river,
Through the pale door
A hideous throng rush out forever,
And laugh—but smile no more.

—Edgar Allen Poe.

LIFE.

Life! I know not what thou art,
But know that thou and I must part;
And when, or how, or where we met,
I own to me's a secret yet.
But this I know: when thou art fled,
Where'er they lay these limbs, this head,
No clod so valueless shall be
As all that then remains of me.

* * * * * * *

Life! We've been long together
Through pleasant and through cloudy weather;
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear;
Perhaps 'twill cost a sigh, a tear;
Then steal away, give little warning,
Choose thine own time;
Say not good-night—but in some brighter clime
Bid me good morning.

KNOCKED OUT!

The Word "Reverend" Must Take a Back Seat.

In The Progressive Thinker of Sept. 26, 1903, there is an article signed Daniel W. Hull, with the heading, "Ecclesia-Phobia, a Prevalent Disease Among Spiritualists." There is but one paragraph in the article referred to that I shall animadvert upon. He says: "The word 'Reverend' also excites the ire of these ecclesia-hating brethren," and further on he states, "It is not even a Bible term." Now my recollection is, that it is a Bible term, and is used only once in that book, the passage where it occurs being, "Holy and Reverend is His name," referring to what people variously denominate God, Deity, a Supreme Being. What does the word "Reverend" denote? In my opinion it is expressive of some thing or person to be looked up to with awe and reverence. The priesthood having arrogated to themselves the attributes of deity, adopted the title of reverend and have from time to time added to it, as "Very, Reverend," "Most Reverend," "His Eminence," His Holiness, Rev. Dr., etc. I think about all of the preachers here are "Rev. Dr.," and we have at least one "Very Rev." and probably more. I do not see any necessity for Spiritualists apeing the priesthood in this respect. We do not read of the Rev. Dr. Jesus Christ, nor Rev. Paul, D. D., but we do hear of Rev. Dr. Ada Blank, and Rev. Dr. Nellie So and So, the Rev. Dr. John Smith, and so on ad libitum, ad nauseam.

There is only one advantage that I have heard of in the use of the name "Reverend," and that is that special favors are often shown to this privileged class, in the way of obtaining reduced rates on railroads and other public conveyances—half-rate tickets, etc.

Mr. Hull says: "For years I had the same senseless prejudice, and disowned the title whenever applied to me." It is a pity he had not continued to disown it, for its adoption was certainly in the line of retrogression and not in that of progression; a sort of going back to the flesh pots of Egypt.

Mr. Hull cites the fact that Brother Peebles uses the word "doctor" with a great deal of unction. In days of old the word doctor was generally applied to a person who diagnosed diseases and administered physic to the human family. Now, when we hear the word "doctor," unless we know the man or woman, we can't tell whether it applies to a horse doctor, an allopath, homeopath, or any other kind of a path; to a faith doctor, a tooth carpenter, or a druggist, to a doctor of law, divinity, philosophy or what not. It has become about as meaningless a term as reverend, but is not subject to the same objection.

CHAINED TO MY CHAIR.

Bound to the house, the room, my chair!
To my best loved friends a helpless care.
Seeing my powers fail one by one
I am now, with life's race well nigh run.
Chained to my chair.

The body that once served me well indeed,
A prison house now mocking every need,
Full of suffering, of dread, of fear,
Of what use is it as it holds me here
Chained to my chair?

I bid it release me that I may soar
To heights of bliss, where, nevermore
Shall I know the anguish that fills my soul
As life's surging billows over me roll,
Chained to my chair.

Helpless and hopeless a man must feel
While he sits day by day as in bonds of steel;
For one who lives and loves and fears,
Is there torture worse than to be held here
Chained to my chair?

Hold me not, friends, in this prison abode,
Help me to cast off this wearisome load.
My glad spirit sings, on the bounds of Life's sea,
With me rejoice, I'm no longer to be
Chained to my chair.

Spiritual Visions and Instructions.

Concerning Truth and Error of Specific Biblical Statements.

On the evening of November 7, 1903, I was alone in my room reading when an unusual brightness suddenly appeared and a very happy feeling came over me. As I looked up to see the cause, I beheld a group of bright angels. They saluted me in royal fashion, then said: "We are messengers sent to give a message to you for world's people, because so many sincere petitions have been sent on high by a large number of Earth's dwellers, asking for truth, the full truth, concerning creation, the fall of man and his consequent redemption through Jesus the Christ, as recorded in the so-called Christian Bible.

"The first question refers to Genesis, first chapter, first verse, and reads: 'In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth.' The real truth concerning this statement is, that it is a fragment of the whole truth. Some of these early scripts were destroyed, others inaccurately translated and transcribed and freely mixed with error by unripe worldly scholars. It is an eternal truth that all creative processes have their purposed beginnings and endings. They are and ever have been the labors of high spiritual intelligences under God. These masters of great wisdom and skill are supremely required to draft plans in strict accord with the constitution of the universe and the inherent law of the cosmos.

These provisions and rules for labor are so various in their co-operative measures of the refined and spiritualized force and substance and that which is to be evolved from the crude substances and raw materials, and during such named process, transformed into spiritual substances and forces by being incorporated into forms from grade to grade according to nature's own codes. This needs more explanations later. At present our message is, that the sentence, "In the beginning," is correct in the sense referred to and means exactly the beginning of the present eternity or labor process. The procedure of the chapter is error in this wise—the Supreme God did not appear, nor speak; is not seen nor heard, except in his issued decrees of light and power, thus in his works; but instead, the chieftain of this compact of wise spirits called in the records, the Creative Masters, counseled with his compeers, enumerating the proceedings of these labor processes in the evolutionary order.

These advancements are gauged by the increase and widening of the vibratory circles and the chemical reproductive deposits from nature's crude germ seeds multiplied by nature's chemistry and supplemented by germ seeds cast off from the infinite ocean of life. Thus form life is started. By the processes of involution is evolution made possible.

When these preparations and advancements on nature's plan permitted that man be brought forth on the stage of action in this world drama, then, as recorded in the 26th verse of the same chapter this Lord or chieftain counseled his compeers thus: Let us form man in our image, after our likeness. This was an innovation in those labor processes. All former processes of this kind were conducted strictly in accord with natural science. Man was not provided with the divine nature and spiritual attributes but was an evolutionary product in the corporeal order of gradations and was required to attain to this higher state by diligent mental action and goodly bodily service rendered to his fellow sojourners.

Those rules are yet in operation, but those of former eternities not having been provided with the divine nature as those of this eternity are, this higher nature or change was conferred upon them at the highest corporeal finite plane and the lowest of the infinite or spiritual planes. There all who had successfully reached those heights were changed from their mortal forms and natures to those of the immortal. This step then insured individual immortality forever; but there was much failure in bringing the required number of humans up to this degree of fitness during which corporeal labor processes, which was very grievous to those masters so engaged, hence the long and serious contemplations which resulted thus: To make man in the image of God, to create him a spiritual being from the start and provide him with a double system, the strictly mortal and the spiritual. For this reason all who are born under this plan are marked in the higher records as divine humans.

Here is where the error of the fall of man was introduced by unripe worldly teachers. The divine, conscious life principle or immortal ego thus incorporated into the crude earth conditions had thus a descent, for the purpose of learning lessons of value in these matter realms and acquiring through this outer garb and mechanism, individual immortal tangibility. These spirit bodies are formed from the finer substances drawn in through the outer mechanism, even as the infant is formed, only the process differs and in time, will be fully explained.

But to proceed, each soul born under this present labor process or plan, is provided with an individual charter. Upon this chart, all marks of degrees are stamped. The higher marks of the immortal man are plain and thereto the acquired fitness must correspond ere all that is guaranteed by said charter can be claimed by the individual.

These charters are also the guarantee of each one's divine birthright and therefore heirship to all the wealth of the universe. Having thus faintly pointed out some of these truths which belong to all humanity, and that the fall of man was an error, but was instead, a descent of the spiritual ego, or conscious divine life principle, we shall now state further, that this immortal man being thus subjected to earth's rule while incorporated in mortal form, it was foreseen that the earth conditions would wield a blinding influence over him, that is, the mortal man would hold predominance over the spiritual to a detrimental degree, the spirit or God-man being under the necessity of manifesting through the outer form would be silenced and in many instances kept a prisoner in this form of clay; the outer man thus becoming a trespasser not only on his own higher self, but also on the rights of others, would imperil his chances of improvement as divinely purposed, and so be found unworthy of his royal rights when called back from his corporeal sojourn to his immortal home. Therefore it was then and there deemed good to provide a remedy. A redemptive clause was incorporated in this creative plan. It was no afterthought, it is legal and its methods of operation are grand, but very different from that recorded in said Bible and taught as truth; but we cannot state this plan at this time, being admonished to return to the first question and briefly state that whereas all such creative processes have their marked corporeal beginnings, so also have they their endings, when all that in such plan comprehended as to crude substance, etc., has been duly incorporated and transformed to the required fitness for use on higher than corporeal planes. But this ending by no means has any reference whatsoever to the end of the world. Nay; each time before such a process reaches its legal corporeal limits and labor parts, other masters begin new processes in the same way and all these works go on in their eternal successions. These changes do not interfere with the order of procedure of all these universal operations. There are millions, yea, trillions of worlds, or as they are termed, world systems, out in eternal space, all connected yet separate in so far that these masters governing each of these separate processes have by supreme decree, the rights granted them to remain the active supervisors over their respective dominions forever. Hence the many Lords, but only one God over all.

It is a truth that all which is created or evolved from the world-stuff that is contained in the subcosmic reservoirs and is supplemented by induction from pure spiritual and refined substances from the ocean of life above, endures forever. All these worlds and their systems of co-ordinated spheres and solar machinery, all that is outwrought thus, man included, endures forever in states of constantly increasing refinement and spirituality and correspondingly enlarged possessions and happiness. This is truth.

The plan of redemption will be given later." So saying, they disappeared as they had come.

LAKE HELEN NEWS.

The Sunny, Southern Cassadaga Camp.

Husband and I, accompanied by that staunch Spiritualist, Mrs. B. Sully, left the Empire State, December 1, for this sunny clime, but not in time to avoid a blizzard and the enjoyment of a sleighride. Arrived at Lake Helen, December 5, and found a contrast indeed.

There are either just completed or in process of construction seven new cottages that have not yet been occupied. The Apartment House is pretty well filled, but there will be vacancies as soon as Messrs. Littlefield and Lower, of Maine, move into their cottages which they hope to complete soon.

Brigham Hall is still vacant, and there are rooms in the hotel besides some that can still be obtained in cottages. The weather is beautiful. The orange crop fine. I can think of no more beautiful sight than the beautiful peach orchards and orange groves the traveler sees as he nears the Lake Helen station. The peach trees just beginning to bloom and the orange trees laden with beautiful fruit. Oranges range all the way from 5 cents to 20 cents per dozen. The 5-cent ones are small and are called the ruby orange; they are very sweet. Grape fruit is 50 and 60 cents per dozen.

Mrs. Ellen Fisher, of Burnham, has the dining-hall again this year, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, of Dunkirk, N. Y., and Mr and Mrs. Cardot, of Burnham, N. Y. Mrs. Helen Sage again has charge of the hotel and has it all ready for occupancy, a few of the rooms being already taken. It would be well for those proposing to come for the season to obtain rooms in advance.

Although we fully believe the thought is among the people to build winter homes here, and have a place to come to if they desire to come every winter; if not they can rent their places and thus get a good interest upon money invested.

This is fully six weeks before the real opening of the camp, but meetings have been held the last two Sundays. The first Sunday a Mrs. Giddings, who, with her husband and George P. Colby, worked under spirit direction in selecting this place for a camp, gave a very interesting history of it, which with dates added that Mr. Colby can give, would be a very valuable addition to the History of Spiritualism that Brother Lyman C. Howe is writing under the appointment of the N. S. A.

The last Sunday, Mrs. Carrie Van Duzen, of Lily Dale, N. Y., was the speaker.

I will not go into detail in this letter about camp life, but try as far as possible to give the names of those now upon the grounds:

upon the grounds: E. W. Bond and wife, and Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Palmer, Willoughby, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. Ed Spencer and son Herbert, of Lake Helen Fla.; Miss Meta Paxon, North Collins, N. Y.; Mr. Littlejohn and sister, Mrs. Barnum, Seneca Falls, N. Y.; M. H. Clark, East Jeffery, N. H.; Miss Rose Buchanan, Lake Helen; Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Sherman, Willoughby, O.; Geo. Bartholomew and wife, Buffalo, N. Y.; Miss Josie Botsford, Little Valley, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Baker, Montpelier, Ind.; Mr. and Mrs. James D. White, Lake George, N. Y.; Mrs. McGarvey, Toronto, Canada; Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Lower, Detroit, Maine; Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Littlefield, Belfast, Maine; Leroy S. Libby, Belfast, Maine; Mr. and Mrs. Richard McDonald, Toronto, Can.; Mrs. C. C. Bacon, Lake Brady, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Graves, Oberlin, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. Giddings; Mrs. H. J. Van Liew, South Bend, Ind.; Herbert Hollowell, Lake Helen; A. A. Butler and wife, Bricksville, Ohio; Rachel Bryan, Grass Creek, Ind.; H. S. Twing and wife, Westfield, N. Y.; Horace Kellogg and wife, Lake Brady, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. Amora Carrigue, Pawtucket, R. I.; Mrs. Eliza Philbrook, Boston, Mass.; Mrs. Vogt, Newark, N. J.; Mrs. Witters,—, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Cardot, Burnham, N. Y.; Mrs. Ellen M. Fisher, Burnham, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, Dunkirk, N. Y.; Mrs. Helen Sage, Lily Dale, N. Y.; Mrs. Elizabeth Clark, Elmira, N. Y.; Mrs. Carrie Van Duzen, Lily Dale, N. Y.; Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, Lily Dale, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Wheeler, Waltham, Mass.; Mertan Weaver, Lake Helen; Mrs. B. Sully, Buffalo, N. Y.; Mrs. A. E. Brown and Agnes A. Perry, Danbury, Conn.; Eugene S. Strong and wife, West Hatfield, Mass.; Mrs. Sarah Law and Mrs. Myra Ring, New Bedford, Mass.; Judge J. W. Underhill, A. J. Underhill and Miss C. B. Rackle, Canton, Ohio.

Since taking the portion of the list that contained Mr. Littlejohn's name, he has passed away. He came here a year ago suffering from consumption, and it seemed for a while that the treatments he received and the climate would effect a cure. He remained all summer and made a brave fight for life, but was conquered. Mary Stewart was his faithful nurse during the summer months, but for some time past a sister, Mrs. Barnum, has been with him. He was buried here and his sister returned to her home in the east.

A BREEZY LETTER.

In Which Writer Sets in Motion the Mental Atmosphere.

To the Editor:—It has become an unwritten law with me that whenever I renew my subscription it must be accompanied by my annual "spiel." In fact, it is my only safeguard against bursting, for even now I am almost "too full for utterance."

I wish to say that the strenuosity of your paper is creating a TREMENDOUS FLURRY in our ranks, while the fair and impartial stand of its editor commends itself to every lover of fair play. I believe in AGITATION. I detest STAGNATION, and hope the good work will continue until every fraud and error is banished from our ranks.

Why should we fear debate?

The truth is what we are looking for, and truth never suffers from having the light turned on, while, if the methods we employ in building up our philosophy are so tremendously evil as to destroy both body and soul, why, we want to know it before untold thousands more of us are annihilated, and while there is yet a ghost of a chance to seek a "better way." But as regards this dire calamity, I am still a skeptical Missourian (from Vermont), and insist on being "shown."

But while I think that many of the asertions made in The Great Psychological Crime are exaggerations, still I believe the author IS HONEST in his convictions.

My own experience with trance mediums has convinced me that hypnotic control by spirits is not necessarily degrading nor destructive to individuality, and NEVER deterimental to the health when proper care is observed. I could cite several living examples, where, after years spent in bringing together again in loving communion those separated by death, the ideals and aspirations have become higher and nobler. The will-power has remained intact, and the health been improved. I have also seen mediums who had far better have LEFT MEDIUMSHIP ALONE, but I blame THEM and not the spirts for whatever has been the consequence. Let them first make sure that they "love their neighbor as themselves;" see to it that they are not slaves to any debasing habit or appetite; observe fixed hours while sitting for development, and ask for the protection of wise and good spirits at all such times, and I will guarantee that the results will be far from demoralizing. But there is the rub. Too many investigate for mere amusement, with no desire for the betterment of themselves or others, and by neglecting to observe the above requirements and through the invariable rule of "like attracting like," they become surrounded by IGNORANT AND VICIOUS SPIRITS, and, as one has aptly said, "the last state of that man is worse than the first." There may be other things to be taken into consideration—I cannot say.

If some competent Spiritualist would write a book of instructions for investigators, pointing out the dangers that mediums are surrounded by and how to avoid them, he would, I believe, confer a great blessing upon the cause, and we would have less cause to blush for the conduct of some mediums and the results of their mediumship.

The replies of Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Longley, etc., were very able refutations, but I do not think that so much stress should be laid on the fact that the author of The Great Psychological Crime saw fit to withhold his name. I could not help smiling at the way Mrs. Richmond exposed herself to the fire of the enemy by criticising the author for so doing, and at the manner in which Mrs. Huntley came back at her (or her guides) for doing likewise. But I cannot blame Mrs. R. for being somewhat indignant at the author, for his charges against mediums included so large a per cent as to become almost personal. I am eagerly awaiting Mrs. Richmond's rejoinder, also the "retort courteous" of Mr. Howe to Mrs. Huntley's latest very able production.

Well, the most I can do is to say, "SICK 'EM!" to both parties, and trust that the right will prevail eventually.

I enjoy the tilts between Dr. Sweringen and Prof. Jamieson hugely. The doctor gets him in some pretty tight corners, but he always seems able to squirm out by hook or crook. Oh! but he is exasperating; and yet I like him first rate, because he always keeps such a grip on his temper, and takes all that is handed to him with smiling good nature. I hope after he has tantalized us to his heart's content he will come over and join us, and debate from the right side of the question. I have often thought that a man who could hold his own in a debate against such odds as he has would be a tower of strength if lined up on our side.

I am glad to learn that Moses Hull is recovering his health. We need him in his line of work. While not a Bible Spiritualist myself I think that better results can be obtained among the church through the efforts of Mr. Hull with his Bible than could possibly be had by other means. We need his kind and we need Mrs. Watson's kind also, and I say success to Moses and his Institute.

Spiritualism is holding its own here, if not making headway. I think the clergy are becoming more tolerant, for they have not abused us for a long time. Mrs. Isa Kaynor is delivering some sledge-hammer blows for the cause at Grand Junction, and arousing things generally. We hope she will make Glenwood a visit after she gets the people thoroughly stirred up there.

By the transition of Roy Messick, which occurred here a few weeks ago, the community has lost a most promising and estimable young man and a true Spiritualist. The services, which were conducted by Mrs. L. Agnese Moulton of Leadville, were largely attended, and the favorable comments on her eloquent discourse have not subsided yet. It was the second Spirtualist funeral in Glenwood's history. We intend to make them hear our side of the story if we have to die and make them come to our funerals to do it. But this letter is getting too prolix, so, wishing you many more years of life and strength to battle with error, frauds and hypocrisy, I will crawl back in my den for another year. Fraternally,

ECHOES OF THE SYMPOSIUM

LYMAN C. HOWE. MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY.

The Great Psychological Crime

A Comparison of Views and the Reasons Therefor.

Lyman C. Howe, the veteran Spiritualist Lecturer and Medium, a man well and favorably known as one of the foremost thinkers and writers in our ranks, will Champion the Cause of Truth as reflected in Spiritualism, while Mrs Florence Huntley, the well-known Author and Journalist, will defend all the statements in The Great Psychological Crime, which Mr. Howe will dare to assail, making a series of articles instructive, suggestive and inspiring, and which every Spiritualist should most carefully read.

LYMAN C. HOWE REPLIES TO MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY.

My Dear Madame:—Your third letter is before me. I, too, have been delayed, by a funeral call, but not like you, of any direct physical relationship. You apologize for hasty composition; but I should judge by your letter that haste had added force to your genius You express your "inability to make the connection between" my "letters and the subject matter of the book clear" in your own mind. But you admit that individual sovereignty and independent free moral agency, is a vital part of the author's theory, and that the evils of hypnotism and mediumship center there.

My reasoning has been intended to show that "independent free moral agency" does not exist. Is not that relevant to the issues in the book?

But you say I do not use the words in the sense the author does, and thus that I am guilty of unfair treatment. If he means independent of direct hypnotic CONTROL, within the meaning of his definition, and ONLY this throughout the book, wherever he uses the word, then my reasoning may not apply.

But I find on page 321 of the book a definition which seems to me to include MUCH MORE than hypnotic CONTROL. Here it is:

"Man in his normal physical and mental state of being possesses the power to act independently. This means that he is able to act uninfluenced and unaided by his fellow men."

To use your own words for accuracy, I quote from letter No. 2:

"Throughout the entire book he uses the word independent in the same sense. The independent will or volition to which he refers is that which is FREE FROM THE HYPNOTIC CONTROL OF ANOTHER INTELLIGENT WILL. This is as far as he is consid- into that many ways in which one may the subject of independence."

In our view" by his fellow men to a of the Bible, the bolsorb the "indepen- entering cases be of mind without any HYPNOTIC in the CONTROL. Indi- is constantly mouldi- ed, pressed, or intensified by the social atmosphere in which it is situated. A child may be so changed in mental habitudes as to alter the brain development by the contagion of social life.

All the moral sensibilities may be, and often are, benumbed—semi-paralyzed—by the influence of HUMAN ENVIRONMENT, without the exercise of any HYPNOTIC CONTROL, or any direct individual will. It seems to me as real and as arbitrary, when carried to its ultimate, in CONTROLLING the individuality, as any direct hypnotic processes. Now, our author teaches that "independent," as he uses the word, includes all of this. It includes all the "influences" that affect the psychometric sensitive, the IMITATIVE tendency which often masters the efforts of will, and the CONTROLLING POWER of positive thoughts when they impinge upon a receptive brain, and, by polar affinity, as completely change the conditions, qualities and modes of action in the individual life, as if directed by a hypnotic will, with intent to CONTROL. This field of influences is almost limitless, and though not including all of the causes in the Cosmos, yet covers the most significant portion of what I have been trying to analyze, and which you call irrelevant, and out of the sphere of the author's definition of "independent."

If, as you claim, the great crime consists in the subversion or usurpation of the individual prerogative of self-direction and self-assertion, it would seem to me that the PROCESSES is of less consequence than the RESULT. If the same result (the control, or prevention, of independent self-direction) be attained by the involuntary action of human environment, why is that to be regarded normal and harmless, while control by a direct process of the WILL is so wicked? You claim that it is only when one will CONTROLS another's will that the process is hypnotic. But it seems to me that such control is taking place in nearly all social, intellectual and business relations, in varying degrees. If poison is the same in all stages of manifestation, and the homeopathic dose that CURES is just as deadly as the allopathic dose that KILLS, it seems to me that it is of some importance to the patient to know when it is homeopathic, and therefore harmless and remedial, and when it is allopathic and deadly.

You assure us that the hypnotic process is in all cases CONTROL, yet a large per cent of the mediumship, variously classified by the author, gives no sign or evidence of any "CONTROL of the will, voluntary powers and sensory organism" of the medium by the will of another. Is this because the "poison" has not taken any harmful effect?

It is not clear to my mind that the control of the human will is so much more dangerous and diabolical than any other control, nor does it seem to my mind a demonstrated fact that hypnotic control is entirely a subjective process. In most cases it is induced by the cooperation of objective agencies, such as attitude, physical contact, voice, direction of the attention, and the effects also partake of both objective and subjective phenomena. A single finger may be subdued and become cold, and appear as if dead, so that a pin may be thrust through it without inflicting pain, all by a suggestion, a few passes of the operator's hand, in less time than I use in writing this sentence, and this, too, while the subject is to all appearances perfectly normal, and nothing but the one finger gives evidence of any abnormal condition. And in ten seconds it can be restored to its normal state. If this is all subjective, it is badly mixed with observable objective manifestations.

In your reference to my experience, in which DESIRE was the center of attack, you seem to me to concede all I have claimed of the controlling influence of antecedent causes. I quote:

"If, as you say, will is dependent on DESIRE, and your CONTROLS paralyze your DESIRE, do they not thereby paralyze that upon which your will depends?"

It seems to me that is good logic, and so, when any other causes act upon our lives to induce changes in our mental processes which influence our impulses, our reasonings and motives, and culminate in CONTROL of the will, the end attained is the same.

How many, or how remote, the antecedents to DESIRE were manipulated by my CONTROL for the purpose of paralyzing that on which the will depends, does not appear; nor is it seemingly important, except as you count so much on PROCESSES; and the process back of the effects on DESIRE may be the same. It would seem that it was the "POISON" all through every phase of antecedent causation, as really as when it began to show its effects upon the WILL.

It seems to me that the individual life is acted upon and CONTROLLED by a variety of influences besides the WILL of a hypnotist; and if it is the ONE central evil charged against mediumship (that it robs the medium of independent free individuality) loses its force.

Good parents CONTROL THE WILLS of their children to secure wholesome obedience for the good of the child. This is done in a variety of ways, objective and subjective. By appeals and promises and by warnings and threatenings, as well as by the positive, quiet, assertion of the WILL enforced by a sense of duty to the subject, by conscience or authority, and the receptive faith of the child.

Why should a positive will, exercised in a spirit of kindness and good intention, be so fatally poison to the subject any more than the exercise of parental control for the good of the child?

In the hypothetical shoe trade your WILL obeyed your hypnotized reason, followed by a voluntary purchase of what at first you promptly decided NOT TO BUY. What was that but a CONTROL of your WILL through the influence of another's will acting upon the reason upon which will depended?

If my DESIRE was made the antecedent in the process of reaching my WILL, why not YOUR REASON, acted upon by a strong WILL, accompanied by hypnotic suggestions, the means by which your choice was changed and your WILL CONTROLLED?

If the individual choice is handicapped by circumstances and decided by extraneous influences, surely it cannot be free and independent; and if these circumstances and influences are largely of the human nature that impinges upon us at every turn, then the case comes within the author's definition of independence ("uninfluenced").

The minute hand on the dial of a watch does not move independently. Back of the dial, out of sight, are wheels and cylinders moving at different rates and in opposite directions, impelled by the energy concealed in the mainspring; but every effect is true to its cause, and the secret power in the mainspring CONTROLS every movement of every wheel and the hands on the dial.

Your reasoning faculties may not seem to you as mechanical as a watch; but I am satisfied that they are in all respects as dependent upon antecedent and circumstantial causes, and the fiat of organic relations of body, brain and temperament, as are the hands upon the dial of the watch. This is no disparagement of your individuality, but a substantial support to its enduring integrity. If it could ignore and defy them all, and swoop out and up above all dependencies, and "GO IT ALONE," it would be a very uncertain and unstable institution. But I think it very doubtful if you could ever reason at all, untouched and uninfluenced by any and all environment.

The most surprising expression in your last letter is that "the whole tenor and effect of "my" letter seems to "you" "to be to fix in the minds of our readers the impression that there is no such thing as personal responsibility!" If our readers cannot follow my analyses to their logical results, it seems to me they ought to accept my unqualified statement as to the way I regard them; and since I have assured them and you that, as I understand it, my view of the definite and unvarying relation of cause and effect, as well in human life as in rocks and trees, is the only one that insures absolute individual responsibility, I do not see how anyone can be so stupid as to misunderstand my words.

You further say that if I "succeed in doing this," I wil have wiped from their lives the very basis of all morality." By this I take it you mean that the incentive to moral conduct is entirely in the anticipation of rewards and punishments. Do I correctly interpret your thought? It does not appear to me that even if I should unintentionally "succeed in doing" all your imagination pictures, that morality would suffer from it; for, judging others by myself, it does not appear to me that people are moral because they fear the judgment or anticipate the penalty of the law. If they are, their morality has not much permanent value. There are many who hold similar, if not identical views, whose morality does not suffer from their faith, and whose lives will compare favorably with the most pronounced votaries of the doctrine of "independent free moral agency."

If the author invariably means "independent of hypnotic control" wherever he refers to "free and independent" action, there is no issue between us on that point, but, as I have shown, his own definition does not hold to such limitation.

You think that my reference to ultimate results is foreign to anything the author contemplates in the book. On page 286 I find this:

"The ULTIMATE destiny of individual intelligence, under and in accordance with Nature's destructive principle is, so far as science knows, spiritual death. The second death. Total individual extinction, and a resolution of the individual entity back into nature's elements from which it came. AND THIS IS THE WAY OF DEATH AND THE GENESIS OF HELL."

To an uncultivated medium this reads very much as if the author WAS contemplating ULTIMATES. True, he leaves the reader to infer that possibly there may be something beyond all of this that science does not know; but as he is dealing with what he holds science does know, and it knows that the individual goes down into "utter extinction," and a "resolution of the individual entity back into Nature's elements, from which it came," there does not appear to be much of a show for that INDIVIDUAL in the resurrection. If science has traced him into utter extinction, and leaves him there, what reason is there for assuming even a possibility that the same individual will ever reappear? If he has gone down and out in total annihilation of the individual entity, I would not give half an ounce of limberger cheese for all the chances of that individual life henceforth and forever.

Surely my use of the word ultimate did not contemplate anything beyond that. Hence it seems to me the author does consider ultimates in the same sense that I do, and carries them even further than anything I have contemplated. In regard to the "destructive principle of nature in individual life," you charge me with denying that there is any destruction at all! You represent it that I regard ALL processes CONSTRUCTIVE, and you present several fine illustrations of your thought to show the results of destruction. Did I not recognize destruction and death as facts in Nature? But my point was, and is, that ALL OF THESE TEMPORARY MANIFESTATIONS ARE ESSENTIAL FACTORS IN THE EVOLUTION OF INDIVIDUAL LIFE.

All of the destructive processes in Nature seem to be the agents of individual evolution. If Nature can be supposed to think and plan, it would seem that through all the ages of organic expression she has been aiming at the individualization of man. Life and death, construction and destruction, have cooperated to maintain the progressive manifestation of individualism. To this, it seems, all outward changes contribute. Whatever gets in the way of the evolution of individual life, must die or be destroyed, that the one supreme purpose may be fulfilled. If you object to the recognition of purpose or plan in Nature, the TENDENCY is the same. All of the processes of progress in the order of Nature seem to center in individualization, and they do not stop with the maturity of outward forms.

When a structure has fulfilled its highest possibility, it decays and disintegrates as a physical form, and in the light of Spiritual revelation it looks as if such decay IS NOT INDIVIDUAL DESTRUCTION, but a process for removing obstructions that the individual life may continue to advance in spite of all obstacles.

Every illustration you offer to show the destructive principle in individual life, it seems to me, confirms my position. For instance: "There is something in Nature which causes an acorn to sprout and the tree to develop and grow to its seeming maturity. This the author calls the constructive principle of Nature in individual life. What do you call it?" Ans.: I call it evolution of individuality, which employs this process of construction to serve its ends.

There is something in Nature which causes the same tree in due course of time to decay, die, disintegrate and disappear as an individual entity. The author names this "The Destructive principle of Nature in individual life. What do you call it?" Answer: I call it another manifestation of evolution, in which destruction of the devitalized form of the visible tree is indispensable to the continued advancement of Spiritual life beyond the limits set to the visible oak. It is the same principle of individual unfoldment which caused the acorn to sprout and the tree to grow, that now demands that the exhausted body of wood which can advance no further in that specific line of uses, shall get out of the way and allow the spiritual evolution of individual life to go on its way rejoicing, unobstructed by the dead body that once seemed so full of life. The author even claims that the spiritual tree lives right on as if nothing had happened to the mighty oak, and that such tree is distinctly visible to his normal eyes. True, he tells us that the spiritual tree also disappears after a time, but it does not appear to have suffered by the destruction of the visible body, and we may fairly infer that when the spiritual tree also dies it is to serve the same purpose of individual evolution.

When the old body died the oak was no longer visible to common eyes. But the author claims to be able to see the spiritual tree. When this same tree advances another degree in individual evolution, it becomes invisible to him, but that is no proof against the continuation of the spiritual tree. Again you say:

"You watch the infant man develop, grow and mature into a splendid physical organic entity, and you agree with the author that the process involved is constructive. You see the same strong mature man stricken with disease. He begins to waste away. Here is something else. It is a process of some kind working havoc in his organism. You call it CONSTRUCTIVE. The author who stands by and watches the same processes calls it DESTRUCTIVE. You contiue to watch this undoing and disintegrating process until it ends in what we term physical death. And still you name it 'Constructive,' and the author calls it 'destructive.' And still the question—Which is correct?"

If you will read my last letter again, you will find that I nowhere claim that all the processes of Nature in individual life are constructive, or that there is no destruction. My words are that "the evidence is overwhelming that man is a result of progressive processes in which life and death have been perpetual contributors, each essential to the one aim, each dependent upon the other, and all the processes attending individual evolution—including the human will and its uses—have been, and are, in their ultimate bearings, CONSTRUCTIVE FACTORS IN INDIVIDUAL LIFE.

This has no reference to the ultimate possibilities of the individual soul or self; but simply the ultimate bearings of these temporal factors that contribute to the evolution of the individual life; and these factors, whether constructive or destructive, serve ONE PURPOSE, that of THE EVOLUTION AND ADVANCEMENT OF THE INDIVIDUAL LIFE. Apply this to the last quotation. The infant represents a growing individuality. For a limited time this growth presents the phenomenon of physical construction upon a spiritual pattern, advancing day by day in visible proportions, and the individuality is more and more marked and pronounced with each advancing year until the body reaches a climax, beyond which it cannot go. The individual life that has animated and directed its movements has not attained its ultimate destiny. It must go on or die. The body cannot go on, and hence it must either die and get out of the way or be a perpetual prison to the spirit, OBSTRUCTING all its efforts to evolve and advance toward individual perfection. The processes, therefore, which Nature ordains to emancipate the individual life, and give it opportunity, is DESTRUCTION OF THE OBSTRUCTION, BUT NOT THE DESTRUCTION OF THE INDIVIDUAL LIFE.

It is to conserve and protect the individual spirit from all its obstructing enemies that all destructive processes seem to be ordained. The proof of this is that these destructive processes, so far as observed from the objective side, at least, DO NOT DESTROY THE SPIRITUAL MAN. They simply eliminate such conditions in his environment as are incompatible with his individual needs in the processes of evolution. If suicide of the body killed the spirit, there would be evidence of destruction of individual life here and hereafter; but we know it does not; and so far as I am aware it has no destructive effect upon the soul. There are many obstructions and arrested developments in this world, both in men, animals and vegetables; but so far as known to the science of this life, there is nothing that can permanently obstruct or arrest the evolution of the individual human soul. Hence it seems to me amply proven that there is NO DESTRUCTIVE PRINCIPLE IN INDIVIDUAL LIFE EXCEPT THAT WHICH DESTROYS ITS ENEMIES, and that conserves and protects the individual.

You agree that "IF IT SHOULD TURN OUT that there is no such thing as a destructive principle, WITHIN THE AUTHOR'S USE OF THE TERM, then as a natural consequence, there could be no such crime as he has alleged," and you add: "Up to the present time, however, I do not understand that it has so 'turned out.'" "The author's use of the term" seems to apply the destructive principle to the DESTRUCTION OF THE INDIVIDUAL LIFE.

Do you not so understand it?

If I am correct in this, then it seems to me, with the evidence I have cited, and the principles of Nature as indicated in her process of evolution, and her conservation of individual life under the most trying circumstances, that IT HAS "SO TURNED OUT."

And, therefore, in spite of all obstacles, and all destructive processes, the individual life of man CANNOT BE DESTROYED.

This conclusion is reached by the logic of such facts as are accessible to me. If the author is in possession of knowledge that is out of my reach, and without the pale of physical science, he has an advantage over all who are not so fortunate; but until I know something of his means of knowing, and his methods of demonstration, I must build upon what I do know, and by this method it seems to me that the evidence against the existence of a DESTRUCTIVE PRINCIPLE IN HUMAN LIFE, capable of extinguishing the individual entity, is conclusive.

A word more of the attitude of MRS. RICHMOND AND THE BASIS OF SPIRITUALISM.

I confess to some surprise that you should take so limited a view of Spiritualism.

Who of the representative Spiritualists ever claimed that the truth or falsehood of Spiritualism depended upon inspirational or trance lectures, and the authority of names given through these public utterances? If every sentence ever uttered by Mrs. Richmond and all other public speakers were proven utterly unreliable, or false, it would not disturb the "basis for Spiritualism to rest upon." But I do not see how you can question that one point made by Mrs. Richmond, that so far as the value of data depends upon the testimony of one man, it cannot be regarded trustworthy by those having no knowledge of the witness. No court would accept such testimony. This is not a reflection against the author, but a statement of a simple fact recognized in all the business world. But the author's identity is not essential in the study of his reasonings supported by such facts and evidence as are accessible to the reader. Mrs. Richmond's lectures are NOT THE BASIS FOR SPIRITUALISM TO REST UPON.

They are supplementary factors in rounding out the superstructure, and, in their place, are valuable as well as ornamental. Once more I quote from your letter:

"It just occurs to me that if in reality you are unable to see any fundamental difference between sickness and health, between life and death, between truth and falsehood, between construction and destruction, in the sense the author has used these words, then there is truly nothing for us to discuss."

I do not think I have written anything that justifies this travesty upon common sense. I can see a decided difference between oxygen and nitrogen, almost as definite as that between construction and destruction, but both are essential in the construction of the air we breathe. There is a "fundamental difference" between the brain functions of benevolence and destructiveness, and they often act in direct conflict; but both are indispensable parts of one organism. In a great machine shop there are many wheels and cylinders turning at different rates of motion, and in opposite directions, all propelled by one agent, steam in the engine, and ALL contributing to one purpose, the manufacture of implements for the use of man.

There are constructions and destructions constantly going on in Nature's process of evolution and in our own bodies, and but for the destruction, construction would soon cease, because both are essential factors in the evolution of individual life. But so far as has yet appeared THERE IS NO DESTRUCTION OF THE INDIVIDUAL LIFE that has been countless ages advancing through all the obstructive and destructive agencies of the primeval world, defying all the evil passions and devolutionary attractions that have shadowed its progressive pathway, and crowns the pinnacle of all achievements in the personification of intelligence and spiritual life. The evidence that MEDIUMSHIP IS NOT INIMICAL TO THE INDIVIDUAL LIFE AND INTELLIGENCE is abundant in the history of modern Spiritualism. The author of the book admits that there are some rare exceptions to the destructive effects of mediumship of certain types; but insists that it is always, in all of its phases progressively destructive to body and soul, and he cites two cases of splendid physical and intellectual manhood and womanhood totally destroyed and "reduced to a maundering mental wreck more pitiful than language can describe." These are given as specimens of the natural and inevitable influence of mediumship! Admiting these fluence of mediumship! Admitting these two cases to be all that is claimed, what do they prove? Nothing, it seems to me, except that human nature develops exceptional and extraordinary freaks in a vast variety of ways and from a wide range of causes.

They do not even prove that this strange decline was due to mediumship at all, but simply coincident with it. But if due to the mediumistic processes, it does not prove that such is the law and tendency of all mediumship, nor any considerable part of its operations. In the 50 years that I have been associated with mediums in a large variety of phases and under many varying conditions, I have NEVER MET WITH ONE SUCH CASE.

But I have seen hundreds developed and watched their career through 20, 30 and 40 years of continuous, almost daily exercise of mediumship without the least sign of mental or moral decline, or any harmful results to bodily health. Surely this could not be if the invariable tendency of mediumship were destructive to health and paralyzing to the intellect. In my next I think I will present some statistics bearing on this point. Before closing this letter I wish once more to emphasize my position on the subject of moral accountability. Without qualification ar reserve I believe in the ABSOLUTE RESPONSIBILITY OF EVERY HUMAN SOUL and this not because man is free and independent, but because he is NOT FREE AND IS ALWAYS DEPENDENT. Cordially and kindly, yours for more light,

The Romish Church Exhibits Its Poisonous Fangs.

Quigley Tells Hope of Church—Archbishop Says Roman Catholics Discovered and May Yet Claim the New World Once More—Attacks School Laws—Calls Normal Rule Tyranny and Asserts That the State Encroaches on Rights of His Creed.

"The new world was discovered by Catholics and the cross planted in the name of the church. We cannot get it out of our heads that Catholics will yet claim the new world again."

This hope was voiced by Archbishop James E. Quigley in an address before the Roman Catholic Woman's League in the Masonic Temple yesterday.

The archbishop declared that the security of the national constitution increases proportionately with the increase in the number of Roman Catholics. He urged the establishment of a subsidiary system of the public schools for the benefit of the Roman Catholics. This system "for the benefit of the minority," said the speaker, should be paid for by the state but controlled by the church. Finally, he characterized the rule requiring candidates for public school teachers to have normal school training to be nothing more or less than "tyranny" and "oppression."

Liberalism the Supreme Error.

"The supreme and fundamental eror of the age is liberalism," urged the archbishop. "Liberalism delegates to the state all rights and this is when the state and church conflict."

The education of the child, he added, should rest with the church and not with the state.

"The principle that rules all modern governments," he said, "is that the child belongs to the state, not to God nor to the parent. The church holds that first the child belongs to the church, next to the parents, and third to the state. While the state was Christian the child was educated by the church, but since the state has ceased to be Christian it has assumed the right to educate the child. The rights of God and the parent are prior to the state; the church stands above nations, above individuals.

"The church has always made it obligatory upon parents to educate their children. The state encroaches upon the rights of the church to-day. The state has no rights to make laws against the laws of God. In the matter of education the church is the defender and the interpreter. The schools of the colonies were practically parochial schools; then the state stepped in and undertook to form schools under the state system. The development of the schools was from the religious schools to the schools without religion.

Liberalism Against Christianity.

"Our constitution recognizes the rights of the parents to educate their children as they choose. We are struggling between the principles of the French revolution, liberalism on the one side and Christianity on the other. God is ignored completely in the state system of schools."

The archbishop declared that the United States constitution held that all men are equal, which he said was a principle received from the French revolution; that it stood for individualism. He asserted that to-day the state is encroaching on the rights of the church, and that God is not recognized in any of the modern constitutions.

"Protestants and non-Catholics," the archbishop continued, "are undertaking, through the present public school system, to prevent the Catholic children from becoming firmly cemented to their church and to keep the Catholic church from getting a stronger foothold. The purpose of the non-Catholics is to prevent the growth of the church. They will scruple at no violation of justice to gain their ends.

Declares School Rule Tyranny.

"In adopting the rule that a candidate for teacher must attend the normal school for a time the board of education has taken action against which we must always protest. If the board can make attendance at the normal school requisite for employment in the schools, there is nothing to hinder the state or the national government from making a rule in the future making a public school education necessary for public service. The rule which prevents candidates from entering the schools without normal school training is tyranny and oppression. We have no need of a normal school in Chicago. There is no reason why a board of examiners cannot be appointed to examine into the fitness of all candidates to become teachers without regard to the source of their preparation.

"All teaching of history by non-Catholics is anti-Catholic. It is tyranny that the state and the Chicago board of education should compel Catholics to receive such teachings."

Should Provide Schools for All.

"The state," he urged, "must provide schools for the minority as well as for the majority. The state should divide the public schol system and maintain a separate system for the minority—separate in the sense of religious teaching. The two systems could be under one control, but in the Catholic division Catholic principles should be taught. This would give the minority an equal chance with the majority. This would be just and equitable, but not satisfactory to the Protestants.

"The cry all over is for non-sectarian education. The Catholic schools are recognized by the state, but they are not supported by the state because non-Catholics believe that it would be dangerous for the state to support them."

Know Thyself.

How much it behooves Spiritualists to exemplify their teachings by living in harmony with themselves and the "God of Nature, whose body nature is, and God the soul;" becoming more acquainted with their own soul being and make the bodily expression subservient to it.

No soul can become a perfect master without first proving itself a good servant—not to mortal but to the spirit in its fullness of truth and love—than can we become perfect in mortal expression and master of our own condition.

It is no easy lesson to become a true, whole-souled Spiritualist; the pathway is rough and full of stumbling blocks until the soul becomes master and only soulful expressions given through the physical expression of its being.

A Spiritist may become a Spiritualist as a Spiritualist is one who has the knowledge of the soul.

Are we Spiritualists or Spiritists? "By their fruits shall ye know them."

De we seek our own soul development and growth in its true self, or are we content to accept what we may of another's effort.

We, as souls, have each our own salvation to work out, and sooner or later the desire will come to know ourselves.

Never was truer saying, "Man, know thyself."

"The greatest study of mankind is man," his own soul possibilities which are inconceivable; one possibility reached, there are always others just beyond.

Learn of the soul; it is the truest and wisest teacher, leading out into the limitless with all its fullness and expressions complete, recognizing the God of love, the power of truth and justice in all its purport, thereby gaining freedom and the right to come up higher.

True, soulful aspirations give the power to seek, and in seeking find, that which is necessary for our growth.

LOUISE E. ZIMMERMAN.

WHO ARE THE DEAD?

Who are the dead? Not those of earth,
Who leave the form of transient worth,
To enter into higher birth—
They are not dead.

The spirit lives to make progress
In larger spheres of usefulness,
To help mankind to happiness
By doing good.

Invisible to human eyes,
The spirit world around us lies—
Find in thyself God's paradise—
It is within.

Who are the dead? 'Tis those whose mind
Can find no goodness in mankind,
To human wrongs are always blind;
They do not see.

They're driftwood on life's pulsing sea,
Parasites on humanity,
The vile vampires of industry—
A transient blight.

They are the men whose God is gold,
Who steal the blood of young and old,
Whose germ of love does not unfold—
They are the dead.

Who are the dead? 'Tis those we meet,
Within whose heart there is no beat
Responsive to the pure and sweet
While in the form.

They are the souls in slumber fast,
Who live in scenes long ages past,
In fossil state of ancient cast
To be reformed.

They are the souls who don't aspire—
They find on earth all they desire,
Nor seek to know of realms higher—
They are the dead.

Never Neglect Constipation.

It means too much misery and piling up of disease for all parts of the body. Death often starts with constipation. The clogging of the bowels forces poisons through the intestines into the blood. All sorts of diseases commence that way. Most common complaints are dyspepsia, indigestion, catarrh of the stomach, liver complaint, kidney trouble, headaches, etc. The bowels must be relieved, but not with cathartics or purgatives. They weaken and aggravate the disease. Use Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine instead. It is a tonic laxative of the highest order. It builds up and adds new strength and vigor. It assists the bowels to move themselves naturally and healthfully without medicine. One small dose a day will cure any case, and remove the cause of the trouble. It is not a patent nostrum. The list of ingredients goes with every package with explanation of their action. It is not simply a temporary relief, it is a permanent cure. Try it. A free sample bottle for the asking. Knowledge Versus Faith.

That is a sad, sad tale the churches are telling in regard to their decline. Science is making gigantic forward strides, whilst Superstition is falling greatly in the rear. The Theological Review, a Presbyterian organ, published at Princeton, N. J., took a correct view of the situation in a recent editorial when it said:

"There is still far too much blind faith in the world, and discrimination is essential to a healthy mind."

We agree with our contemporary. The entire structure on which all the churches rest is FAITH. Their evidence is only tradition, taken at its best. Hearsay has little influence in courts of justice, even at second hand; whereas creeds are built on the hearsay of fifty generations.

"Prove all things, and hold fast to the good," is Bible teaching. It would be better rendered, "Hold fast to the truth." The Review expressed another great fact when it asserted:

"Men trust their souls to anything that is named Religion, though it may be very corrupt and God-dishonoring."

Analyze any of the creeds of any of the churches, and are they not God-dishonoring? They seem so to us.

Substitute the ministration of spirits, communicating with their mortal brothers yet in the flesh, in place of God or Supreme Intelligence, who superintends the affairs of a boundless, fathomless universe, with millions of suns and systems each a multitude of times larger than our solar system, then we will approximate much nearer the truth than did the Review.

There are thousands, perhaps millions, who will give evidence of having communicated with those once in the flesh who have passed to spirit life. The testimony is overwhelming and conclusive. Can the same be truthfully said of those who claim they have received messages from God? The probabilities are that every message purporting to come from God, has emanated from spirits who have assumed to voice the will of God.

It is very apparent that science, otherwise, knowledge, is taking the place lately occupied by faith. The latter is "something believed or hoped for," and may not possess one particle of truth on which to base that faith. Science, on the contrary, is an established fact which cannot be controverted. If the spirits of the dead do really communicate with mortals, and if this fact is firmly established then we have positive knowledge on this subject, and that knowledge may be classed as verified science. Why not?

The Impudence of It!

Archbishop Quigley, in an address before the Roman Catholic Woman's League, gave expression to cherished hopes of Catholicism. We have repeatedly given warning of the intention of this church, but the methods of the priesthood are so subtle that it was difficult to prove their purpose by their own words. Now, however, grown conceited by the flattery of the press, and its attentions to the death of the pope and election of another, they have given clear expression to their concealed purposes, and they who run may read.

The archbishop, of course, spoke under instructions. Every archbishop, bishop and priest is yelping in chorus. It is decided that the time has come to make a strike to wrest the public schools from the government.

Says Archbishop Quigley:

"The new world was discovered by Catholics and the cross was planted in the name of the church. We cannot get it out of our heads that Catholics will yet claim the new world again."

There is the boast of a great general in the Catholic army! The Catholics own America by right, and Protestants and Liberals have no rights, and will be suppressed as soon as the church comes into power. How? There is only one way and that to crush out the public schools and allow the children of the nation to be raised in the Catholic faith.

"The supreme and fundamental error of the age is liberalism," urged the archbishop. "Liberalism delegates to the state all rights and this is where the state and church conflict."

The security of the National Constitution, the Archbishop declared depended on the increase of Catholic population. The Catholic schools should have government maintenance. It is the public school system which prevents "Catholic children from becoming firmly cemented to the church."

"The state," he urged, "must provide schools for the minority as well as for the majority. The state should divide the public school system and maintain a separate system for the minority—separate in the sense of religious teaching. The two systems could be under one control, but in the Catholic division Catholic principles should be taught. This would give the minority an equal chance with the majority. This would be just and equitable, but not satisfactory to the Protestants.

"The cry all over is for non-sectarian education. The Catholic schools are recognized by the state, but they are not supported by the state because non-Catholics believe that it would be dangerous for the state to support them."

And is not the belief that it would be "dangerous for the state" to support parochial schools, fully proven by this declaration of purpose to wrest this government from the people and convert it into a hierarchy ruled over by the pope? The state does provide schools for the "minority" as well as majority; the best schools in the world, constantly improving, and no child is debarred from their doors.

"Catholic principles!" What are they, that they cannot be taught in all the schools? The catechism of the Dark Ages, and reverence of priesthood which would blight the American soul! "Catholic principles!" that an American citizen owes his first allegiance to the pope, and not to this government. The Catholics number twelve millions in the United States, about one-seventh of the population. In the light of this fact, the pretension that they own this country, and will govern it, has amazing audacity. They will find, however, that the limit of patience will be reached in their aggressions, and the people will call a halt.

It is true that the Roman church is the best organized body in the world, or that has ever existed. It has added secret orders for its young men, who perfect themselves in military drill, and have expensive arsenals in the basements of their churches or halls. Yet the genuine American will stand aloof, in his abhorrence of priestly rule, and in case of armed collision, hinted at by the archbishop, they would stand in the ranks of their country for its defense.

Tasmania Grants Women Suffrage.

In Tasmania a bill has passed both houses of Parliament giving full suffrage to women upon the same terms as men. Tasmania is the third Australian state to take such action.

South Australia granted full state suffrage to women in 1895, West Australia in 1900, and New South Wales in 1902. In the same year full national suffrage was extended to all the women of Federated Australia.

In Tasmania, the bill just passed contains a clause declaring women ineligible as members of the Parliament of Tasmania. Throughout Australia, however, women are eligible as members of the Federal Parliament, so that the present situation in Tasmania is as if the women of New York or California could legally be elected members of Congress, but not of the state legislature. It is only a question of time when this little inconsistency will be removed, for the trend of things is clearly in the direction of equal rights for women all along the line.

A Good Man and Medium at Seattle, Wash.

Many of my friends in all parts of the country, with whom I have conversed, have become fully aware that I am somewhat prejudiced against materialization on account of the fakeism so often connected with it; and the disreputable characters of many of that class of mediums. It is a pleasure, therefore, to meet with a medium whom I can fully endorse; and such an one is Wm. H. Kanouse, of Seattle, an account of whose seances in this place was published in the Everett Daily Herald, which I append to this. Unlike many physical mediums, Mr. Kanouse is a young man of excellent habits. He neither drinks, chews, smokes or eats pork. His language is always pure and elevating, and is never interlarded with vulgarities or profanity. Indeed, he is a model young man, and I wish there were more like him. From such a young man we may expect to find honest mediumship, and in his case we are not disappointed.

The article below is true, except the reporter, who probably misunderstood his informant, got three seances consolidated into one. The medium has sat with his feet in flour and his hands filled with the same material, as I have been informed by creditable persons. The first night I attended, his coat collar was sewed together, and his coat sleeves to the knees of his pants. The second night I was not present, but I am told that a lady materialized and walked over to the piano, which according to my recollection from the first night, was at least twenty feet from the cabinet, and to the rear of the circle, and there she played "Nearer, My God, to Thee," with variations. I had advantageous positions at each of the three sittings, and in the two last, I saw in each three spirits rise out of the carpet, and after completing their visit with friends, disappear in the place whence they had risen. My son, who had passed into the spirit world forty-two years ago, came to me as I expect to meet him a few years hence in the land of souls, in the prime of his manhood, but as I did not recognize him, he dwindled to a babe, and immediately developed to manhood again in my presence. But I will not withhold my readers longer from the newspaper account.

Snohomish, Wash.

Spirits Materialize.

A Seattle Spiritualist medium, named Knoust, has been holding some amazing seances in South Snohomish and as a result the good people of that neighborhood are doing some hard thinking.

Tuesday evening, at the home of H. S. Hansen, a number of people, old and young, formed a circle, and with the medium securely locked in his cabinet, with arms pinioned, coat sleeves sewed up, and both feet and hands in flour, so that traces would be left if he made the slightest move, the seance began. Those present declare that relatives appeared, in plain sight of all present, one lad seeing a little sister who died in infancy. A well formed woman materialized, and played on the piano. Frank Head, who was drowned, appeared so all could see him, and held a long conversation with Mr. Hansen, as did William Hamilton, who died of lockjaw this summer.

Explain it as one may, there is no question that those present, young and old, believe they saw these things, and according to temperament, are either convinced that Spiritualism is real, or are puzzling their minds in a vain search for a key to the mystery. All present are well-known, respectable people.

Mr. Hansen said this morning, "You can laugh all you like, but it was beautiful. Why, three of my children, long since dead, came up to us last night as natural as life and talked with their mother. First it was like a cloud, but as I felt their influence draw—it must draw upon the people or the medium could not stand the strain—the figures formed and stood out very distinct.

"I have believed in Spiritualism for sixteen years and have had many manifestations in my home. What convinced me was years ago my daughter, now married, but then a little girl, was alone by the kitchen fire; she suddenly fell over, and using a slate, wrote a long message in Norwegian, from my dead sister. The child used a good hand, though she could not write even in English, and did not know a word of Norwegian language, as we never talked it at home."—Everett Daily Herald.

"The Spirit World Is So Splendid."

Message From Maggie Van Fossen.

D. D. Duncan writes: On November 27, at a private sitting with Mrs. Maggie Vestal, I had the following communication from Maggie Van Fossen, in the spirit world:

Good morning, Uncle Duncan. I have been so unhappy. I have been hunting for something I cannot find. I have been hunting for that great personal God, whom I cannot find. When I passed out of my body, I thought prayer would save me. I prayed my God to help me, but got no help.

I said, "Oh, mother, why don't you talk to me?" and got no word of recognition. I saw my body lying there, and I tried to talk to my friends, but could get no answer from anyone. Oh! my God, how I prayed! I stayed with my mother for a week and talked to her, but could not make her hear me. Oh, how unhappy I was!

Then Aunt Jane Duncan came and got me and said: "I will take you to your spirit home. Your mother cannot hear you." I said, "Oh, if I could only make her hear me. I am so unhappy!"

Dear Mr. Duncan, I am so happy here now. The spirit world is so splendid. I said to Aunt Jane, "What is this?" She replied, "This is our spirit home. Look across the way and see our spirit friends coming to greet you." I was tired. Aunt Jane said, "Maggie, I will lay you down on this spirit couch to rest."

Now let the mortal mind get more enlightened and learn more of this beautiful spirit world. Let them know that men live after death. The God of Nature is the God of Love. Let every one partake of that love.

I want you to tell my mother that when she passes out of her body, she will have one comfort to know that she has a daughter over here waiting for her. Tell her I will make a home for her and all the loved ones. Tell her to change her thoughts and think of something different from the Dowie doctrine. Tell her she must believe her own angel daughter that there is nothing in it. Tell her that Aunt Jane is here with me now.

She says: "Tell my Aunt Etta that I send her a mesage of love and comfort. Tell her that when she passes out I will be there to meet her. Tell her that Aunt Jane was the first one to meet Maggie."

Tell mother that Maggie says not to worry about a personal God, but to be good. That on this side spirits are just as they leave the body; no better, and no worse.

Tell mother to learn more about the spirit world. Tell her to sit alone in her own home and call for me, and I will come. Tell mother good-bye.

From her angel daughter,
MAGGIE VAN FOSSEN.

This spirit in her earth life, and her mother, were believers in and followers of Dowie, and Maggie passed out in that belief.

The Subconscious Analyzed.

Dr. Joseph Jastrow, professor of psychology of the university of Wisconsin explains the "Subconscious" as follows:

The term subconscious is broader than conscious. It is the absence of consciousness, and includes a variety of states and concentration. The phenomena are hard to catch in our own own minds and we must be satisfied with only a glimpse now and then. The states of consciousness are two, those directed outward and those directed inward, and the two kinds of awareness constantly intermix. The inward awareness is almost of the kind that carries with it pleasure or pain.

Consciousness has been brought by the forms of evolution that have made man what he is. In health the bodily functions go on uninterrupted but in the absence of it the occurrence of any outward disturbances readily make themselves felt upon the conscious. In the opening and closing of the pupil no movement is felt and no disturbance is needed. But rational thinking is always conscious, and there is a relation between the higher activity of consciousness and the lower. Breathing, swallowing, walking, goes on without consciousness, and in fact, is impeded when consciousness is present. Thus if a man were asked to walk across the platform before a large audience he would not be at his ease in doing so. Children are free from this consciousness which comes rather later in life. The conditions in which the highest forms of consciousness are farthest removed from the lowest are the best for the carrying out of the lowest. So the sleep walker can perform feats that he would not dare when awake. He is, then in a "subconscious" state. To become conscious it is necessary to have some sensation, some awareness as it were. There is an important relation between feeling and willing—between subconscious and subvoluntary. To correct a habit we form a habit of becoming conscious of it, and in this our friends are often willing to assist us. Habit resides in the sensations accompanying the usual operations, and so if you put the wrong foot into the stocking first you become aware that it is awkward. But habit frequently changes, as when you change from writing '03 to '04. Thus in the process of movement we get a sensation and here consciousness begins. No habit actually disappears without leaving something of a vestige behind. The sleep walker does what he is most accustomed to do. Talking is common, while the deaf mute talks on his fingers in his sleep. So you may be copying while thinking of some thing very different or even write in your sleep, and in this way actions may be performed without any memory of the afterwards."

In his concluding remarks Dr. Jastrow analyzed the "subconsciousness," including dreams and hypnotism and gave many interesting illustrations that have come to his observation. The audience was attentive and appreciative throughout, and the lecture was very instructive as well as interesting.

Can One Person Have a Dozen Souls?

As set forth in the Chicago American, the "Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" was no mystery at all compared with the case of a young girl in England, who is said to possess at least a dozen different souls.

When this young girl was twelve years old she was attacked by influenza and some form of brain disease. Since that time (she is now eighteen) she has completely changed her personality again and again.

No doctor can explain the mystery. The girl will suddenly begin to jerk her arms and shake violently. Then with a quick start, she will look up and become another entirely different person. Some of her different personalities have been as follows:

1. A modest, well-behaved, ordinary girl.
2. A noisy, bold child, talking in broken language, like a three-year-old child.
3. A very bad-tempered but clever girl, able to read and write.
4. A deaf and dumb girl.
5. A clever and sweet-tempered girl, who was very fond of learning to speak French.
6. An insane, blind girl, who had great skill in drawing.
7. A violent and cruel girl, who delighted in causing pain to her younger sister.
8. A self-willed but not cruel girl, who was very disobedient and reckless.

Sometimes one of these "souls" would rule the girl for months, and sometimes only for a week or so. The deaf-mute "soul" ruled her five different times.

Each "soul" has no memory of what the other "souls" have said and done. Nothing that the doctors can do can prevent these extraordinary changes of self in the young girl. Even the London Lancet, the most conservative of English medical journals, has called attention to her case.

Can it be true, as these facts seem to indicate, that one individual can have more than a dozen souls?

A problem like this shows how much we have yet to learn in some branches of knowledge. Psychology, which should be able to explain it, is dumb when confronted with such cases. The wise and the thoughtless alike can do no more than speculate and imagine.

We know that a child may take the nature of its great-great-grandfather or some other of its ancestors. May it not be possible for a child to take the nature of a number of these ancestors?

Perhaps a human mind may have dozens or hundreds of facets, like a diamond or the eye of a fly. Every facet may mean a new personality.

Perhaps there may be some means, unknown to us, of cutting a mind free from that chain of habit which we call character or personality and binding it at once with new chains.

This case is so unusual that we are compelled to end with a perhaps. We can only regard it with the same ignorant amazement that a Hottentot feels when he sees an automobile.

It convinces us that although the mysteries of the universe are many, man has never yet found a greater mystery than himself.

THE FINISH OF SANTA CLAUS.

'Twas the night after Christmas, and Santa Claus stopped
At the gate of his barnyard, and wearily dropped.
His reindeer were breathless, and haggard, and worn;
Their beautiful harness was tattered and torn;
The sleigh that had started with whoopings and noise
Was still overloaded with trinkets and toys.
His wife heard the panting, and at his faint "Whoa!"
She ran to the gateway, to utter an "O!"
"Who's this?" was her question. "What mischief is here?
You are not my husband! There's trouble, I fear!"
"But I am your husband," poor Santa moaned. "Yes;
And there has been trouble. You're right, the first guess.
Now, come, let us take all these toys to the shop,
Or throw them away—for my travels must stop."
"Must stop!" Mrs. Santa Claus cried in dismay,
"Why, what do you mean by these things that you say?
Have you been arrested? Are you on a strike,
Or can you no longer brings things that folks like?"
Poor Santa said nothing. He unhitched the deers
And sighed words of thankfulness into their ears;
Then called for his supper, and scantily ate,
Because all the while he must moan at his fate.
At last he was ready to talk of his woes:
"My dear, it's too dreadful to ever suppose!
I left, as you know, only yesterday night
With everything packed and arranged sung and tight.
I made my first stop at a mighty nice place;
I slid down the chimney, not leaving a trace—
When, to my amazement, there stood on the hearth
A man whose proportions were lacking in girth;
His eyes were invisibly set in his head;
His words seemed an echo of all that he said.
He seized on my shoulder and growled: 'Here at last?
Please put down that package. Don't do things too fast.
Come into the office.' I followed him in,
Assuming my jolliest, happiest grin.
It died on my face when I saw the display
Of grim visaged gentlemen there in array.
They all nodded gravely when my face they saw,
Except one old codger, who muttered, 'Ah, haw!'
They made me stand up and they made me sit down;
They looked me all over with grumble and frown;
They took microscopical squints at my beard
And vowed that the view was as bad as they'd feared.
They seized me and shaved off my whiskers and hair,
Disrobed me, and gave me some clothing to wear—
'Twas tough India rubber—air tight it was made,
And then with some evil solution they sprayed
My face and my hands. 'What's the reason for this?'
I asked, and the answer came, almost a hiss:
'You've had it too easy; you've gone free too long;
You're spreading bacilli; your work is too strong;
Your whiskers were simply headquarters for germs'—
I wish I could think of the terrible terms
They used when they spoke of my clothing and hair,
For half of it sounded as if they would swear.
They went for the reindeer, to spray them as well
And make them all germ proof—but then, with a yell,
I fled from their presence, all filled with dismay,
And leaped to my sleigh seat and clattered away.
And here I am, beaten, disgusted, and sick,
Disheartened, insulted, and cut to the quick."
"There, there, now," she murmured, "next year you will see"—
"Next year!" shouted Santa. "No next year for me!
They'll fumigate every green Christmas tree,
And spray all the candy, and smoke all the toys,
And possibly boil all the girls and the boys!
But I'm"—here he stopped while he choked back a sob—
"Im baffled by science; I'm out of a job!"

THE JOY OF GIVING.

Oh! the joy of Christmas giving makes every life worth living,
It thrills and lifts the soul to lofty thoughts of God and man,
And our hearts are filled with kindness,
no thought of selfish blindness,
Intrudes upon the peace on earth and grand good will to man.

"Am I my brother's keeper?" has a meaning broader, deeper,
And to a state of brotherhood, would bid us enter in,
So Christmas joys engage us, for kindness is contagious
And shows the fellow feeling that makes the world akin.

Good cheer is all around us, for it has sought and found us,
And we can bless the holiday that never had a peer.
We are charged to love each other, and
and I greet you as a brother,
And wish you merry Christmas and a happy, glad New Year.

A Breezy Letter from a Spiritual Evangelist.

She agitates the mental atmosphere of Bemidji, Minn., and rains facts, sarcasm and logic thick and fast, and startles the people from their lethargy. We take great pleasure in introducing Mrs. Smith to our readers, and we are sure they will find her a pleasant guest.

To the Pioneer, Bemidji, Minn.:—Rev. Mrs. Ted Smith wishes to speak through the columns of your paper. Owing to the fact that there has been so much written and said concerning the misdemeanor of certain children in the neighborhood, I take this way of expressing my sympathy for the condemned and unfortunate, also for innocent and aching hearts. Why need there be so many harsh and unkind words said by those who consider themselves guardian over the public morals. A certain reverend called on our schools the other day and while talking to the children he expressed himself thus: "In speaking of the children that throw paper wads and had been connected in the late troubles he referred to them as hogs." I would like to ask that gentleman (?) if in reading his Bible he had found where Jesus at any time had ever given his children such a nickname? And still this same divine considers that he is teaching and folowing a life of Christ. Did not Jesus say, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for such is the kingdom of heaven?" The public may not take kindly to my suggestions, but I would like to offer this: Before you are too harsh in your judgment, remember that before your family physician attempts to cure a disease he first must remove the cause. What has been born in the human race cannot be driven out with clubs, policemen, priest or preachers. We all know the example must have been set by someone somewhere in this great universe, or there never would have been cause for the present existing trouble. Those same boys do not have to go very far back in the history of Bemidji to recite from the columns of our city papers, that is placed in every child's hand, wherein this same school district two of its prominent members of the school board were asked to return the money they had stolen from the treasury or gracefully resign. They did the latter. But for reasons of their age and social and financial standing they were not committed to the state reformatory. I have lived in Bemidji eight years, really before a board was ever nailed to construct a house in this town, and I do not have to search my memory chamber very far to recall the time when every house, even to the first church built, was built from stolen timber. This is not hearsay or guess work, but facts I saw with my own eyes. Was there ever a county officer went wrong in Beltrami county? Ask the winds and silent waves of Lake Bemidji. Was there ever a village officer that took that which did not belong to him? Oh, no. Did ever a school board in this village hold their meetings behind closed doors? From good authority, they have. Oh, consistency, thou are a jewel! If our village papers have been authority for the past five years two-thirds of the married men of Bemidji should enjoy the privileges of a state reformatory today. Those dear, good, innocent fathers, how they weep over the crimes committed by these Bemidji boys. You are the gods that pass judgment on the boys of Bemidji, when for the past five years. Bemidji's pass word has been "boodle." And still you expect it to grow and ripen in a field of cockle. A thief, a liar and a beggar all have lived, I fear, in the homes of Bemidji. Hardly has there been a child in the town who has not been compelled to beg from door to door, from the saloons to the quiet houses on the hill. What for? For money to pay the debt of the church and ministers. And in a few years you will think it a dreadful thing if some of these boys are caught begging at the back doors for something to eat; and yet has it not been instilled in them, get the money any place, don't make any difference where; tackle any man on the street, it don't make any difference what kind of a character he is. Money we must have and will have to build our churches. Is it not taught and instilled in the mind of every child that at the last moment you can say, "God save me!" and though you have been a thief, a liar and a beggar, you are entiled to the kingdom of heaven? Yes, even the murderer on the gallows is asked by the preacher and the priest to accept Jesus, and he has a through ticket to the Great Eternal Fort of Rest. I tell you, brothers and siters, if we expect our children to be perfect, we must first be perfect ourselves, and be very careful what we teach, for children think deeper than we give them credit.

If you wish your children to be free from the evils that beset this life, first remove the cause. When the reverend gentleman called God's children "hogs," he certainly placed their mothers in a very bad position. Why not practice, dear brother, what you preach? Look up, lift up. I think there are many children that could teach us all so far as a kind word or a smile is concerned. I have no trouble with the children of Bemidji. They all speak pleasantly to me and all give me a smeet smile. I have never locked my doors a half dozen times in the last six years. Have confidence in your children, make them know you are their friend. From all that I can learn, the man that was the most considerate of the boys and their mothers was a saloonkeeper. He begged of the policeman not to tell their mother. It would break her heart. He did not call her boy a "hog." He did not say one harsh word. Pretty good man after all, wasn't he? I tell you there is good in everybody if we will only try to see it. Anyway it is not left for us to judge.

I wonder how many Christians have called on those broken-hearted mothers! Have you left them to weep alone? I wonder how many teachers in our public schools will show their Christian spirit enough to speak kindly to the wayward boy and help him up with a smile and a kind heart. Did Jesus when his children went astray take a club and beat them? When his disciples betrayed him, did he jump on them and give them a black eye, and call them hogs? Do you know who I think the Christians of Bemidji were in this case? The kind-hearted policeman who called on the parents and even wept with them, was considerate of their feelings; the saloon man who said, "Don't tell his mother, it will kill her."

What were life without someone to cheer us,
With a word or a smile on our way;
A friend who is faithfully near us
And heeds not what others may say.
The bravest of spirits have often
Failed in the race that they ran,
For the want of the kind word to soften
Then say a kind word when you can.

The teacher must remember that she is to a certain extent responsible for the conduct of the village children. She has them five days in the week, nine months in the year, while the parent has them only two days in the week, and three months in the year, and the minister is controlling the mind of that little urchin, either directly or indirectly, one day out of the two. What seemed to be wrong Sunday night with the old ship of state, while the ministers were preaching and praying, the dear mothers sitting quietly in their church pews listening attentively to the eloquent flow of God's word that the nefarious work of the young lads was going on? But then, I suppose, God turned the town over to the devil Sunday night, while he entertained the faithful few in the four walls of the church house. Oh! ye guardians over the public morals, you will have to change your Santa Claus story to the coming generation if you will protect our homes and lives, or before you can safely tear down the walls of our jails and use for kindling wood the rafters of the gallows. How do you accept the examples set by the lumber jack skypie lot arrested in Winnipeg hardly a year ago for cruelty to animals, for the inhuman treatment to his dogs, that had dragged him miles in a sled over the muddy roads. I was an eye witness to the scene when he arrived in Bemidji with the poor creatures that fell exhausted on the paving at the Markham hotel, with bleeding feet and worn out bodies. But that was excusable. He was hauling hundreds of pounds of God's literature over the country, practically Christian slaves. Good work for the dogs. What is the matter of turning the team into a tandem and placing one of the trio on the lead?

Would it not be a good idea for the evangelist to give a sermon on cruelty to animals?

REV. MRS. TED SMITH.

A Most Pitiable Case, That Appeals to All Who Have a Spark of Humanitarian Feelings.

The ambition of Prof. Geo. F. Perkins to get into a position to earn a living for himself and wife is one that is honorable alike to himself and to others. It is one, however, which is dependent upon certain conditions for its materialization, and it is time, probably, that those conditions were understood by the public.

First of all, Mrs. Perkins, after a long and useful life, is on what seems likely to be her last sickness. Physically she is practically as helpless as a new-born babe and in about the same ways. She has a little power of motion, and that may be said to be all. It is a question whether she is not worse than helpless, since she is more dangerous to herself when left alone, as a recent episode with the gas jets proved. Everything that herself and husband and friends could think of, within reach, has been done to restore her to health, but in vain. She always had a great dread of of stepping over a hose, and it was in that way that the accident came which now promises to prove fatal.

Intellectually Mrs. Perkins is [illegible] strength, getting apparently [illegible] the whole, but at times [illegible] all her old-time kind [illegible] OF and spi[illegible] certainly a power [illegible] [illegible]ment of those well informed, including the publisher of The Truth, Mr. Perkins is the best nurse she could have. It seems, also, better that they remain where they are, for financial reasons if no other. Probably a nurse could not be hired to do what Mr. Perkins does for less than $150 a month; nor could any one else do as well. This credit should be given to him: that he is the prince of patience. The strain would have broken many people long ago. That Mr. Perkins should get away day times is not to be thought of. He would not entertain such a thought. But if it could be arranged that he could get away evenings occasionally without the strain of worry for her he could render a good account of himself as an entertainer, a lecturer on humanitarian and philosophical subjects, and as a means whereby spirits can communicate with mortals—friendly or otherwise.

We think Mr. Perkins' laudable desire to help himself in so far as he can, which he has repeatedly expressed, should be made known.

We sometimes hear of Spiritualists rich in this world's goods, though this is not a case of religious belief but of common humanity. We do not know any, but if there are any such we can say that we think this is a case most deserving of aid. Some poorer Spiritualists could perhaps render equally great aid by caring for Mrs. Perkins two or three hours of an evening (when she is the least trouble) once or twice a week. If there are any such, will they kindly meet Prof. Perkins and other friends, at Prof. Perkins' residence, 1220 Mission, Monday evening next, when arrangements can be made in the light of the details.

If there are any who, after personal acquaintance (or otherwise), desire to help in any way, their assistance will be most gratefully received.

The above is from "The Truth," a little paper published in California. We know Mr. Perkins well. At one time he lectured to crowded houses in this city. He is an honest, conscientious worker. His wife is in a most pitiable condition—a MENTAL AND PHYSICAL WRECK, needing constant attention. Before her sickness she was an excellent medium. Mr. Perkins has had burdens to bear, that are enough to crush him, yet he has stood the strain nobly. Let every Spiritualist in the land respond to this call for assistance. Send him something, if not more than a dime. We send him $2 as a starter. Send all donations to G. F. Perkins, 1220 Mission street, San Francisco, Cal.

CAN A SOUL DIE? WHAT IS THE MEANING OF THE "SECOND DEATH"?

A Discourse through Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Chicago, November 1, 1903.

THE MEANING OF SOUL—IMMORTALITY NOT AN ATTAINMENT—THE MEANING OF DEATH—THE ULTIMATE PURPOSE—THE PRIMAL ESSENCES INDESTRUCTIBLE—INCONGRUOUS MAN-MADE LAWS—INSPIRATION—MEANING OF SALVATION.

There is very much misunderstanding in the world because people do not properly interpret the meaning of the words they use.

We use the word Soul to express the Immortal Entity, the absolute Ego. We use the word Spirit to mean that which is expressed in human life; in other words the breath of the soul upon that particular life. We use the word Mind to express the Intelligence that is manifested in that particular Human life; in other words the Mind is the temporary expression of the Soul through the vivification of the human organism; the spirit being the vivifying expression.

Therefore, in the light of these definitions, we shall treat this subject.

In the biblical record in the Old Testament the word Soul is often used synonymously with Spirit, as that which man becomes when manifesting through the physical body. For instance, in speaking of the loss of a ship: "All souls on board perished." If souls can perish in shipwrecks, that is not our definitions of souls. Frequently in the New Testament, in account of disasters on land as well as on shipboard, the phrase is used, "the souls all perished." If this is the accepted meaning of soul, that is not our meaning. Souls cannot perish, neither in shipwrecks nor on land; neither in time nor eternity.

We use the word Soul to mean the Ego that is immortal. We do not think immortality can have a beginning nor an ending. Anything that is immortal, in the very nature of the word, must always have been and, of course, always will be.

Soul is like unto God. There is no likeness unto God in the body. The body perishes; the body has successive limitations; the mind has successive limitations. The spirit, as manifested in the body, is limited. Therefore these cannot be like unto God. The Soul in its own state is perfect, is not created, therefore is eternal, like unto God.

With this definition, of course, souls cannot die. If souls are created, if anywhere along the line of past evolution, or past creation souls have been called into existence, according to every law of logic, according to every law of material science that is known, and according to all intellectual propositions, there must be sometime in the line of expression when souls will cease to exist.

IMMORTALITY NOT AN ATTAINMENT.

That immortality is an "attainment" is unthinkable, only, as within each human life is not only the possibility but the certainty of that result. There is nowhere any warrant in anything that all religions have conveyed to the earth; whether in the Vedic, Brahmin, Buddhistic, or whatever religion that anyone is to exist forever through "attainment." Whatever "attainment" is achieved, must always be found wherever the soul finds expression not in its absolute state.

We denominate the state of being or the absolute state, the state of non-expression. The state of activity or expression, is the state of existence. Therefore, we interpret that when "God breathed into man the breath of life and he became a living soul," that it does not mean that the soul for the first time was called into being, but that the soul came into that which is called life, meaning expression.

In our view, the history or story as related in the first book of the Bible, the book of Genesis, is the statement of the soul entering the state of expression, which is relative, therefore, state which begins in the conditions of human life.

THE MEANING OF DEATH.

The experience of death is not unto the soul itself, but unto its expression. Matter can not only be called together, but can be disintegrated, and must be in the generic processes, whether created or whether through the genesis that is inherent in matter. But whatever it is that is thus called together not only can be, but will ultimately be resolved into its original element or elements.

Whatever the "cosmic life" may be, whatever may be the ultimate atom, which science has never shown individually, or whatever the primal principle of matter, we know that generation and decay, birth and death are incident to material expression. When the soul finds itself in contact with matter, we consider that the soul realizes that which is called death.

Undoubtedly, the departure from the state that is absolute to the state of expression, which is relative, is what was considered in the Brahminical and more ancient religions as well as in the Mosaic Scriptures, the first step downward, the "fall," because the recession from the state of non-expression to the state of expression is the coming into contact with elements that can die, is the placing of the soul in contact with the proposition of death, because birth implies death. It is, for the time being and to all purposes of human expression a departure from the absolute into the relative, therefore, that is death.

Undoubtedly, if we understood correctly the allegory of "Adam" and "Eve," (which have their synonyms in all languages, among all people), we would understand fully the departure from this primal state to the state of human consciousness, which is death physically, and of the meaning of "sin" which is spiritual and moral. We consider the first death the consciousness of physical birth and its pains and penalties and physical death. The second death is the consciousness of moral struggle. For instance, the first Adam and Eve did not know, since they were in a state of innocence or ignorance to the first knowledge of sin or the consciousness of it. The moment the human being enters into that consciousness it enters into the struggle morally to overcome it. That we consider the second death. Suppose you take a child that may do a hundred things innocently, not knowing the wrong, and that you do not consider wrong in the light of the moral proposition. You tell the child that an act is wrong, and the child understands you. Then it is at that moment the child has a perception of what is meant by the second death. The violation of the thing which one knows is a violation of the proposition which one knows to be right; that, we conclude, is the proposition called "sin." By whatever means this is introduced into the world, it is general, it is universal. In whatever way it was brought about as a proposition, it is incident to human life.

The first death, which is the consciousness of being in contact with substance instead of the primal essence of life, is the first limitation. The second death is the second limitation. But neither of these affect the soul. The soul, primarily, is here for victory, the soul is here for expression. The soul knows that it will ultimately conquer both the first and second death.

Whatever there is in theology, doubtless (the origin of the primal propositions of religions have been lost in the world), is made up largely of human sentiment, and human fear which is one of the bases of the "second death." As fear is the lowest of human passions, so it is the basis upon which the idea of the loosing of the soul is predicated; and the attempt to apply to the immortal part of man that which can only affect the man in contact with human life is, of course, one of the shortcomings of theology, not the foundation of true religion.

THE ULTIMATE PURPOSE.

We know the soul would not be brought in contact with human expression but for an ultimate purpose. We know that in the degree that the soul is related to the Infinite (as the finite to the Infinite), the soul measures not only the immortality, but the responsibility, and that the soul knows when thus in contact with human life that both the first and second deaths must be experienced to be overcome.

People object to every state and condition in human life being a part of the necessary experience. People object, to whom we offer the solution of the different conditions in human life and seeming partiality; they object to the thought of successive human lives or expressions, because human lives are so full of sorrow, experience and difficulties, and yet you cannot get those people to give up their human lives unless they are obliged to. Conscious suicides are not very frequent. So it is not human life people object to, but they object to losing their small fragment of human life which they call their personality. The individuality of the soul cannot be lost; the personality can be lost. You are not the same as you were when a baby—we hope you are not. The changes that come in even one human life make one feel like a different person. So you are a different personality than you were years ago. To-day you do not remember your babyhood, yet the ego is not lost.

The day has arrived in the history of the world when the interpretations of theology are giving place to the interpretation of true religion. The day has arrived when people are not to accept as infallible the human interpretation of a book that has passed through many human translations and has been subject to many human changes; that in its primal inception was largely verbal or oral. People are not bound to accept the thought that souls are "created" and that souls can perish excepting they are saved by permission or by the acceptance of a theological form of creed. Neither are people bound to accept theological propositions. That which is immortal can never be destroyed.

Those who believed that the soul was created and that the soul would die excepting such as were saved by the observance of the physical and moral propositions of the Jewish law, in that were consistent. Christians believe that the soul is from God, that the soul will perish as far as happiness is concerned, but is immortal in either happiness or misery, and that what people do or believe in the human state, in one life, is to determine whether they be eternally happy or miserable. The time has arrived in the history of the world when people are not obliged to accept this proposition; when the thought that relates to immortality must be tested by the same principles of intuition and logic as any other truth. As mathematics is the only infallible science, so logic of God and the soul's immortality is the only basis of religion, man's relation to God and man constitutes religious observance; that which follows in its logical chain is, if the soul is immortal it must be indestructible. If all souls are not immortal there is no evidence that any soul will exist forever, even though a continued existence after the change called death may be proven, yet immortality cannot be demonstrated if souls begin on earth.

PRIMAL ESSENCES INDESTRUCTIBLE.

That which we wish to call your attention to is, that the mysteries of the theological proposition has been builded up on the thought that in any human life or any number of human lives people can do anything that can destroy that which is innately eternal or immortal.

Primal essences, whatever they may be, must be indestructible, as God. Yet the proposition of indestructibility must be, of course, that which cannot change in the midst of all the changes of the universe of substance. If the essence of human life is the immortal soul, the essence of human consciousness, the essence of human intelligence especially, it is not introduced (i. e., created) along any line of evolution. It is a proposition, pure and simple, in the realm of souls. If such is not the case, then along that same line by the recession, which comes to all organized bodies, the soul can be lost, and must be lost; if introduced anywhere along the line of possible evolution from the lowest expression of substance to the anthropomorphic ape and beyond that to the present state of human expression, or if there has been a combination of organisms in which the spirit has been evolved which did not exist before, or wherein the soul has been introduced which did not have an a priori existence as an ego, then the time will come in the great expression of nature, as the earth goes back to cosmic dust (as it will after it reaches its fulfillment of cosmic elements), that the soul will be swallowed up again into the cosmic ether from whence it came.

But, if in the unfoldment of matter there was a time when the soul could avail itself of the conditions of earth for its embodiment for expression, however simple that embodiment might have been in the first case, then whatever it has accomplished after that in the perfection of the human race is due to the presence of the soul and as distinguishing this Ego or consciousness from the intelligence of the animal kingdom, and from the manifestations of law in nature. This Ego that knows that it knows, that knows that it girds itself with spirit and physical existence, this is the ego, and we maintain this ego is indestructible.

There are numbers of human lives, even upon the earth to-day, that have not any thought of immortality. That numbers have a thought of immortality but have no adequate perception of the soul; this proves that Death is here upon the earth. That not only the first death, which is the consciousness of physical birth, physical pain and physical death is here, but also this clouding and eclipsing of the spiritual nature, of the knowledge of the Ego, the soul life (incident to human expression) to its final victory.

INCONGRUOUS MAN-MADE LAWS.

In man-made laws it is a crime for a man to kill a man, for him to destroy the physical life which he cannot restore, but it is not a crime, according to the present civilization, for many men to kill many men. War is justifiable because it is wholesale slaughter; but individual murder is a crime. Do you suppose there is any difference in the absolute thought? if it is wrong to kill at all, that there is any difference in killing by the thousands instead of by the units? If there is a difference it is on account of "motive." One man kills another for his money; nations kill each other for land or power. What is the difference? If one man kills another for revenge or in retaliation for some fancied wrong it is a crime. If a nation goes to war for some fancied grievance it is patriotism. In other words, moral law, as announced by man, is gradually unfolded from within, and comes to be the right of people to live; the rights of people to express their wish for happiness and their pursuit of it provided they do not encroach upon the rights of others; the right of nations to exist if they will, provided they do not encroach upon other nations—which they always do. In other words wherever human lives have attained the highest consciousness of this separate Ego, this moral nature, this principle, which comes from within and above, there has been the thought of respect of others; respect for their pursuit of happiness; respect for all their physical, mental and spiritual rights. But such do not exist to any considerable degree among any people that would be considered, and a nation of such has not yet been expressed upon this planet. Individuals have expressed this state; martyrs have expressed it; sages, prophets, seers and Messiahs have taught it. But these lives illustrate the possibilities of the human race, the final victory over the "second death" and the establishment of the moral nature.

Now the moral nature is not anything that God needs; it is what the human being needs, a need that is created by human conditions for the purpose of arriving at the knowledge that is within the soul.

When you see a little way you have one idea of optics; when ou see farther you have other ideas; finally when you discover the whole realm of optics as an adjustment to human conditions you understand that the sun does not need your eyes, but you need to be adjusted to the light of the sun in order to see. The moral law is the adjustment of human lives to the great primal propositions of the soul and of God. All the adjustment, of course, with matter is in the Soul; that matter must be pervaded by that light and adjusted by it. When people are in the state of not being adjusted they mistake the body for the spirit, the transient human obliquity for the immortal part; they mistake the difficult problems of to-day for eternal propositions.

Of course, there are no eternal moral propositions. We mean by this that while all who enter into the state of human life must temporarily confront these conditions here, there is nothing in God, nothing in the soul that can obscure the light of the soul. As matter serves to obscure the Infinite if you look to matter to find God. So the physical life, and even the intellectual life of man, obscures the soul if you look to the body or intellect to find the soul, but through the body and through the intellect the soul compels recognition, and this recognition is the value of all seeking.

INSPIRATION.

Inspiration is that which comes to human life from souls that have attained the victory and who give encouragement for the victory that is to be obtained by those who are still in the shadow. This knowledge is impelled from soul to soul, so that being here in the human state you may know that the shadows can be overcome. This, of course, sometimes only touches the intellect, then men make creeds and dogmas and limit immortality to the few; try to hedge the kingdom of heaven around with especial difficulties, and make a limited plan of salvation. Every limitation of this kind is a human limitation.

Eternity means that every soul will have what belongs to every soul in eternity. Time as a manifestation in contact with things, with physical life, with human existence is but a portion of the expression in connection with the dust.

The soul seeks expression in human life because it is a finite entity, as God seeks expression in the universe. The soul, not being infinite, does not determine all things, but being finite the soul accepts the conditions that are here provided, but determines, as far as its own relations are concerned, its path of conquest, and ultimately perceives the victory.

Now when people are urging you to avoid physical death by taking the elixir of life, by substituting one kind of physical substance for another to be put into the human organism, by claiming a certain line of life will insure physical immortality, it is an appeal to the human consciousness in its lowest expression. There is not one of you that would, primarily, accept it, because generation is continuation. Death is just as natural as birth; and if you are to have a harvest next year these leaves must fall from the death of the stalk; the stubble must be burned in the harvest field, the straw on which the wheat and oats have been produced, must be separated from the grain. This year's harvest must not continue in the field if next year's harvest is to come. Human lives must just as necessarily be removed from the earth if any new generations are to come.

When human lives are so perfect that there is no need for other generations there will be added lives, not only in worlds, but in intermediate states far more attractive than even the earth when it is full of wisdom.

If this ultimate "death," from which theology is to save you, is something you can do to yourselves, if it is something that can be induced into your beings (which are immortal), that you can decide to kill that immortality, that is you, that is inherent, then it is the first place in all the visible universe where such is the case where God and nature stultify the eternal law. It is the only thing that does not yield fruitage of its kind.

MEANING OF SALVATION.

When theologians enter upon the work of saving souls from an "eternal death" instead of saving them and assisting them to overcome the death in which human life is here, they transcend the realm for which any instruction was ever given. Jesus said: "I come to save you from your sins." He did not say anything about saving souls, but from your sins, for you to overcome these conditions of time and sense in which the expression of the soul is immured. The simplest proposition is found in the teachings of Christ, of Jesus, of Buddha; it is the application here and now of this great principle of love, this triumph over hatred. Of course this is not and cannot be a superficial application, it is a law of growth from the soul; imbuing matter, which is insentient; imbuing the intellect, which is mechanical, with this light of the soul. Man slays for food. The man under the subjection of selfishness which is immoral slays for power. The Christ does not save mankind from physical death, but comes to save mankind from their sinning, which is the result of this lack of knowledge, lack of the fulfillment of the spiritual power. All this teaching and this fear which makes man dread that which is to come after the physical death is the great theological background, like that of John Calvin, or like that which even learned clergymen of the present day teach. This overbrooding terror of that which shall come after the physical death: Such is the sum total of human theology. Doing good in the slums without that over-brooding terror is almost forbidden by the church. Just as organized societies and religious organizations will not allow a man to help the poor in his own way, because it "encourages pauperism," so people cannot heal morally and intellectually because it is "encouraging sin," "encouraging socialism."

The great fundamental basis of the Salvation Army (God bless them) which goes down into the slums and gets people out of the dirt and sets them to singing instead of swearing, is nevertheless this great overbrooding of the dark pinions that are to save their souls from perdition after death. Theirs has been a great work in getting people out of the slums here, they are helping them to a knowledge of helping one another, which is the redeeming grace of it all. But that this movement is a part of the great shadowy proposition that every salvationist is to be credited with so many souls saved from the everlasting fires of hades is the great shadow background of it all. We like the work of the Salvation Army; we like the enthusiasm and earnestness; we like that which they do. But we do not like these overbrooding pinions of an immortal, eternal hades, of a fire from which they are rescuing these souls. Therefore, doing this good for that purpose is not doing it for the sake of doing good. To do good for the sake of doing good, because people need to be shown the steps they have not taken, that seems to us the sum total of human life. But if a few persons do good for other reasons than the fear of hades they are condemned and criticised. Theology wants to take control of all the charities of the world, and wants to make philanthropy subservient to this purpose of saving souls from hades.

Right over here in the vicinity of this place is the "Inferno" of Dante; right over there in London is the "hades" and hell fire of "Milton." Everywhere in the world where shadow lurks that the moral nature has not vanquished or solved the problem, there is the hades.

The passing on to a future state of spiritual expression in all the conditions of human life is the inevitable proposition. The next state is a part of the human expression. If the spirit is not clouded in the mortal life it will not be clouded there; you are a part of the spirit life now. Now putting off the body does not make you less or more "departed." That is a part of the human expression. But this next step is not an eternal state. People pass from that state to other expressions in human life to gain the victory that is not yet won, to achieve triumphs not yet earned. It is in the state where temptation exists that the victory must be won.

Jesus did not recommend people to separate themselves from the world; he did not recommend conventual or monastic life to overcome the sinning, but it is in the world that temptation must be overcome; it is in contact with time and sense that the triumph and the victory must be found.

No soul is ready to take final leave of the earth or to part from human expressions however many there may be, until every victory has been accomplished here. People say, "Oh, I would like to shield my child from every temptation, from every condition of human struggle." Shield them as you may, guard them as you will, make pre-natal and post-natal laws as perfectly as you can, the child will act out in life what the child has come for. We do not undervalue pre-natal influence, we do not undervalue surroundings, we do not undervalue that which constitutes the environment of the human race. But you know, however carefully guarded, however watched, however trained, the son is sometimes a defaulting cashier, or he goes down into the shadow of the inebriate, or the daughter wanders out upon the streets. These are conditions that have to be overcome from within. No bolts or bars, no external barriers will improve them; laws are not adequate. No human being was ever forced by law into being temperate, or moral or just. Man was before the law. The consciousness of justice is before justice can be demonstrated. Temperance is the balance of human life from within. When this complete victory is learned there will be triumph over the "second death."

INFLATED STATISTICS.

Prof. Lockwood Presents Figures Given by The American Statistical Association.

Brother D. W. Hull in his reply to Mrs. Watson and Mrs. Stockey, in the issue of The Progressive Thinker of December 19, makes use of some misleading statistics regarding the number of adherents to the various churches outside of Christianity. He says, "There are five hundred millions of Buddhists, four hundred and eighty millions of Confucians, and over one hundred million of Parsis, Shintos and other pagan religions."

As many reads of The Progressive Thinker do not have time to look up statistics of this character, and believing that Brother Hull has inadvertently made use of unofficial data, and having the report of "The American Statistical Association" for 1903 before me, which association is considered to be competent authority upon statistics of the world's religions, I desire to present their last official report:

Christianity	477,080,158
Worship of Ancestors and Confucianism	256,000,000
Hindooism	190,000,000
Mohammedanism	176,834,372
Buddhism	147,900,000
Taoism	43,000,000
Shintoism	14,000,000
Judaism	7,186,000
Polytheism	117,681,669
Unclassified (In Europe)	1,219,000

The report of this association for 1904 will undoubtedly be out in March next, when, in all probability these figures will be modified.

The Parsee religion—the religion of Zoroaster—to which Brother Hull refers under the name of "Parsis," no longer holds a special place in the list of the world's great religions, having differentiated into Mohammedan sects and numberless cults originating in oriental superstitions. That there is an element in India and Hindustan calling themselves "Parsees," is true; but they are so divided by schisms as hardly to be recognized as followers of Zoroaster—at least they have no authentic place in the reports of the religions of the world.

Eventually the human will evolve away from a religion based upon sorcery, necromancy, and a belief in the magical transformations of evil; and his expanding intellect will comprehend that any true system of religious ethics, must be based upon nature's eternal principles of progression. Until such intellectual vision is born in the human mind, he will continue to voice the superstitions, and to demand the religious ceremonies of his ancestry. This is the shoal towards which the barque of Spiritualism is sailing, and at which many of its leaders think they see the harbor of safety.

But we think otherwise. So long as religious beliefs can be turned into merchandise, so long as seats in heaven can be sold upon the sorcery and platitude of "vicarious atonement," so long as the spirit world returns to say that "there is no hell, such as has been described," just so long will all forms of ecclesiasticism attack, anathematize and menace the Spiritualistic movement, because it interferes with the financial support of its clergy and officials, and with its political religious propaganda in general. For the Spiritualists to adopt these ceremonial platitudes of religious sorcery, is to coil into a system of natural ethics the fetichisms of pagan necromancy. This is precisely what Constantine did for Christianity in an edict in 321 changing the day of pagan worship from Saturns-day to Suns-day, and another edict in 325 calling in convention the "Nicene Council" which fastened upon future generations the story of the phallic incest of one of the tutelary gods of the Jews, as testified in the tradition in the New Testament of the "immaculate conception" of Jesus, and which is historical and logical proof as strong as the testimony of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, of the pagan origin of this ecclesiastical dogma. And this tendency to attach any great truth in human ethics, to some old religious skeleton of the past, by those who have personal or political interests to conserve, is voiced on the pages of history in the evolution of ethical science.

It would seem that there must come a time when the intellect would repudiate the ceremonials of ordination, consecrations, dedications and titles of reverence, as the ashes of phallic worship; in which system of sexual prostitution they had their origin. It is difficult to conceive of an intellect claiming to be free, that can feel flattered or mentally strengthened by any of these ceremonials, knowing their origin.

It is not a case of "Ecclesia-Phobia," as some of our good friends infer. Our doctors have mistaken both the disease, and its symptoms. It is an intellectual nausea at an effort to attach to a clean system of progressive ethics, the ghoulish skeletons dripping with the slime of a licentious age.

We look with amazement at the Spiritualist speaker, man or woman, who flaunts these symbols of the vilest ceremonial religion known to the page of history, before the gaze of an enlightened public.

There must come a time in the evolution of the human soul, when mankind will cease to be flattered by the titles and sophisms growing out of these old superstitions. Until that time does come, humanity will court the careless and meaningless adulations of ignorance; but in the rising sun of a true system of ethics, it will flee from this weakness and lack of intellectual courage, as from a nightmare of mental horror.

W. M. LOCKWOOD.

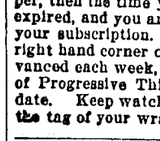
THE FADING LIGHT OF DAY.

"Jenny, gather up the scraps, and Hetty, bring the broom;
Sally, push the kettle back and tidy up the room;
Now's the time, 'twixt day and dark, to clear the work away;
For the morn make ready by the fading light of day.

"Come, my boys, bring in the wood and split the kindling fine,
Fetch some water from the spring and feed the waiting kine;
You'll not need the lantern lads, the twilight's clear and gray,
Haste and you will finish by the fading light of day."

Thus the dear housemother spake, still busy all the while,
Helping girls and cheering boys with gentle word and smile,
Till the tasks were ended and the sons and daughters gay
Gathered round the fireplace by the fading light of day.

Scattered, scattered, far and wide, in distant lands, and dead!
Long the grass has waved above the gentle mother's head;
But at nightfall even yet I seem to hear her say,
"For the morn make ready by the fading light of day."



Wiser now, methinks therein that hidden meanings lurk,
Teaching ere that night shall come "wherein no man can work,"
Every soul be girded ready; God alone can say
If our eyes again behold the fading light of day.

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles a Thing of the Past.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

A marvelous discovery has been made by that Scientist and Inventive Genius, Prof. W. O. Wilson. He has invented a restorer known as "Actina," through which all afflictions of the eyes and ear, such as blindness, granulated lids, cataracts, sore eyes, deafness, etc., are cured without cutting or drugging. It is a simple contrivance, known as the Actina Pocket Battery, and through it the patients cure themselves in the privacy of their own homes. It not only abolishes the butcheries and torturous methods practiced by oculists, and aurists, but at the same time perfects a positive and lasting cure.

Rev. W. O. Goodwin, Moline, Kansas, writes: "My honest opinion of "Actina" is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It saved my eyes from an operation."

Mr. F. W. Harwood, Springfield, Mass., says that "Actina" cured him of deafness of nine years' standing.

Mr. A. L. Howe, Tully, N. Y., writes: "Actina" has removed cataracts from both my eyes. I can read well without my glasses; am sixty-five years old.

Robert Baker, Ocean Park, Cal., writes: "I should have been blind had I Not used "Actina."

A party of prominent citizens have organized a company known as the New York and London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. If you will call or send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. T.B., 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely free, a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's "Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General," and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Mrs. C. M. Harlan writes from Kokomo, Ind.: "The Spiritualists of Kokomo have organized a society of forty-one members, known as the Spiritual Science Society, organized by E. W. Sprague and wife, missionaries of the N. S. A. E. W. Sprague made several good and interesting lectures, and his wife gave many good tests, and both made many warm friends in Kokomo. The people hope to see them back in our town."

Annie Throndson writes from Louisville, Ky.: "The Church of Spirit Communion holds services every Sunday night with a good attendance. We are having many investigators."

Once in a while some crime having for its motive revenge rather than robbery brings to mind the fact that among a portion of Washington's negro population still linger traces of the primitive superstitions of the race, to say nothing of the lurking poison of voodooism, witchcraft, trick-doctoring and other forms of Obi.

E. D. Hammond writes: "The enclosed slips taken from the New York Sun and New York Times of December 21, 1903, in reference to Archbishop Quigley, show the trend toward the coming conflict between the Roman hieararchy and Liberalism; without any mincing of words of the intent of the enemy to undermine the foundation of our republic. The warning should be sounded by every Liberal publication in the country."

H. E. Pomeroy writes: "The plot thickens! Dowie is trying to establish a theocracy; Moses and Daniel Hull, a priesthood, and they are succeeding fairly well, but popery and priestcraft are 'psychological crimes!' Science and sophistry, logic and lunacy are abundant in Modern, as well as ancient Spiritualism. But, 'Oh, Lord! how can we get to heaven?'"

A Chicago Daily says: "With all due respect to doctors, the other side ought to have some show. If doctors always cured the sick there might be some excuse for compelling a man to employ them in time of need, but as doctors frequently disagree and are by no means infallible, and as cures have undoubtedly been effected by other means than medicine, and as the scriptures, in which many believe, are authority for faith cures, mental healing and the like, it is but reasonable that this large body of psychists should have recognition and that due weight should be given to their opinions and individual rights."

M. A. Millburn writes: "The services at the Second Church of the Soul, Van Buren Opera House, Madison street and California avenue, are most interesting and instructive. M. L. Shaffer lectures and replies to written questions from the audience. A recent lecture on 'The Orthodox Devil' was most convincing that his Satanic Majesty exists only in the evil in mortal mind and in undeveloped evil spirits. Lora Holton Upson, recently returned from Boston, is serving as test and musical message medium for January. The letter phase is a most rare gift, rendered in foreign and native language. Mrs. Kaywood is unfailing with her offering of lovely flowers. Come and enjoy our blessing, every Sunday, at 3 and 8 p. m."

"My wife has left me and I want you to get her!" exclaimed William H. Pomeroy as he burst into the office of Prosecuting Attorney Cooper, at Kokomo, Ind. "She has been hypnotized by a woman. She never would have left me and her three children if she had been in her right mind. Mrs. Baker, a Frankfort woman, has passed a spell over her. She always exercised a strange influence over my wife and she has taken her away from us now." Pomeroy shoved into the prosecutor's hand a crumpled letter which he said he found on the table when he went to his home this evening. His three children, the oldest of whom is eight, had been alone all afternoon. Their mother left about noon, they said.

Mrs. Alice Baker writes from Dallas, Texas: "If you will kindly give me space in your valuable paper I will now give an account of myself and work in the spiritual field for the past three months. I left my home in Cleveland, O., in September, serving the Independent Association of Spiritualists in Toledo, Ohio, for the month of October. Then I went to Battle Creek, Mich., for the first two Sundays of November. I found such a congenial reception and appreciation there that I felt loth to leave, but as I was booked for Springfield, Mo., with the First Association of Spiritualists, for the balance of November, I had to leave at the appointed time. I found Springfield a haven of rest for the tired sensitive. The society is small but harmonious, and works in harmony with and appreciates the efforts of a speaker and medium. Brother and Sister Dixon are royal entertainers. This noble band of workers is putting forth every effort to raise funds to build a temple, and I am sure they will succeed. Dec. 1 found me en route to Dallas, Texas, to serve the Truth Seekers' Spiritual Society. I find here a small society, but noble, earnest souls at the helm, working valiantly for the truth and humanity. I feel I have an appreciative and harmonious people here, and that much good will be done. I will be glad to correspond with those seeking my services for meetings through the week, and will officiate at funerals. Present address, 193 Grand avenue, Dallas, Texas."

The Rochester Daily Republican says: "Dr. E. H. Denslow, who has so ably entertained and instructed the Spiritualists and Liberals of this place, for the last three Sundays, will depart with his wife and sister, to-morrow, for Bloomington, Ill., and from there to the sunny south. The many friends of these good people regret their departure and hope they will return to this city in the gentle springtime and make this their future home. Dr. and Mrs. Denslow owned and operated a health home at Sturgis, Mich., and were considered as good representative citizens, but in care of a large number of suffering humanity, after many years, they became overtaxed, sold out and will spend some time in traveling."

Joel Byrnes writes: "The Progressive Thinker is growing better. I cannot do without it. It forces progressive thought upon its readers. Charles Dawbarn, Hudson Tuttle, Lyman C. Howe, Dr. Sweringen and others are first-class thinkers."

Rising Sun Spiritualist Mission holds services every Sunday, afternoon 2:30, evening 7:45, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue. Good singing. Speaking and spirit messages. All Welcome. Seats free. Special watch night services, New Year's eve, December 31, 1903, at the mission. A special program for this occasion. Luncheon will be served. Seats free.

Wanted, by the Church of Truth of Denver, Colo., a No. 1 speaker and medium. Address the secretary, I. T. Niles, 2011 Scott Place.

The Boston (Mass.) Journal says that at Athol, believers in the supernatural and those that place faith in palmists are preparing for the $1,000,000 fire which a fortune-teller recently predicted would lay Athol in ruins after Jan. 15. Mme. Marchmont's prophecy was published Nov. 29, and it produced a sensation among people who believe that the past, present and future can be told by the lines in the hand. The prophecy has even affected some people who profess to have no faith in the smooth tales of fortune tellers and say that such nonsense is food for superstitious people. Fire insurance agents are rubbing their hands with glee, for since the terrible prophecy was made they have insured the property of many who say they are going to be prepared for the worst. Among them are a few prominent people who are filled with dread, although some of them are ashamed to acknowledge it openly, it is said."

Mrs. Bertha Hasbrook writes: "The First Spiritualist Church Society of Battle Creek, Mich., is meeting with its usual amount of success. We have two meeting every Sunday. The Ladies' Auxiliary meets each Tuesday afternoon for our Thought Circle which is interesting a great number. Every two weeks we serve supper on Saturday night, and we are well patronized and enjoy a good reputation for serving the same. We aim to place the best talent on our platform. For the month of December we have Mrs. Eva McCoy of Marshalltown, Iowa. She gives short talks and mesages. We enjoy her work very much. She is a true worker. We have not engaged all our time, and if any good, honest speakers and mediums wish to correspond with us, they can do so by addressing me at N. 35 Division street, North."

That clear and logical writer, Henry Scharffetter, of Baltimore, has in a recent number of the Baltimore American, a fine article on Spiritualism in reply to an editorial in that paper. The uninformed public are given a clear and most educational view of the spiritual philosophy.

Aug. Recht writes: "The Society of Spiritual Truth which meets every Sunday at Crosby Hall, 423 Classon avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., had a well attended meeting December 20. Mr. Rassmussen gave a number of spiritual messages, assisted by Mrs. Henderson, of Newark, N. J., and Mrs. Smith, of Brooklyn."

The Spiritualist Church was fairly well attended last night, considering the frigid atmosphere and slippery streets. Those present were amply repaid for venturing out in the frosty air, by listening to Rev. Harry J. Moore who discoursed on the subject of 'Some Cardinal Teachings of Spiritualism.' The speaker dwelt at length on the mistake of sending the murderer from the gallows to the realm of eternal bliss with bouquets, prayers and the cross in his hands while his victim is condemned to darkness, and said if justice reigned, the murderer would be compelled by law to work out his salvation alone without the aid of priest or preacher. Mr. Moore holds the doctrine of forgiveness as pernicious and one that makes easy the path of the wrong-doer and should be relegated to the past with that other nightmare of rewards for right doing, and everlasting punishment for wrong-doing. The lecture was one of logical reasoning and eloquence, and it is to be regretted that the Spiritualists of this city cannot retain this young man indefinitely.—Rochester Daily Republican.

An extraordinary story comes from Penrhyn, in Wales, Eng.: The wife of a quarryman was bathing her 2-month-old babe, when she was thunderstruck to hear the child say plainly in Welsh, "Next year will be a terrible year, mother." The mother rushed in terror to the next door and told what she had heard to a neighbor, who ran immediately back, picked up the infant, and as she soothed and caressed it, coaxingly asked it if it had told its mother that next year would be a terrible year? To her astonishment, the child looked at her, said "Yes," and fell back dead. The story has been discussed far and wide, and the two women have been cross-questioned without shaking their story. At Penrhyn, where the people are rather primitive and religious, there is much forebodiug.

E. McMerrick writes from North Tonawanda, N. Y.: "We have in the two towns of Tonawanda and North Tonawanda about 20,000 population. Why is it not a good field for a good phenomenal medium, for I believe the phenomena of Spiritualism is the only true way to convince a person of immortality. Still it needs the lecturer to explain and illustrate the science of Spiritualism."

TAKE NOTICE.

All books advertised in the columns of The Progressive Thinker are for sale at this office. Bear this in mind.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

The negro race is nothing if not superstitious. In nearly all parts of Africa, in Central America, where the negro blood predominates, and in the West Indies, especially in San Domingo, the belief in charms, hoodoos and the power of incantations prevails almost universally. At any rate, it would be nearly impossible to find a colored man or woman without superstitions of some sort. Even in this country, where the races possesses superior intelligence, there exists in the negro mind a deep-seated belief in the supernatural that nothing seems potent to eradicate.

James H. Roberts writes: "Your paper just suits me to a T. The way you lay it to the quack preachers and their theology, the quack doctors and their humbug drugs, and especially the Catholic church, suits me to a fraction. Long may you live in the good cause of reform."

The Chicago Chronicle says: "As Chicago is the natural center for large gatherings, it was not without reason that the proposed International New Thought Association should be organized here. Chicago is hospitable to all new thought that does not conflict with established laws. It is also favorable to any gatherings wishing to seek through law a better order of things than the present. A recent decision in a New York court fining an intelligent man for not employing medical assistance for his sick child when the man was firmly convinced the means of healing used were the best possible seems like a violation of the rights granted by the Constitution of the United States. Other decisions of courts in other states have given the impression that the interests of physicians rather than a desire for the good of the patient have led to unjust interpretation of existing laws or to passing new laws favoring the doctors of medicine."

R. Cowell writes from Oakland, Cal.: "As a subscriber to your valuable paper, I have not noticed much news from this part of the country—not because there is not much to write about here in a city of 80,000. There are from four to five meetings every Sunday evening here, with some of the best speakers and mediums that can be found anywhere. One is conducted at Woodmen Hall, 521 Twelfth street, by Mrs. R. Cowell every Sunday at 8 p. m. Her audiences are large, and any visitors from the eastern state will be made welcome. Mr. Colville is visiting this city and is doing good work. Your valuable paper is in good demand."

The Post and Record, of Rochester, Minn., says: "Last evening about thirty of our residents gathered at the home of W. K. Sheppard on South Broadway and listened to a lecture on Spiritualism given by Rev. W. J. Erwood. Mr. Erwood is of pleasing appearance and has an excellent style of address. Before his lecture those who wished placed various articles they had been wearing on a table from which later the the speaker was to give readings. The meeting proper started with the singing of "In the Sweet Bye and Bye," during which the medium allowed those influences which move him to work upon his mind. In the lecture then given it was stated that the religion or better, theory of Spiritualism, is based on the fact that there is life after the change called death. Also that there is no unbridgeable chasm separating friends in this material life from those who have passed from this world, but that messages may be and are received from those who have died assuring people here of their happiness. It was also stated that Spiritualists do not seek to tear down any religious views, that they make no distinction as to sect. However, this belief does not try to make sectarians, rather non-sectarians. The lecture was interesting and seemed to prove to those present that there was no humbug, no trickery in Spiritualism. The readings given from the objects placed on the table were in many cases marvelous and wonderfully true."

C. W. Stewart and the Folsoms are meeting with splendid success at Howard Hall in St. Louis. On Sunday evening the hall was crowded to its utmost capacity with a highly intelligent audience, and after a well received lecture, messages were given by Mrs. Laura Jones, Mrs. Sheridan, of Iowa; Miss Ella Preston, of St. Louis, and Mrs. Josie K. Folsom. Miss Preston promises to be a most wonderful test medium, being able to read a letter verbatim in the pocket of a total stranger. Mrs. Folsom excelled herself in the marvelous manifestations which have already given her a national reputation. Their address is 3013 Dickson street, St. Louis, Mo.

Indiana has produced another freak for the contemplation of the civilized and credulous world. This freak is two acres in extent and is found in Kosciusko county, in the outskirts of the town of Silver Lake. Geologist Blatchley was told some time ago of strange doings at Silver Lake. A meadow where the grass crackled under the feet; where the ground imparted magnetism to steel; where the turning of the mould caused sickness to some and gave strength and vigor to others, was the subject of uncanny tales, and Blatchley scratched his official head, and wondered. The stories continued to come, and took shapes much more tangible than can be assumed by the correspondent's smoke-borne dream. Mr. Blatchley sent an assistant to verify the rumors. R. A. McDaniels, who delights in meddling in the progress of snakes, bugs and creeping things, went forth to study the crackling grass and to feel the shocks arising from the magnetic two acres. He found the current patch, and reported unofficially, that the stories told by the wondering and alarmed natives were no bigger than the homely truth.

G. R. Reed writes from Arizona: "I cannot do without The Progressive Thinker. I am greatly interested in the discussion of The Great Psychological Crime. I commenced reading the Symposium prejudiced against the book, which I had never read, but I had not gone far before a new light broke in upon me, and I now see plainly it is just what we need and it will surely lead to a higher standard of spiritism."

Geo. B. Moore writes: "We have been having some good meetings here at Fort Scott, Kansas. We meet at the W. O. W. hall Thursday and Sunday nights and the big hall has been filled to overflowing lately. Since Mrs. Bledsoe organized our society we have been getting in some new mediums and securing new lecturers and mediums. We have just finished an extra good engagement with the gifted lecturer, Mrs. Bessie J. Bellman, of Howard, Kansas. Mrs. Vestal, the daylight trumpet medium, gave tests, and now we are continuing to hold meetings on the regular nights to listen to one of our home lecturers. We have been highly entertained by Mr. and Mrs. M. Bartel. Young Charles Bartel is accompanying his parents on this trip. He takes spirit photographs, and the photo he has taken of Mrs. Etta Bledsoe is the marvel of the 20th century, as there is a full form materialization taken on the picture, and Mrs. Bledsoe's excellent control 'Sinceta,' is fully recognized on the same plate. Mrs. Mary L. Kaiser, the Fort Scott medium, recognizes several of her controls also on her picture. We would be pleased to hear from all lecturers and mediums coming our way. We will treat you nicely, and do all in our power to make your visit profitable."

Dr. E. H. Denslow writes: "Arriving in Rochester, Ind., Nov. 28, I spoke on Sunday, Nov. 29, both morning and evening to the energetic little Spiritualist society, composed of the representative minds of the city, who, though not many as to number, are still strong in zeal and enthusiasm. Dec. 2, Brother and Sister Sprague addressed the audience in the interests of organization. They are well known in Rochester and have many friends there. I also met Mr. Harry Moore, who has served the society in times past, and who is now trying to rise from out the shadow of his recent severe bereavement, the transition of his companion. I again addressed the society, Dec. 6 and 13, to very appreciative audiences, and after promising a return in the near future, myself and wife reluctantly bade them good-bye and speeded our way to Bloomington, Ill., where we are at present enjoying the hospitality of those genial souls, Colonel and Mrs. Freeman. Sunday, Dec. 20, I will address the good people of Bloomington, after which we shall continue our journey southward."

Mrs. L. Wood Phillips writes: "I feel that you are a friend to all subscribers of The Progressive Thinker, in letting them have it so cheap, and also your most excellent premium books. I wish to get The Seers of the Ages this time. The author's name is enough recommendation for the book. I think sometimes the discussions and arguments in The Progressive Thinker waxes too warm, especially concerning The Great Psychological Crime. As for myself, if it had not been for mediumship I never would have rejoiced in the blessed light of Spiritualism. Without the phenomena of Spiritualism, it would have no foundation whatever. I think the majority of us are not far enough advanced to substitute anything better, or even to understand. Maybe in time our senses will be so fine we can distinguish impressions on our minds made by our spirit friends, from our own thoughts."

Gertrude Soffel writes: "The semi-annual election of officers of the Church of the Golden Rule was held at 52 Dearborn street, Sunday last, when Dr. R. Greer was elected president; Gertrude Soffel, secretary, and Dr. J. H. Randall, pastor. Treasurer and other officers to be elected in the near future. After the election, Dr. Randall delivered most interesting, edifying remarks upon the value of the Golden Rule; also the meaning and mission of the Church of the Golden Rule, and declaring that the individual practice of the Golden Rule was indispensable to the welfare and happiness of the whole human family.

For instance, its first effects would be a sense of right and sense of honor among men, the abolition of crime, street violence and disorder. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye also even unto them." Thus the practice of the Golden Rule could injure no one, but on the contrary, would benefit every one. Dr. Randall is positively a high-class mentally illuminated, inspirational speaker, radical and progressive, and in newest thought, in all human reforms, is far in advance of the present times The Church of the Colden Rule will hold no services December 27, but will on January 3, when Dr. Randall will speak. Subject: 'The Golden Rule, the Natural Law of Human Conduct in the Home, in Society and in the World.'"

J. M. Bartscherer writes from 115 Louie street, Dayton, Ohio: "We are now conducting spiritual services here in Dayton, and are trying to build up the cause. They have asked your humble servant to teach the philosophy for them, and I have consented to do so provided they would unite as one force and make a strong effort to get a foothold in Dayton. I talked to them on Sunday, and am to continue the work and make a strong effort to be recognized as a factor. There is a good field here, but like all other denominations, they must put their shoulder to the wheel, and work, and if they will give me their spiritual support, I will guarantee that the material support will follow."

Secretary writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society was especially favored on Dec. 20, with a lecture by Mrs. Caroline Catlin, subject, 'Is there any real conflict between Spiritualism and the teachings of the Bible. To say it was fine is putting it mildly. Any one who can handle a subject as she did hers, should be put to the front where she would be sure to stay. On January 3, Dr. H. A. Cross will deliver his lecture, 'Life Here and Hereafter.' Everybody welcome. Services every Sunday evening at 7:45. 323 East 55th street, Jackson Park car."

N. A. St. Clair writes from Toronto, Canada: "On Saturday night, Dec. 19, very interesting services were conducted by the Toronto Spiritualist Association, being the ordination of Mrs. E. A. Calvert and Mr. F. C. Wilson as ministers and teachers of the spiritual philosophy. Mrs. Calvert is a resident of Toronto, and has been an earnest and active worker in the cause of Spiritualism for several years. She is a lady of marked individuality and has many accomplishments, possessing a high order of intelligence and ability. She is well versed in biblical and Spiritualistic literature, a fluent speaker and excellent and forceful lecturer. We predict for Mrs. Calvert a brilliant and useful career in the work of spreading truth and dispelling error, and most heartily recommend her to societies desiring the services of an energetic worker and accomplished lecturer. She leaves here for Los Angeles, California early in January, for the benefit of her health, and will remain there several months. Mr. F. C. Wilson is a diligent worker of long standing in the cause in Toronto. He is superintendent of the lyceum, and takes a deep interest in imparting truth to the young. He is well posted in scientific matters; is an entertaining and capable lecturer, a splendid debater and a clear and logical reasoner. We expect Mr. Wilson to eventually occupy a prominent place in Spiritualistic ranks. Appropriate addresses were delivered by Dr. B. F. Austin, Mrs. Kate R. Stiles and others. The association feels encouraged by the progress being made in the good work in Toronto. Mrs. Stiles serves the Hamilton, Ont., Spiritualist Society during January, and Mr. Harding returns to the Toronto Spiritualist Association for January and February."

Geo. Hamilton Brooks writes: "Nancy McKay Goruon, the well known author and lecturer, will speak for the Englewood Spiritual Union at Hopkins' Hall, 528 West 63rd street, Sunday evening at 8, on the very interesting subject, 'The Omnipresence of Life.' The masterly manner in which the subject will be presented will insure a very large attendance."

J. F. Smith writes: "The Progressive Thinker, the best Spiritualist paper published on the face of the earth today."

Dr. Freedman, the Australian Healer, writes: "My love and personal knowledge of the phenomena of Spiritualism, prompts me to write at this time briefly in the columns of your progressive and newsy paper. Last week Mrs. Effie Moss, the well-known and tried materializing medium, arrived in Chicago. This is her first visit to demonstrate her powers in this city. I regard her as a materializing medium above reproach. I have studied this phase extensively and have witnessed more than a hundred seances through this medium alone, and can stake my reputation that all those who will give her a visit will be well repaid. Chicago needs good mediums to spiritualize the homes and stimulate those who have lost courage in this phase of phenomena. Through this medium your friends come and distinctly identify themselves. She is holding meetings at 3233 Wabash avenue."

Hattie G. Webster writes from Columbus, Ohio: "The West Side Lyceum will give a Christmas entertainment, Wednesday evening, Dec. 23, consisting of songs, recitations, fancy and flag drills all apropos of the event, the celebration of the coming to the world of that grandest of mediums, the lowly Nazarene, whose life was the exemplification of purity and goodness; whose teachings of brotherly love, if practiced by his followers, would all too soon usher in the millennium. Would that it were better understood by all Spiritualists and so-called Christians. Our lyceum scholars will each receive candy and a gift; also extra prizes for the best recitations. We have the banner society and lyceum of Ohio, inasmuch as we have bought and almost paid for the first spiritual temple in the state. We have enrolled on our book seventy scholars, a great many of whom are children of non-spiritual parents. Have been organized since Jan. 3, 1901. Hattie G. Webster, conductor; H. E. Boerstler, assistant."

Mrs. Clara E. Strong, president of the Sunshine Club, holds public services 724 Washington street, America Hall, Boston, Mass. Sunday morning circle, 11o'clock; Sunday-school 12:30. Afternoon and evening service at 3 and 8 o'clock.

Mrs. Emma Gayser writes: "I have just received the two books and am ever so much obliged for your kindness. I have taken worlds of comfort reading my papers. I would almost rather go with only one meal a day than to go without The Progressive Thinker in my house."

Dr. Beverly writes: "Our box party was a great success. Nearly two hundred were in attendance and were delighted. The booths for the mediums and palmists were well patronized. It was long after the midnight hour when the well-delighted guests wended their way home. Our committee will give another dance early next month. We expect soon to announce some noted mediums to demonstrate for us, as we have nothing but first-class talent. We welcome all mediums who wish to use their gifts to help others into this beautiful light."

Catholics all over the world may eat meat on New Year's day, which falls this year on Friday, by a special indulgence of Pope Pius X. A letter from Archbishop Quigley conveying the Pope's ruling in this matter will be read in all the Catholic churches. The privilege is a remarkable one, being the first time in the history of the Catholic church that papal permission was granted allowing Catholics to partake of meat on Friday, except when the feast of Christmas fell on that day. Alas! what superstition and ignorance in the Catholic church.

Mrs. C. H. Mullins writes: "I herewith send notice of Mrs. L. D. Wynkoop's death. She was a beautiful woman. She had been a Spiritualist for over thirty years. She was 77 years of age at the time of her death. Although she had suffered intense pain for over a year, with little, if any relief, her face was beautiful to look upon, lying in the casket with a peaceful smile resting there. Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond officiated at the funeral."

Albert Harrison Waitt, the gifted healer, is spending the holidays with his family in Minneapolis.

J. M. White writes from Kansas City, Mo.: "For two Sundays past, Mr. Aber has been holding test meetings at his residence, and all attending received messages from their departed ones. Visitors to the city should take the 12th street car, east to Bales avenue, then walk north to Tenth street. People of the highest social standing are attending these seances, and no one yet has gone away without receiving proof of continuity of life. Words cannot express the manifestations here; they must be seen to be appreciated."

A MESSAGE,

Purporting to Be From Spirit S. S. Jones.

I am glad to be able through you to say that this life, this state of the soul this side of the grave, is a glorious reality, which demonstrates, beyond the possibility of a doubt, that truth of the philosophy of our glorious faith.

There is nothing in Christian ethics which commends itself to the pure soul. To conceive of a cruel and revengeful God, to think of a Creator who possesses all power, and whose goodness is boundless, so creating the human soul, that it must sin through ignorance, to a great extent in the pilgrimage through human life, and then punishing such sin, is beyond the power of those who believe in justice, and who are endowed with a reasonable amount of sympathy.

When on earth my whole being revolted at the teachings of the Christian church, in regard to the soul and the hereafter. I made war upon those monstrous teachings when in earth life, and I am making war upon them here. Such notions on earth, are cruel relics of barbarism. They are the echoes of a savage and truculent primordial age. They are becoming less and less pronounced as the world advances in civilization; and will, one of these glorious eras for humanity, be remembered as one remembers the hideous nightmare.

The human family is advancing. Its vanguard has already reached that place, where the correct view of God and the universe is obtained. The grand Spiritualistic philosophy has found a permanent abiding place on earth, and it will never desert its post. Slowly, surely, gloriously its hopeful and truthful teachings will take hold of the hearts and consciences of man, and this sphere of being will be en rapport with the children of men on earth.

Faithful bands of spirits here have long labored to bring the human soul into harmony with the conditions of truth, and that labor has not been in vain. It has been gladly and freely bestowed in the past; it will be a willing labor of love in the future.

This is not a condition of inaction and nothingness, where, loafing around a throne, songs are chanted forever. It is a sphere demanding the highest service, surrounded with boundless opportunities. The true soul enlists at once in that service and avails itself of those vast opportunities. So, we are enabled to aid our friends on earth and to direct them aright, as well as to fit ourselves for greater usefulness as future ages shall come and go.

I do not know what is in store for us in the future. No one around me knows. We are moving onward and upward continually to a "higher plane and broader view,

"Hills peep o'er hills and Alps on Alps arise."

The possibilities of the future are infinitude. There seems to me to be no end to the progress of the soul. The future is wisely hidden from the pilgrim, as he joyously proceeds on his upward journey. He feels that he must make the best of the conditions which surround him and with which he is blessed; and to securely rest upon the knowledge that the Great Source of all his blessings can be implicitly trusted from the cradle upward and forever.

There is no death, there is no decay for the soul. Its capacities are boundless. Its ambitions should be lofty. And the sooner the soul, which is the real being, gets into harmony with truth and with God, on the bleak shores of earthly existence, the better for its progress here.

In the regions of earth emancipated souls encircle you about. These phantom beings whisper to you encouragement and hope; they try to lead you in the path of virtue and truth; they inspire you with the belief of immortality; they endeavor to bind up the bleeding heart and wipe away the bitter tears of grief. They are angels of mercy to the incarnate souls of earth. Let your soul listen when they commune with you. Heed well the holy impressions which they make.

What a gigantic, what a glorious, what a happy creation is the great universe. It is without beginning or end, but it is ever progressing to higher and higher ideals. The old idea that the Almighty is the same yesterday, to-day and forever, is a beautifully expressed error. He is the very soul and life of progress. Without progress there would be stagnation and death.

Rest assured that you have commenced an endless journey—one full of labor and change. But one which will develop your highest qualities, enlarge the scope of your emotions, and increase your happiness, as you advance along the line of eternal progress.

Materializations.

To the Editor:—Through an invitation, Mrs. May McCoy, the materializing medium, of 950 Case avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, also her seance manager, Mr. H. E. Chase, came down to Canton this week and so far has held two very interesting seances under strict test conditions, she being placed in a chair in the cabinet and tightly and securely handcuffed to the chair upon which she sat, the keyholes of the handcuffs sealed, the seal marked by a member of the circle and the key retained by him until the seance was over, after which the seal was examined, the handcuffs unlocked and removed by him and other members of the circle. The cabinet used by Mrs. McCoy is about six feet high, six feet long and four feet deep and can be placed in any portion of a room. The two seances mentioned were held in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dohn, 928 West Ninth street. The cabinet was placed diagonally across the southwest corner of the room with no window nor back door to it. The chairs were placed facing the cabinet, in horse-shoe shape, giving each and every one a good view of the cabinet. Mrs. McCoy's main seance control is Captain John Edward Smith, an old sailor, and for years was captain of the Two Fannies, a boat that plied between Cleveland and Detroit and other points on the great lakes, but who during a storm at sea, lost his earth life. Another important as well as interesting cabinet control is little Miss Arvella Pierson, who died some years ago in Cleveland, and with whose family the Medium, Mrs. McCoy, was quite well acquainted.

During the first seance given this week by Mrs. McCoy twenty-eight forms came out of the cabinet and into the room, a majority of whom were friends or relatives of those present and with whom the spirits held whispered conversations, some of which were of several minutes duration while other conversations only lasted a moment or so, the spirit being able apparently to hold the form for only a short period of time.

Another very interesting feature of Mrs. McCoy's seances is the making of lace under a good light by spirit Jennette Lambert, a lady of French birth, while out in the room and in plain view of the sitters. In addition to the cabinet controls, near and dear friends of the sitters, there came a spirit who claimed to be a Hindoo. This spirit came to a lady who was in the circle and whose daughter is a medium, to say to her that he was helping her daughter in her mediumship. An old colored woman, Aunt Peggie Jackson, who often materialized in seances held by Harry Archer, also same and a more typical southern darkey the writer has never seen. Several Indians dressed in their native costumes strongly manifested, one of whom gave the writer in plain view of the sitters, a very satisfactory treatment for a severe spell of headache; the pain disappeared and has not yet returned. The second seance was equally as interesting as the first but for want of time, and as I do not care to take up too much of your valuable space, I will not ask for space in which to have you record many things that no doubt would be interesting to many of the readers of The Progressive Thinker. These seances have created quite an interest among the Spiritualists of Canton, in fact have been the means of bringing out a number who seldom seek after truth through the channels of phenomena, two of whom being for the first time convinced that materialization is a fact. Mrs. McCoy expects to be in Canton for a week, during which several other seances will be held.

How a Woman Paid Her Debts

I am out of debt, thanks to the Dish-washer business. In the past three months I have made $600.00 selling Dish-washer. I never saw anything sell so easily. Every family needs a Dish-washer and will buy one when shown how beautifully it will wash and dry the family dishes in two minutes. I sell from my own house. Each Dish-washer sold brings me many orders. The dishes are washed without wetting the hands. That is why ladies want the Dish-washer. I give my experience for the benefit of any one who may wish to make money easy. I buy my Dish-washers from the Mound City Dish-washer Co., St. Louis, Mo. Write them for particulars. They will start you in business in your own home. L. A. C.

Brittan, but I have no recollection of a thought he advanced or a word uttered. But with him was a young man who sang, 'What shall be my angel name.' The man, the song have been singing in my consciousness ever since; the man was Prof. Longley, the song, one of his earliest compositions."—J. S. Loveland.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

Hudson Tuttle.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. O. Barnett: Q. Please show the consistency of the Universal Intelligence working malformations in the animal and other kingdoms?

A. The question rises in a mind which is shadowed by the old conception of God and Nature; of an all-wise creator, in whose work there must be perfect consistency, harmony and justice. Constantly we see, on every hand, the failure of this ideal. The purposes of the Good God miscarry, and fail. The result is often disastrous and is called evil. With our minds clouded by preconceived ideas the universe becomes a mystery, and if we follow in that direction its perplexities can never be made clear.

The creative or evolving forces are constantly active and their results depend on an infinitude of conditions. They, when unobstructed, move in determined lines which are called laws. When they meet with obstructions, their course may be changed, and what should be beautiful formations become "malformations." The sting of a fly produces a gall on the oak leaf. The processes of growth are the same, their direction has been changed. The embryo which has the possibilities of human perfection, may become a monstrosity, because of nerve-shock, or failure of nourishment. The energies of growth are blind as to results. The tissue-creating vitality apparent in a cancer, are as active as in the formation of normal cellular structure. It is even greater, as though it would atone for false product, by greater quantity. The apple is a product of vital forces, and the worm at its heart, aborting its perfection is another product of the same forces. Thus in all nature, there is nowhere visible an all-discerning intelligence with plans which infallibly reach their ends. There are millions of failures to one success. There is no compensation for the ones who fail. There is no justice visible in the action and reaction of the elements or forces. Justice, right, intelligence as comprehended by man, are entirely ideas which exist in his mind alone. When he applies thought as manifest by him to the process of the universe, and thinks it is governed as he would govern it were he possessed of omnipotent power and understanding, he finds himself lost in a mysterious confusion of contradictions.

Seeker: Q. Can you give the names of the spiritual papers published in foreign countries?

A. In England there is published Light, weekly, London; The Two Worlds, Manchester, weekly; The Spiritual Review, monthly, and The Lyceum, for the Children's Progressive Lyceum, London.

In other countries there is published, Weekblad, Hague, Holland; Journal du Magnetisme, Paris, France; La Monde Occulte, Paris, France; Review Scientifique et Morale du Spiritisme, Paris, France; Mediumship, Monthly Review, Rome, Italy; Revista Espirita, monthly, Porto Alegro, Brazil; Reforador, Rio Janeiro; Luce e Ombra, Milan, Italy; Dzewey Lucia, Warsaw, Poland; Zeitschrift fur Spiritismus, weekly, Leipsic, Germany, Revue d' Etures Psychique, monthly, Paris, France; Constantia, Buenos Ayres; La Revolution, Barcelona, Spain; Luz y Union, Barcelona; Le Messenger, Liege, Belgium; La Progress Spirite, ——, France; La Nuova Parola, Rome, Italy, and Harbinger of Light, Melbourne, Australia.

These magazines and weekly papers have editorial writers of splendid ability, and are constantly publishing brilliant contributions in every department of Psychic Science. They abound with well observed facts, and descriptions of phenomena, and philosophical and scientific discussion. Translations from them would be highly interesting and instructive to American readers of Spiritualistic literature.

own spi[illegible]rvative Spiritualist: Q. Is it Thi[illegible] for the growth of the cause, as Conse[illegible]Spiritualism respectable, rather not bette[illegible]closely maintain that which right?

A. No ca[illegible]Base ever grew "respectable" by not maintai[illegible]ect to place[illegible] for themselves, truth and [illegible]ds are so uncomfortably and destro[illegible]t it, and think it devolves on them[illegible]ve it rank and position; to begild, bejewel and bedizzen it to make it presentable to the religions of the past. "It must," say they, "not fear to appear a little like orthodoxy, although at heart it may be quite different; its garb must be something after the old style, or else people will be frightened away from all connection with it and thus be shut out from the benefits it might give them."

They would pray verbally at the beginning of every lecture to an imaginary God and hang on all the oratorical flourishes about Him and His Son, that would please Catholic or Protestant, with a double meaning, one for the conservative and one for the radical portion of their audience—providing they are well enough versed in allegory to make any meaning out of it. They would make frequent references to the Holy Bible, as if they deemed it infallible, when they well enough knew that a truth uttered by Tom Thumb is just as true as though uttered by Moses. I do not know but they would robe it in a creed and [illegible]ads and a cross around its ne[illegible] to appear "respectable," and excuse themselves by saying "such things mean nothing, and if they please people, let them enjoy them."

We want nothing to do with that which is meaningless. The demands of usefulness are enough to engross our minds without our giving our attention to mere forms. Ours is a practical religion; its genius may be eccentric, inasmuch as it does not ape the forms and ceremonies of the past.

Possibly by catering to opinions and appearances, Spiritualism might draw into its ranks more aristocracy and wealth, and thus gain "position," but why should it care to do this? Truth is not often found with the crowd. Its cross and oriflamme of victory has been held aloft by the scorned and the vanquished. The shouting crowd, in all ages, has been beguiled by falsehood. The great reformers have been content with their immortal inspirations, and measured not their success by the praise of those in high places.

The religion which makes this life a "vale of tears," instead of a joy in its living, as it was intended to be; which makes heaven dependent on dogmatic belief, forms and observances, is just what Spiritualism came to change. The aristocracy which tramples the poor in the dust, and dwarfs their souls that it may glitter in luxury and ease, Spiritualism would reform, not win by soft apologies. We would not have Spiritualism pick the pockets of the children of labor to build elegant churches and lofty steeples in order to be respectable in the eyes of the time-serving crowd. It must win by the glory of the truths it represents, and the earnest devotion and spiritual unfolding of its adherents.

If we would have a great and glorious cause, to mark and make an era in the history of the world, which is the high purpose of the angel forces, there must not only be belief and knowledge, but zeal and devotion. The reform must begin with each one who claims to be a receiver of its teachings. Every ignoble person who professes belief in any cause, brings that cause into disgrace as he is selfish and ignoble. It is the magnanimity of aim and endeavor of adherents that gives character to the cause they advocate and compels respect from even its enemies.

We are constantly reminded to "try the spirits," whether they be good or evil. We may try them in a way not in the meaning of this advice—their love and patience, and watchful care—and before we arrogate to try them, should we not spiritualize ourselves and thereby become somewhat equal to the task?

Spiritualism has not for its purpose to materialize spirits, but to spiritualize man. If he reaches upward to the great occasion, the cause will need no apology, but command the attention and admiration of the thinking world.

What Is Your Key Note?

To the Editor:—Through my recent discoverey of key note or the law of applied tone, I have thought out the secret of Mental Telepathy. Key note is the law of affinity. Persons that are constructed in the same key note, their thoughts are one.

I have made experiments with this method in many ways and have been convinced, to my entire satisfaction, that by this system, thought transference is possible. I know that your paper is open to give any practical scientific creation a fair showing, hence I seek your aid in giving this truth to the world. I want you to procure, through the columns of your paper, some highly intelligent men to promote this experiment to explain the principle in detail in relation to the law of applied tone or thought transference. The following article will give full instructions how to proceed in getting favorable results, so that persons that feel interested in this subject may have a better understanding of this project.

In the first place those that want to investigate my system of thought communication must determine their key note by going to a musical instrument and by speaking in their natural tone of voice find the key that chords with their speech, then they must discover the pitch. The range of pitch of all person's voices is designated in two octaves, above and below middle C. There are only twelve tones in that measure that relate to all creatures.

The conditions to be complied with in order to accomplish good results are these: We must become passive by vacating the mind from all thought; the persons that operate must be constructed in the same key note and the same pitch in order to complete a perfect chord vibration; they must be given up wholly to this one object; their thoughts must be directed to the communicant; the communicant must be in a passive state, then you must think the tone in your mind and send the message with all the force of your mentality.

When we come to investigate the other systems of communication such as the telgraph, telephone and Marconigram, we discover that they are only systems of tone transference, but conductors are used such as sensitive plates, batteries and wires, these are only tracks to perfect accord, as in elocution we raise and lower the voice to make our sentences more impressive.

There are twelve distinct key notes and pitches. Each one of these represents an element of an affinity. A person constructed in a higher key of the same tone, cannot render a perfect sympathetic vibration, hence we must have a perfect chord to get good results.

Any persons that feel interested in this mode of communication, if you find [illegible]e that their natural tone is [illegible]nd in the Key of D below middle [illegible]p all appoint an hour that the [illegible]ir spiritu[illegible]on can take place. I require [illegible]key note because I am constructed in that tone and pitch, as I can instruct you so that we can get perfect communications, and have the conditions right, to put it on a practical basis. All communications to be published in your paper. For information concerning this project address

THE PATHS WE TRAVEL,

Or, Seek We Not the Same Goal?

A letter came to me one day
From a friend I loved, who was far away.
We differed widely in our religious views,
And it seemed to me that this difference grew.
As the years pased by we drifted farther apart,
Till a sad regret crept into my heart,
And it appeared to me that the barrier so wide
Would forever our lives divide.
As I read the letter I held in my hand,
These words met my eyes from the page I scanned:
"What good thing have you or will have,
That I do not or will not also have?"
Like hands that clasp over an open grave,
These words, for me, swept the barriers away,
And the thought came quickly to my mind,
"Sure, what good thing have I, my friend may not also find?"
When from our prisons of flesh we are freed,
No thought will be given to these earthly creeds.

And while I mused upon this theme,
There came to me this vision or dream:
I seemed to leave my quiet home,
And where I willed, I was free to roam.
First I sought a narrow country lane,
Through which two sturdy farmers slowly came;
They seemed engaged in an earnest disputation,
And the words which first attracted my attention,
Were spoken by the elder man, evidently a good deacon:
"I tell you, John, you are making a big mistake;
'Tis sartinly the wrong path you're going to take.
Now I will follow this well-beaten road,
Which for ages before us, our fathers have trod,
And there is no question but 'tis the only way,
That will surely land us in the Golden City."

John impatiently shrugged his shoulder,
And hitching his pantaloons an inch or two higher,
Answered the deacon with a scornful drawl:
"Wall, I guess you'll never see them golden walls.
You'll travel long and travel far,
If 'tis that old path you're going to foller.
Now the road I take is a leetle wider,
Not so hard and a great deal smoother,
And they as ought to know, dew say,
That a feller can't nohow miss the way."
They had reached the end of their argument,
And face to face they paused a moment.
"We must part here," the elder said,
John simply answered, "Good-bye, dad."

Each eagerly seeking this Golden Gate,
Sought to find it by paths that were separate.
I followed after this father and son,
As each in his chosen path walked on,
And each was so certain the other was wrong,
That he supposed he was walking alone,
But all the while, strange to say,
Both were going the very same way.
The separate paths they spoke of, lay side by side,
The distance between them was not an inch wide,
But it's extent might have been a thousand miles,
For all that passed between them of words or smiles.

The first and eldest speaker thought,
"Poor boy,
He will never reach that city of joy.
I would have kept him with me if I could,
And made him follow the paths he should.
It grieves me much that we ne'er shall meet,
But many there are who shall not walk the golden streets."
John thought, with a touch of scorn,
"Such pig-headedness I have never seen since I was born.
I would have liked to see the old fellow dwell in clover,
But now, of course, that is all over,
He has gone way off his beat,
And we never again shall meet."
So they trudged on side by side,
While I left their narrow paths for those more wide.

The next I sought was a flowery dell,
A boy and girl stood by an old-fashioned well.
In the girl's dark eyes gleamed a flash of light,
As she said with passionate earnestness, "I tell you, I am right,
I know the road you will choose to-morrow,
Will only take you to death and sorrow;
'Tis narrow and winding and leads through dark woods,
By it blooms nothing fair or good,
You will cry for water and starve for bread,
But the golden streets of the city you seek,
You will never tread."

The boy gazed upon her with a saddened face,
"I am sure you are wrong, my dearest Grace,
Though the path does pass through the darkened wood,
'Tis not always the sunniest paths that lead to good,
But as you will not go my way,
I have nothing more that I can say,
You must take your sun-lit road,
I can only leave you in the hands of God."

I followed the boy in the path he trod,
He was earnest and true and relied on a God.
He patiently climbed the rocky steeps,
And his face bore a look that was brave and sweet,
But strange to say, not far away,
Was the path the girl had taken that very day,
And the dancing sunbeams that made it bright,
Also shed on the boy the same glad light,
While the welcome shade of the forest trees,
For her, softened the heat of the sun's fierce rays.
But they who walked so near together,
Were thinking the while, they had lost each other forever.

I left them for a city street,
And again it was two men my gaze did meet;
They were pacing slow upon the pavement,
And seemed engrossed in some disagreement.
I wondered, half wearily, "Can it be,
That no two minds will e'er agree?"
Both were broad-minded, as the term goes,
But the youngest one was a little more so.
Both were strong and richly clad,
But one face glowed with a look that was glad,
While the other was shadowed by an expression sad.
The eldest turned with his sorrowful gaze,
"My friend, if you will, you must go your ways,
I have labored long to make you understand,
That the road I take is broad and grand,
Though the way sometimes may be a little hilly,
Yet it surely leads to that Golden City."
The other answered with a laugh, hearty and free,
"For the life of me, Allan, I cannot see
Why you cannot just as well go with me.
The road I travel is wide and beautiful,
And if together, we could be sociable,
But it is all just as you say.
Farewell, till we meet some other day."
Upon each other they turned their backs,
And both entered upon divergent tracks,

Much surprised at this strange vision,
Of human beings who think they travel in different directions,
In order to reach a far-famed land,
Where all is peaceful, glorious and grand,
I lingered awhile in the regions of space,
And followed each traveler as they sought this place,
And will you believe that the truth I state,
Every one of them came to its entrance gate.

The farmer young and the farmer old,
Were glad to meet in their City of Gold,
And John said as he grasped the old man's hand,
"Wall, I swan, we have both reached this blessed land."
The boy and the girl all in good time,
Greeted each other in this happy clime,
And the boy said, as their eyes met,
"If we had only known, we could have traveled together, Pet."

The men who parted in the distant town,
Were again united on the long-sought ground.
The one with the frank and winsome smile,
Said, "Allan, I have waited quite a while,
But I knew, though you went a different way,
I was sure to meet you here some day,
For no matter what roads they travel through,
No soul who is honest, kind and true,
Can fail to find at his journey's end,
His hope's full fruition in this beautiful land."

I could stay no longer in this home of the blest,
For I must enter again the world's unrest,
But I had learned a great lesson,
Which was worth a good fortune:

The importance we place on our different opinions,
Mostly exists in our imaginations.
We are all seeking the very same good,
But we each persist in traveling our own road,
And after all is said and done,
The eagerly sought good may by each be won.
It is better far to advance each other's happiness,
Than to be foolishly wrangling over our differences.

TWO LIVING GODS,

Besides a Multitude of Dead Ones.

Yes, I, too, have got the ecclesiaphobia teribly, and have had it for a long time, until it has become chronic and deep-seated, and I did not know what was the trouble with me until D. W. Hull came to the rescue and diagnosed the disease as a peculiar species of "rabies," prevalent among "Spiritualists." Now this disease was caused by the use of a compound of common sense and reason working together, and impregnating the mind to that extent that it utterly ignores the use of Rev. D. D., church, religon, bible, the atonement, foreordination, predestination, infinite intelligence, devil, hell and all such high-sounding terms and titles that emanate from the orthodox liturgy, and to reject all such orthodox habiliments is a sure sign of having the "rabies," and how to get rid of this mania is a conundrum, as the patient's mind is not in a condition to undergo an operation in favor of old idolatrous prefixes and add them to the fair name of our accepted cause of Spiritualism, and all those Spiritualists that think that they can undergo the operation and survive, had better call upon the rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them from the face of all true and unadulterated Spiritualists

Those that peruse the pages of The Progressive Thinker can readily discern that there is a very striking difference in the view and opinions even of its ablest contributors on the subject of Spiritualism and its habiliments.

This is the direct result of a higher degree of unfoldment of the senses, the education of the mind, brought about by the higher order of intelligence communicating through the mediumistic element and the enlightening columns of The Progresive Thinker. As people advance in knowledge their minds become more active and susceptible of facts, and they become more self-reliant, more independent and more outspoken in their conviction, and this is more than would be expected from a society that was filled with so many followers of different elements and ideas, and all claiming to be Spiritualists, yet having but an abbreviated code of principles as an organization by which to be governed.

Many of these contributors to the columns of The Progressive Thinker and some of the speakers in the Spiritual ranks, also, make a very free and pronounced use of the word "God" in their articles and speeches. Now, these writers and speakers are supposed to be people of superior talent and controlled by a high order of spirit intelligence, and present their articles and speeches as they understand them, using such words, language and phrases as suit their purpose best, and quoting from various writers to introduce outside evidence to substantiate their points of argument, and no doubt have full faith in what they write and speak, as being correct and indisputable, and as such are supposed to be well informed and would not use language or quote sentences that would be objectionable to the cause they represent or its followers. Knowing full well that it is for the public eye and for the public ear. But their writings and speeches are subject to public scrutiny and public criticism.

God No. 1. Now, the orthodox hold that theirs is the only true and divine God, that he is a superior being, having always existed and that he created the heavens and the earth, and "all" things therein in six days and pronounced it good, and that he measured the waters in the "hollow" of his hand and measured heaven with a span, and the earth with a measure and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance, and that he rested from all his work on the seventh day, and that he rules the universe by his will and the might of his power, and that he is a very jealous God, not allowing any other god to exist.

God No. 2—Many of the writers for The Progressive Thinker use the sentence, "The God of Nature." Nok, who or what or where is this god of nature? Does such a god exist or is it a myth of the imagination. If the universe was created by the orthodox God it must be him, but if it always existed, as many of us Spiritualists believe, it was not created at all, consequently no orthodox God or God of Nature about it. But if our Spiritual friends mean that Nature is god, they should say so, and make a definite point that all can understand.

The expression carries with it the belief in some kind of supreme ruler, while there is no visible proof that there is any such being in existence, only a vague imaginary theory of the mind that perhaps such may be the case. Yet it is very important for the welfare and prosperity and stability of the Spiritual fraternity that they more particularly define what kind of a god they believe in, if any god at all. The idea of believing in an infinite intelligence is very indefinite, pure imagination and no god at all, as intelligence cannot exist outside of an organized body of material substance. But if of any value at all, it must be one of the attributes of the orthodoz God, which infinite intelligence I for one entirely repudiate, while many Spiritualists cling to the belief from their early impressions. HAS JUST BEEN ISSUED, ENTITLED

BY PHYSICAL AND MENTAL METHODS, ILLUSTRATED.

A Bridge from the Old to the New; the Dawn of a New Day in Medical Practice. A Clear, Short-Cut Treatise on the Cause and Cure of Disease.

By MARVIN E. CONGER, M. D.
Assisted by ROSA C. CONGER, M. D.

Nature Cure teaches how to heal by simple home remedies.
It teaches how Nature cures.
It does not use poisonous drugs.
It does not endorse dangerous experiments with the surgeon's knife.
It will save money in every home.
It is entirely free from technical rubbish.
It teaches how typhoid and other fevers may be cured at once.
It teaches how pneumonia, la-grippe, diphtheria and other forms of disease considered danger is, may be cured in twenty-four hours.
It is, as a medical book for homes, THE BEST, and is up-to-date in every particular.
There is no similar book, no medical, hygienic or reformatory doctor book that compares with THE NATURE CURE.

The light is turned on to objectionable medical mysteries, latin prescriptions, dogmatic theories and dangerous experiments of the present expensive medical practice.

Every pains has been taken to make the leading points so plain that all, young and old, may easily understand. Condensed facts, short, clear-cut paragraphs are some of the attractive features of THE NATURE CURE.

The new and better methods of curing the sick and preventing disease, have never been so clearly stated in plain English for the plain people, as in NATURE CURE.

Our Definition of Medicine.—Any method or remedy that will remove, alleviate or modify pain and restore the sick to normal condition, is practical medicine.

Stripped of mystery and deception, the study and practice of medicine can be carried to success in every intelligent home. NATURE CURE will lead the way to certain success.

The best medical practice is the one that will cure in the least time with the least risk and expense.

Nature Cure is a true exponent of the practice of medicine as defined, and stands squarely upon truth and demonstration, rejecting theories and experiments wherever health and life are endangered.

The book contains 375 pages, and is finely illustrated; the mechanical and artistic work are the very best. Bound in fine English cloth, marble edges, $2.00; common cloth $1.50.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as o Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.
8vo. Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "other-worldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Conditions of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BEYOND THE VAIL

A Sequel to "Rending the Vail."

The two volumes together as a record of practically obtained facts demonstrating the claims of Modern Spiritualism as to post mortal survival, are unique and overwhelming.

Every communication is from a full materialized spirit form, in good light, and either spoken audibly or written in full view by the form. There is not an automatic or trance message in the book.

It is illustrated by several engravings, the originals of which were drawn in the presence of the circle by a full form materialized spirit artist.

BEYOND THE VAIL is, as a rule, the experiences of spirits in both worlds—their own account of their lives on earth and their progress after death to their present condition of freedom from earth conditions. The narratives are intensely interesting, instructive and often highly dramatic.

Coincident with these are the profoundly philosophical comments of the controlling spirits of the seances. Prof. William Denton, Thomas Paine, Dr. W. H. Reed and others—covering, law, medicine, jurisprudence, theology and metaphysics. There are no books in existence of like character or of higher authority. Price, by mail, $1.75.

Some Curious Stories of Death Warnings.

It is not ancient families of distinction alone that have their banshees or death warnings, though the spectral woman beheld in Ireland by Lady Fanshawe, with her shrieks and flying hair, is the most popular and picturesque, and, linguistically considered, the only genuine banshee. Other warnings are inexplicable knockings as in the case of the Woodd family, in which the phenomena are recorded from about 1660 to the present day.

In the writer's own family, a curious creature, "like a cat but not a cat," has been on duty for some seventy years at least, but has no tradition attached to it, and has only been seen by women of the kin, and only before the deaths of women. I first heard of it when, as a boy, I saw a black and tan cat, not a common sort of cat, which the terriers, for once, declined to chevy. My description led to an account of the family portent, but I believed that mine was a common cat, and did not believe in the death coincidence which was detected. The dates did not appear to fit, when closely considered.

A curious species of death warning is that in a story, perfectly well attested, of a table by a deathbed which suddenly gave a jump. The clergyman who was praying alone beside the dying man saw this feat and the people in the room below heard the noise and asked what had caused it The names of the observers are published. I now give another set of specimens of this sort of warning, only altering the names of the witnesses. On October 16, 1879, my informant, Father Jones, was a boy of 10. He was sitting at a table, drawing, in view of his mother, who sat by a window at work. Both commanded a view of the chimneypiece, on which stood a large, heavy earthenware bowl. Mrs. Jones, the mother, corroborates. Beside her was an old-fashioned octagonal work table, the top of which had a hinge, and opened as the lid over a work box Such a table, hexagonal, is before me, and the lid is of considerable solidity and weight, being in early Victorian mahogany The lid of the work table was shut. Both persons fronted the fireside. Suddenly the attention of both was attracted by the odd behavior of the earthen bowl on the chimneypiece. It slowly worked its way along the surface of that shelf to the extremity, when it floated downwards, rather than fell, to the stone flooring of the hearth, dropping so gently that it was not broken After a perceptible interval, the lid of the work table suddenly rose up and fell. Mrs. Jones was aware that similar incidents attended the deaths of the Ainslies, her relations, and she and her boy knelt in prayer for the departing or departed spirit. Father Jones, who gave the story orally, and sent the corroboration by letter, adds that the death of Mrs. Ainsley, at a town some twelve miles distant (the names of the places are unimportant), was simultaneous with the phenomena.

Father Jones adds that on July 15, 1857, his grandmother and mother were in a room with a stove. The lid of the stove erected itself, as the lid of the work table did later. The next post brought news of the death of the grandmother's brother, which must have preceded by perhaps twenty-four hours the unusual behavior of the stove. The elder lady regarded the occurrence merely as a curious coincidence, but does not seem to have had a theory of the cause of the lifting of the stove lid. In May, 1893, a china cup behaved like the earthenware bowl, in the presence of Mrs. Jones and Miss Jones, her daughter. The death of a third member of the same family was "simultaneous," which we may probably take, provisionally, as meaning closely coincident.

If it is admitted that one mind, from a distance, may influence another, so as to produce an hallucinatory appearance, for example, of the agent, it would seem to follow that some energy of one brain can affect another brain. The brain is as material as a bowl, a cup, or a stove, and it would follow that an energy from a distant brain might conceivably set a bowl or the lid of a table in motion! This would not be at all more odd than that the thought of a distant person, who is traveling to a house, should cause a knock on the door, a thing entirely believed in by many Highlanders and in Scandinavian countries. The movements of untouched objects in the presence of D. D. Home and Eusapia Paladino and others are copious attested even by witnesses of scientific eminence at home and abroad. But Eusapia has been caught in the act of cheating, and if Home was never actually caught he was very much suspected.

We have nothing like sufficient evidence of a good character that such events ever occur in connection with "mediums," though we have volumes of evidence which is not good. We can only say that if such occurrences go through the form of occurring then probably the death warnings just reported, and others of the same class, are due to the same sort of cause which produces the movements of apparently untouched objects in the case of Home, and of the bewitched people in the old trials for witchcraft. The hypothetical energy may be released at about the moment of death, and may produce knocks, or motions of furniture at a distance. To hold that such an energy can produce a seemingly real white bird, or black cat, or crowds of foxes, or a banshee, shrieking, with her hair down, appears to require a greater stretch of imagination, and my own fancy fails to take this view of the celebrated Airlie drummer. We have to do with evidence of which much is certainly mythical, with the yarns told by great aunts, old family servants and young ladies, who are not the most trustworthy of deponents.

I end with a really original and grewsome death warning. The anecdote comes to me at fourth hand. A saw the phenomenon and told B, who told C, who told me. A was driving westward from Euston station in a handsome. He saw approaching him on the pavement a servant girl, who appeared to have been sent on an errand. She met a man, whose back only was visible to A; she looked at him, gave a shriek of terror, and fled. After driving on for some 30 yards A stopped his cab, alighted, and walked back to confront the man who had frightened the maid. The man had the face of a corpse! A watched him go to a certain house and let himself in with a latchkey. Next day A went and reconnoitered the house. It had a bill offering apartments to let, and on the excuse of wanting to take rooms A rang the bell, and was admitted. There were two sets of rooms, but, as to one set, the landlady was uncertain whether she could let them. They were held by a Mr. ——, who was at the front in the South African war as a volunteer, apparently, and a report of his death had appeared in the newspapers of the previous day. Till the report was confirmed the rooms could not be let. The report was confirmed, and the inference was that A and the maid had seen a phantom of the late tenant with a phantom latchkey, which opened a material door.

ANDREW LANG.

Raising the So-called Dead.

As my father-in-law, Mr. Samuel Lesher, of Mancelona, Mich., has had many spiritual experiences, I will repeat this narrative just as he told it to me:

"This event happened near the village of Potterville, in Benton township, Eaton county, Mich.

"One one Sunday morning in the summer of 1882, I was called to see a neighbor, a farmer, Peter R. King, who had been somewhat afflicted with heart disease. His son Walter came after me with his horse and buggy.

"When I was in front of his house, I was met by Mr. Bishop, a neighbor, who said, 'Mr. Lesher, you are too late; Doc King is dead.'

"I went to the door, meeting another neighbor, John French, who told me the same thing. Then I entered the room and met Mrs. King, who said, 'Mr. Lesher, you are too late; Doc is dead.'

"Then she put her hand on my shoulder and cried as though her heart would break. She said, 'If you had been here, you could have saved him.' During all this time I had not replied a word. I began to feel as if I was going into a trance, for I had experienced this spiritual condition many times before. I let the trance proceed.

"Mudge, a daughter in her teens, cried and exclaimed, 'Why didn't you make Walter drive faster?' During all this time Mr. King lay on a couch in the center of the room as a corpse, with a sheet over him. Just as soon as the clairvoyant trance was fully developed, my eyes closed; then my spiritual vision opened and I saw Mr. King in his spiritual body, standing two feet from the lounge whereon his physical body lay, and he was looking at it, not noticing me. Then I discovered the silver cord or magnetic current, or umbilical spirit cord, extending from his physical to his spiritual body, building up the latter. This cord was smallest in its middle; and it emanated from the brain and from the region of the spleen and stomach of the physical body, striking similar parts in the spiritual body. Now I discovered that the spiritual body was almost completed. Then I began to make passes with my right hand from his spirit form to his body, reversing the magnetic current. When the spiritual body had passed back into the physical, the corpse threw up his right arm, throwing off the sheet and scaring the dozen or more people assembled in the room. As the reviving corpse was rising, Mr. King exclaimed: 'My God, Lesher, if you had not come, they would have buried me alive.'

He wanted to get up immediately, but I made him lie down for a while.

"The people were very much astonished. I was not frightened, for such trance and spiritual conditions were often experienced by me. I was conscious during the whole pedformance. Mr. King and I began to talk on spiritual power and phenomena.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

Hudson Tuttle.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

O. Barnett: Q. Please show the consistency of the Universal Intelligence working malformations in the animal and other kingdoms?

A. The question rises in a mind which is shadowed by the old conception of God and Nature; of an all-wise creator, in whose work there must be perfect consistency, harmony and justice. Constantly we see, on every hand, the failure of this ideal. The purposes of the Good God miscarry, and fail. The result is often disastrous and is called evil. With our minds clouded by preconceived ideas the universe becomes a mystery, and if we follow in that direction its perplexities can never be made clear.

The creative or evolving forces are constantly active and their results depend on an infinitude of conditions. They, when unobstructed, move in determined lines which are called laws. When they meet with obstructions, their course may be changed, and what should be beautiful formations become "malformations." The sting of a fly produces a gall on the oak leaf. The processes of growth are the same, their direction has been changed. The embryo which has the possibilities of human perfection, may become a monstrosity, because of nerve-shock, or failure of nourishment. The energies of growth are blind as to results. The tissue-creating vitality apparent in a cancer, are as active as in the formation of normal cellular structure. It is even greater, as though it would atone for false product, by greater quantity. The apple is a product of vital forces, and the worm at its heart, aborting its perfection is another product of the same forces. Thus in all nature, there is nowhere visible an all-discerning intelligence with plans which infallibly reach their ends. There are millions of failwhich to one success. There is no compensation for the ones who fail. There is no justice visible in the action and reaction of the elements or forces. Justice, right, intelligence as comprehended by man, are entirely ideas which exist in his mind alone. When he applies thought as manifest by him to the process of the universe, and thinks it is governed as he would govern it were he possessed of omnipotent power and understanding, he finds himself lost in a mysterious confusion of contradictions.

Seeker: Q. Can you give the names of the spiritual papers published in foreign countries?

A. In England there is published Light, weekly, London; The Two Worlds, Manchester, weekly; The Spiritual Review, monthly, and The Lyceum, for the Children's Progressive Lyceum, London.

In other countries there is published, Weekblad, Hague, Holland; Journal du Magnetisme, Paris, France; La Monde Occulte, Paris, France; Review Scientifique et Morale du Spiritisme, Paris, France; Mediumship, Monthly Review, Rome, Italy; Revista Espirita, monthly, Porto Alegro, Brazil; Reforador, Rio Janeiro; Luce e Ombra, Milan, Italy; Dzewey Lucia, Warsaw, Poland; Zeitschrift fur Spiritismus, weekly, Leipsic, Germany, Revue d' Etures Psychique, monthly, Paris, France; Constantia, Buenos Ayres; La Revolution, Barcelona, Spain; Luz y Union, Barcelona; Le Messenger, Liege, Belgium; La Progress Spirite, ——, France; La Nuova Parola, Rome, Italy, and Harbinger of Light, Melbourne, Australia.

These magazines and weekly papers have editorial writers of splendid ability, and are constantly publishing brilliant contributions in every department of Psychic Science. They abound with well observed facts, and descriptions of phenomena, and philosophical and scientific discussion. Translations from them would be highly interesting and instructive to American readers of Spiritualistic literature.

Conservative Spiritualist: Q. Is it not better for the growth of the cause, to make Spiritualism respectable, rather than too closely maintain that which we think is right?

A. No cause ever grew "respectable" by not maintaining the right. To promulgate the truth and destroy error is the mission of Spiritualism. It surely is unfortunate for the cause, and for themselves, that some of its friends are so uncomfortably anxious about it, and think it devolves on them to give it rank and position; to begild, bejewel and bedizzen it to make it presentable to the religions of the past. "It must," say they, "not fear to appear a little like orthodoxy, although at heart it may be quite different; its garb must be something after the old style, or else people will be frightened away from all connection with it and thus be shut out from the benefits it might give them."

They would pray verbally at the beginning of every lecture to an imaginary God and hang on all the oratorical flourishes about Him and His Son, that would please Catholic or Protestant, with a double meaning, one for the conservative and one for the radical portion of their audience—providing they are well enough versed in allegory to make any meaning out of it. They would make frequent references to the Holy Bible, as if they deemed it infallible, when they well enough knew that a truth uttered by Tom Thumb is just as true as though uttered by Moses. I do not know but they would robe it in a creed and [illegible] beads and a cross around its neck to appear "respectable," and excuse themselves by saying "such things mean nothing; and if they please people, let them enjoy them."

We want nothing to do with that which is meaningless. The demands of usefulness are enough to engross our minds without our giving our attention to mere forms. Ours is a practical religion; its genius may be eccentric, inasmuch as it does not ape the forms and ceremonies of the past.

Possibly by catering to opinions and appearances, Spiritualism might draw into its ranks more aristocracy and wealth, and thus gain "position," but why should it care to do this? Truth is not often found with the crowd. Its cross and oriflamme of victory has been held aloft by the scorned and the vanquished. The shouting crowd, in all ages, has been beguiled by falsehood. The great reformers have been content with their immortal inspirations, and measured not their success by the praise of those in high places.

The religion which makes this life a "vale of tears," instead of a joy in its living, as it was intended to be; which makes heaven dependent on dogmatic belief, forms and observances, is just what Spiritualism came to change. The aristocracy which tramples the poor in the dust, and dwarfs their souls that it may glitter in luxury and ease, Spiritualism would reform, not win by soft apologies. We would not have Spiritualism pick the pockets of the children of labor to build elegant churches and lofty steeples in order to be respectable in the eyes of the time-serving crowd. It must win by the glory of the truths it represents, and the earnest devotion and spiritual unfolding of its adherents.

If we would have a great and glorious cause, to mark and make an era in the history of the world, which is the high purpose of the angel forces, there must not only be belief and knowledge, but zeal and devotion. The reform must begin with each one who claims to be a receiver of its teachings. Every ignoble person who professes belief in any cause, brings that cause into disgrace as he is selfish and ignoble. It is the magnanimity of aim and endeavor of adherents that gives character to the cause they advocate and compels respect from even its enemies.

We are constantly reminded to "try the spirits," whether they be good or evil. We may try them in a way not in the meaning of this advice—their love and patience, and watchful care—and before we arrogate to try them, should we not spiritualize ourselves and thereby become somewhat equal to the task?

Spiritualism has not for its purpose to materialize spirits, but to spiritualize man. If he reaches upward to the great occasion, the cause will need no apology, but command the attention and admiration of the thinking world.

What Is Your Key Note?

To the Editor:—Through my recent discoverey of key note or the law of applied tone, I have thought out the secret of Mental Telepathy. Key note is the law of affinity. Persons that are constructed in the same key note, their thoughts are one.

I have made experiments with this method in many ways and have been convinced, to my entire satisfaction, that by this system, thought transference is possible. I know that your paper is open to give any practical scientific creation a fair showing, hence I seek your aid in giving this truth to the world. I want you to procure, through the columns of your paper, some highly intelligent men to promote this experiment to explain the principle in detail in relation to the law of applied tone or thought transference. The following article will give full instructions how to proceed in getting favorable results, so that persons that feel interested in this subject may have a better understanding of this project.

In the first place those that want to investigate my system of thought communication must determine their key note by going to a musical instrument and by speaking in their natural tone of voice find the key that chords with their speech, then they must discover the pitch. The range of pitch of all person's voices is designated in two octaves, above and below middle C. There are only twelve tones in that measure that relate to all creatures.

The conditions to be complied with in order to accomplish good results are these: We must become passive by vacating the mind from all thought; the persons that operate must be constructed in the same key note and the same pitch in order to complete a perfect chord vibration; they must be given up wholly to this one object; their thoughts must be directed to the communicant; the communicant must be in a passive state, then you must think the tone in your mind and send the message with all the force of your mentality.

When we come to investigate the other systems of communication such as the telgraph, telephone and Marconigram, we discover that they are only systems of tone transference, but conductors are used such as sensitive plates, batteries and wires, these are only tracks to perfect accord, as in elocution we raise and lower the voice to make our sentences more impressive.

There are twelve distinct key notes and pitches. Each one of these represents an element of an affinity. A person constructed in a higher key of the same tone, cannot render a perfect sympathetic vibration, hence we must have a perfect chord to get good results.

Any persons that feel interested in this method of communication, if you find some one that their natural tone is constructed in the Key of D below middle C, they shall appoint an hour that the communication can take place. I require this key note because I am constructed in that tone and pitch, as I can instruct you so that we can get perfect communications, and have the conditions right, to put it on a practical basis. All communications to be published in your paper. For information concerning this project address

THE PATHS WE TRAVEL,

Or, Seek We Not the Same Goal?

A letter came to me one day
From a friend I loved, who was far away.
We differed widely in our religious views,
And it seemed to me that this difference grew.
As the years pased by we drifted farther apart,
Till a sad regret crept into my heart,
And it appeared to me that the barrier so wide
Would forever our lives divide.
As I read the letter I held in my hand,
These words met my eyes from the page I scanned:
"What good thing have you or will have,
That I do not or will not also have?"
Like hands that clasp over an open grave,
These words, for me, swept the barriers away,
And the thought came quickly to my mind,
"Sure, what good thing have I, my friend may not also find?"
When from our prisons of flesh we are freed,
No thought will be given to these earthly creeds.

And while I mused upon this theme,
There came to me this vision or dream:
I seemed to leave my quiet home,
And where I willed, I was free to roam.
First I sought a narrow country lane,
Through which two sturdy farmers slowly came;
They seemed engaged in an earnest disputation,
And the words which first attracted my attention,
Were spoken by the elder man, evidently a good deacon:
"I tell you, John, you are making a big mistake;
'Tis sartinly the wrong path you're going to take.
Now I will follow this well-beaten road,
Which for ages before us, our fathers have trod,
And there is no question but 'tis the only way,
That will surely land us in the Golden City."

John impatiently shrugged his shoulder,
And hitching his pantaloons an inch or two higher,
Answered the deacon with a scornful drawl:
"Wall, I guess you'll never see them golden walls.
You'll travel long and travel far,
If 'tis that old path you're going to foller.
Now the road I take is a leetle wider,
Not so hard and a great deal smoother,
And they as ought to know, dew say,
That a feller can't nohow miss the way."
They had reached the end of their argument,
And face to face they paused a moment.
"We must part here," the elder said,
John simply answered, "Good-bye, dad."

Each eagerly seeking this Golden Gate,
Sought to find it by paths that were separate.
I followed after this father and son,
As each in his chosen path walked on,
And each was so certain the other was wrong,
That he supposed he was walking alone,
But all the while, strange to say,
Both were going the very same way.
The separate paths they spoke of, lay side by side,
The distance between them was not an inch wide,
But it's extent might have been a ten thousand miles,
For all that passed between them of words or smiles.

The first and eldest speaker thought, "Poor boy,
He will never reach that city of joy.
I would have kept him with me if I could,
And made him follow the paths he should.
It grieves me much that we ne'er shall meet,
But many there are who shall not walk the golden streets."
John thought, with a touch of scorn,
"Such pig-headedness I have never seen since I was born.
I would have liked to see the old fellow dwell in clover,
But now, of course, that is all over,
He has gone way off his beat,
And we never again shall meet."
So they trudged on side by side,
While I left their narrow paths for those more wide.

The next I sought was a flowery dell,
A boy and girl stood by an old-fashioned well.
In the girl's dark eyes gleamed a flash of light,
As she said with passionate earnestness, "I tell you, I am right,
I know the road you will choose to-morrow,
Will only take you to death and sorrow;
'Tis narrow and winding and leads through dark woods,
By it blooms nothing fair or good,
You will cry for water and starve for bread,
But the golden streets of the city you seek,
You will never tread."

The boy gazed upon her with a saddened face,
"I am sure you are wrong, my dearest Grace,
Though the path does pass through the darkened wood,
'Tis not always the sunniest paths that lead to good;
But as you will not go my way,
I have nothing more that I can say,
You must take your sun-lit road,
I can only leave you in the hands of God."

I followed the boy in the path he trod,
He was earnest and true and relied on a God.
He patiently climbed the rocky steeps,
And his face bore a look that was brave and sweet,
But strange to say, not far away,
Was the path the girl had taken that very day,
And the dancing sunbeams that made it bright,
Also shed on the boy the same glad light,
While the welcome shade of the forest trees,
For her, softened the heat of the sun's fierce rays.
But they who walked so near together,
Were thinking the while, they had lost each other forever.

I left them for a city street,
And again it was two men my gaze did meet;
They were pacing slow upon the pavement,
And seemed engrossed in some disagreement.
I wondered, half wearily, "Can it be,
That no two minds will e'er agree?"
Both were broad-minded, as the term goes,
But the youngest one was a little more so.
Both were strong and richly clad,
But one face glowed with a look that was glad,
While the other was shadowed by an expression sad.
The eldest turned with his sorrowful gaze,
"My friend, if you will, you must go your ways,
I have labored long to make you understand,
That the road I take is broad and grand,
Though the way sometimes may be a little hilly,
Yet it surely leads to that Golden City."
The other answered with a laugh, hearty and free,
"For the life of me, Allan, I cannot see
Why you cannot just as well go with me.
The road I travel is wide and beautiful,
And if together, we could be sociable,
But it is all just as you say,
Farewell, till we meet some other day."
Upon each other they turned their backs,
And both entered upon divergent tracks.

Much surprised at this strange vision,
Of human beings who think they travel in different directions,
In order to reach a far-famed land,
Where all is peaceful, glorious and grand,
I lingered awhile in the regions of space,
And followed each traveler as they sought this place,
And will you believe that the truth I state,
Every one of them came to its entrance gate.

The farmer young and the farmer old,
Were glad to meet in their City of Gold,
And John said as he grasped the old man's hand,
"Wall, I swan, we have both reached this blessed land."
The boy and the girl all in good time,
Greeted each other in this happy clime,
And the boy said, as their eyes met,
"If we had only known, we could have traveled together, Pet."

The men who parted in the distant town,
Were again united on the long-sought ground.
The one with the frank and winsome smile,
Said, "Allan, I have waited quite a while,
But I knew, though you went a different way,
I was sure to meet you here some day,
For no matter what roads they travel through,
No soul who is honest, kind and true,
Can fail to find at his journey's end,
His hope's full fruition in this beautiful land."

I could stay no longer in this home of the blest,
For I must enter again the world's unrest,
But I had learned a great lesson,
Which was worth a good fortune:
The importance we place on our different opinions,
Mostly exists in our imaginations.
We are all seeking the very same good,
But we each persist in traveling our own road,
And after all is said and done,
The eagerly sought good may by each be won.
It is better far to advance each other's happiness,
Than to be foolishly wrangling over our differences.

TWO LIVING GODS.

Besides a Multitude of Dead Ones.

Yes, I, too, have got the ecclesiaphobia terribly, and have had it for a long time, until it has become chronic and deep-seated, and I did not know what was the trouble with me until D. W. Hull came to the rescue and diagnosed the disease as a peculiar species of "rabies," prevalent among "Spiritualists." Now this disease was caused by the use of a compound of common sense and reason working together, and impregnating the mind to that extent that it utterly ignores the use of Rev, D. D., church, religon, bible, the atonement, foreordination, predestination, infinite intelligence, devil, hell and all such high-sounding terms and titles that emanate from the orthodox liturgy, and to reject all such orthodox habiliments is a sure sign of having the "rabies," and how to get rid of this mania is a conundrum, as the patient's mind is not in a condition to undergo an operation in favor of old idolatrous prefixes and add them to the fair name of our accepted cause of Spiritualism, and all those Spiritualists that think that they can undergo the operation and survive, had better call upon the rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them from the face of all true and unadulterated Spiritualists

Those that peruse the pages of The Progressive Thinker can readily discern that there is a very striking difference in the view and opinions even of its ablest contributors on the subject of Spiritualism and its habiliments.

This is the direct result of a higher degree of unfoldment of the senses, the education of the mind, brought about by the higher order of intelligence communicating through the mediumistic element and the enlightening columns of The Progresive Thinker. As people advance in knowledge their minds become more active and susceptible of facts, and they become more self-reliant, more independent and more outspoken in their conviction, and this is more than would be expected from a society that was filled with so many followers of different elements and ideas, and all claiming to be Spiritualists, yet having but an abbreviated code of principles as an organization by which to be governed.

Many of these contributors to the columns of The Progressive Thinker and some of the speakers in the Spiritual ranks, also, make a very free and pronounced use of the word "God" in their articles and speeches. Now, these writers and speakers are supposed to be people of superior talent and controlled by a high order of spirit intelligence, and present their articles and speeches as they understand them, using such words, language and phrases as suit their purpose best, and quoting from various writers to introduce outside evidence to substantiate their points of argument, and no doubt have full faith in what they write and speak, as being correct and indisputable, and as such are supposed to be well informed and would not use language or quote sentences that would be objectionable to the cause they represent or its followers. Knowing full well that it is for the public eye and for the public ear. But their writings and speeches are subject to public scrutiny and public criticism.

God No. 1. Now, the orthodox hold that theirs is the only true and divine God, that he is a superior being, having always existed and that he created the heavens and the earth, and "all" things therein in six days and pronounced it good, and that he measured the waters in the "hollow" of his hand and measured heaven with a span, and the earth with a measure and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance, and that he rested from all his work on the seventh day, and that he rules the universe by his will and the might of his power, and that he is a very jealous God, not allowing any other god to exist.

God No. 2—Many of the writers for The Progressive Thinker use the sentence, "The God of Nature." Nok, who or what or where is this god of nature? Does such a god exist or is it a myth of the imagination. If the universe was created by the orthodox God it must be him, but if it always existed, as many of us Spiritualists believe, it was not created at all, consequently no orthodox God or God of Nature about it. But if our Spiritual friends mean that Nature is god, they should say so, and make a definite point that all can understand.

The expression carries with it the belief in some kind of supreme ruler, while there is no visible proof that there is any such being in existence, only a vague imaginary theory of the mind that perhaps such may be the case. Yet it is very important for the welfare and prosperity and stability of the Spiritual fraternity that they more particularly define what kind of a god they believe in, if any god at all. The idea of believing in an infinite intelligence is very indefinite, pure imagination and no god at all, as intelligence cannot exist outside of an organized body of material substance. But if of any value at all, it must be one of the attributes of the orthodoz God, which infinite intelligence I for one entirely repudiate, while many Spiritualists cling to the belief from their early impressions. LIFE BEYOND DEATH

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as o Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo. Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "other worldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Conditions of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BEYOND THE VAIL

A Sequel to "Rending the Vail."

The two volumes together as a record of practically obtained facts demonstrating the claims of Modern Spiritualism as to post mortal survival, are unique and overwhelming.

Every communication is from a full materialized spirit form, in good light, and either spoken audibly or written in full view by the form. There is not an automatic or trance message in the book.

It is illustrated by several engravings, the originals of which were drawn in the presence of the circle by a full form materialized spirit artist.

BEYOND THE VAIL is, as a rule, the experiences of spirits in both worlds—their own account of their lives on earth and their progress after death to their present condition of freedom from earth conditions. The narratives are intensely interesting, instructive and often highly dramatic.

Coincident with these are the profoundly philosophical comments of the controlling spirits of the seances. Prof. William Denton, Thomas Paine, Dr. W. H. Reed and others—covering, law, medicine, jurisprudence, theology and metaphysics. There are no books in existence of like character or of higher authority. Price, by mail, $1.75.

Some Curious Stories of Death Warnings.

It is not ancient families of distinction alone that have their banshees or death warnings, though the spectral woman beheld in Ireland by Lady Fanshawe, with her shrieks and flying hair, is the most popular and picturesque, and, linguistically considered, the only genuine banshee. Other warnings are inexplicable knockings as in the case of the Woodd family, in which the phenomena are recorded from about 1660 to the present day.

In the writer's own family, a curious creature, "like a cat but not a cat," has been on duty for some seventy years at least, but has no tradition attached to it, and has only been seen by women of the kin, and only before the deaths of women. I first heard of it when, as a boy, I saw a black and tan cat, not a common sort of cat, which the terriers, for once, declined to chevy. My description led to an account of the family portent, but I believed that mine was a common cat, and did not believe in the death coincidence which was detected. The dates did not appear to fit, when closely considered.

A curious species of death warning is that in a story, perfectly well attested, of a table by a deathbed which suddenly gave a jump. The clergyman who was praying alone beside the dying man saw this feat and the people in the room below heard the noise and asked what had caused it The names of the observers are published. I now give another set of specimens of this sort of warning, only altering the names of the witnesses. On October 16, 1879, my informant, Father Jones, was a boy of 10. He was sitting at a table, drawing, in view of his mother, who sat by a window at work. Both commanded a view of the chimneypiece, on which stood a large, heavy earthenware bowl. Mrs. Jones, the mother, corroborates. Beside her was an old-fashioned octagonal work table, the top of which had a hinge, and opened as the lid over a work box Such a table, hexagonal, is before me, and the lid is of considerable solidity and weight, being in early Victorian mahogany The lid of the work table was shut. Both persons fronted the fireside. Suddenly the attention of both was attracted by the odd behavior of the earthen bowl on the chimneypiece. It slowly worked its way along the surface of that shelf to the extremity, when it floated downwards, rather than fell, to the stone flooring of the hearth, dropping so gently that it was not broken After a perceptible interval, the lid of the work table suddenly rose up and fell. Mrs. Jones was aware that similar incidents attended the deaths of the Ainslies, her relations, and she and her boy knelt in prayer for the departing or departed spirit. Father Jones, who gave the story orally, and sent the corroboration by letter, adds that the death of Mrs. Ainsley, at a town some twelve miles distant (the names of the places are unimportant), was simultaneous with the phenomena.

Father Jones adds that on July 15, 1857, his grandmother and mother were in a room with a stove. The lid of the stove erected itself, as the lid of the work table did later. The next post brought news of the death of the grandmother's brother, which must have preceded by perhaps twenty-four hours the unusual behavior of the stove. The elder lady regarded the occurrence merely as a curious coincidence, but does not seem to have had a theory of the cause of the lifting of the stove lid. In May, 1893, a china cup behaved like the earthenware bowl, in the presence of Mrs. Jones and Miss Jones, her daughter. The death of a third member of the same family was "simultaneous," which we may probably take, provisionally, as meaning closely coincident.

If it is admitted that one mind, from a distance, may influence another, so as to produce an hallucinatory appearance, for example, of the agent, it would seem to follow that some energy of one brain can affect another brain. The brain is as material as a bowl, a cup, or a stove, and it would follow that an energy from a distant brain might conceivably set a bowl or the lid of a table in motion! This would not be at all more odd than that the thought of a distant person, who is traveling to a house, should cause a knock on the door, a thing entirely believed in by many Highlanders and in Scandinavian countries. The movements of untouched objects in the presence of D. D. Home and Eusapia Paladino and others are copious attested even by witnesses of scientific eminence at home and abroad. But Eusapia has been caught in the act of cheating, and if Home was never actually caught he was very much suspected.

We have nothing like sufficient evidence of a good character that such events ever occur in connection with "mediums," though we have volumes of evidence which is not good. We can only say that if such occurrences go through the form of occurring then probably the death warnings just reported, and others of the same class, are due to the same sort of cause which produces the movements of apparently untouched objects in the case of Home, and of the bewitched people in the old trials for witchcraft. The hypothetical energy may be released at about the moment of death, and may produce knocks, or motions of furniture at a distance. To hold that such an energy can produce a seemingly real white bird, or black cat, or crowds of foxes, or a banshee, shrieking, with her hair down, appears to require a greater stretch of imagination, and my own fancy fails to take this view of the celebrated Airlie drummer. We have to do with evidence of which much is certainly mythical, with the yarns told by great aunts, old family servants and young ladies, who are not the most trustworthy of deponents.

I end with a really original and grewsome death warning. The anecdote comes to me at fourth hand. A saw the phenomenon and told B, who told C, who told me. A was driving westward from Euston station in a handsome. He saw approaching him on the pavement a servant girl, who appeared to have been sent on an errand. She met a man, whose back only was visible to A; she looked at him, gave a shriek of terror, and fled. After driving on for some 30 yards A stopped his cab, alighted, and walked back to confront the man who had frightened the maid. The man had the face of a corpse! A watched him go to a certain house and let himself in with a latchkey. Next day A went and reconnoitered the house. It had a bill offering apartments to let, and on the excuse of wanting to take rooms A rang the bell, and was admitted. There were two sets of rooms, but, as to one set, the landlady was uncertain whether she could let them. They were held by a Mr. ——, who was at the front in the South African war as a volunteer, apparently, and a report of his death had appeared in the newspapers of the previous day. Till the report was confirmed the rooms could not be let. The report was confirmed, and the inference was that A and the maid had seen a phantom of the late tenant with a phantom latchkey, which opened a material door.

ANDREW LANG.

Raising the So-called Dead.

As my father-in-law, Mr. Samuel Lesher, of Mancelona, Mich., has had many spiritual experiences, I will repeat this narrative just as he told it to me:

"This event happened near the village of Potterville, in Benton township, Eaton county, Mich.

"One one Sunday morning in the summer of 1882, I was called to see a neighbor, a farmer, Peter R. King, who had been somewhat afflicted with heart disease. His son Walter came after me with his horse and buggy.

"When I was in front of his house, I was met by Mr. Bishop, a neighbor, who said, 'Mr. Lesher, you are too late; Doc King is dead.'

"I went to the door, meeting another neighbor, John French, who told me the same thing. Then I entered the room and met Mrs. King, who said, 'Mr. Lesher, you are too late; Doc is dead.'

"Then she put her hand on my shoulder and cried as though her heart would break. She said, 'If you had been here, you could have saved him.' During all this time I had not replied a word. I began to feel as if I was going into a trance, for I had experienced this spiritual condition many times before. I let the trance proceed.

"Mudge, a daughter in her teens, cried and exclaimed, 'Why didn't you make Walter drive faster?' During all this time Mr. King lay on a couch in the center of the room as a corpse, with a sheet over him. Just as soon as the clairvoyant trance was fully developed, my eyes closed; then my spiritual vision opened and I saw Mr. King in his spiritual body, standing two feet from the lounge whereon his physical body lay, and he was looking at it, not noticing me. Then I discovered the silver cord or magnetic current, or umbilical spirit cord, extending from his physical to his spiritual body, building up the latter. This cord was smallest in its middle; and it emanated from the brain and from the region of the spleen and stomach of the physical body, striking similar parts in the spiritual body. Now I discovered that the spiritual body was almost completed. Then I began to make passes with my right hand from his spirit form to his body, reversing the magnetic current. When the spiritual body had passed back into the physical, the corpse threw up his right arm, throwing off the sheet and scaring the dozen or more people assembled in the room. As the reviving corpse was rising, Mr. King exclaimed: 'My God, Lesher, if you had not come, they would have buried me alive.'

He wanted to get up immediately, but I made him lie down for a while.

"The people were very much astonished. I was not frightened, for such trance and spiritual conditions were often experienced by me. I was conscious during the whole performance. Mr. King and I began to talk on spiritual power and phenomena.

THE GREAT MYSTERY OF SPIRIT FORMS

Salvarona steps to the front on The Progressive Thinker's platform, and gives his views in an exceptionally suggestive and interesting manner. We take pleasure in introducing him to our readers, and we believe he will become guest among them.

Forgive my heresy, but such is my profound reverence (for the purely psychological aspect of Spiritualism) that I regard the personal-spiritual-creative-powers of such worthy incarnate Spirits as Lilian Whiting, Loveland, Howe, Barrett, Tuttle, Colville, Wright, Richmond, Bland, Peck, Lockwood, and other mighty spirits in Spiritualism, as being far worthier of my scientific consideration, esteem and wonder than those of millions of spirits—on infinitely lower spiritual, moral and intellectual planes—who have passed out.

Let me explain the psychology of my meaning.

I have to give a name to that process of knowledge by which I become acquainted with Spirits, or Houses, or things in general.

To this process of knowledge I give the name of Sensation.

Without sensations I could know nothing of the existence of spirits.

A spirit is an appearance, a phenomenon, a semblance, in so far as it is comprehensible by my senses.

In the same sense that a man or a House is a phenomenon, and my nose, eyes, and mouth are phenomena.

All that I know of an outer world can only be a knowledge of appearances, i. e., signs, signals, phenomena, semblances, phantasms, similitudes.

And the existence and continuity of the appearance of spirits, depends upon their presence being interpreted to me by my own soul, or spirit; by means of my nervous system.

For my nervous system is a receiver and transmitter of intelligent signs and signals. Vibrations in the air, and light act on the nerves of my retina, and tympanum, creating nerve-signals, or signal-signs.

All of these signal-signs are understood by my own spirit, which, in turn, creates an electric picture in the brain, which corresponds with the picture of the spirit outside in the room to which the signal-sign of my nerves calls attention.

It may be a picture of a good spirit. Or, it may be a picture of a bad spirit.

But it is certain that if my own spirit or soul does not create (within my own brain) a sense-image, or picture, as a duplicate to correspond with the spirit existing outside of my brain, that I can never know of the existence of the spirit.

My sensations, therefore, imply the self-creation of electric-pictures within my own brain, and these electric-pictures within my brain, are intended to duplicate the appearances of the spirits which exist outside of my skull, out there in the room.

My nervous system is a telephone exchange.

My own soul or spirit is the young lady—in the invisible world—who receives the signals and transmits them to my brain in the figures of electric-pictures of form, color and sound.

To understand the great mystery of spirit forms I must therefore understand something, if only a smattering, of the functions of my nervous system, as a receiver and transmitter of signal-signs of sensation.

And, I must also understand something of the electric-picture-creating powers of my own spirit or soul.

Then the world of spirits outside of me becomes more intelligently classified, or capable of classification.

The fact that a spirit is disembodied is no proof that it is a spirit of intellectual, moral or spiritual worth. The fact that a buzzard has escaped its shell does not endow the buzzard with the singing powers of the nightingale. It is a buzzard still.

In our attempts to solve the great mystery of spirit forms, we must therefore examine the phenomena from three distinct points of view.

First, the physical, mental and moral nature of the spirit itself.

Second, the relation of my own nervous system, as a receiver and transmitter of signal-signs and electric-pictures; both to the spirit outside of me and my own spirit.

Third, the relation of my own spirit as a creator (in electric-pictures) of all the other objects outside of it in the universe.

A nightingale may become so enamored with observing the ways of a spirit of a dirty buzzard in the other world that it may, through its curiosity, absolutely neglect to place a sufficiently high estimate on its own vocal powers in this.

Our greedy curiosity is kept chained on a too low and unprofitable plane.

This is why I seem to swing so much to the psychological and neurological aspects of Spiritualism. I do not need a buzzard for a guide or control. I am not fond of carrion. I am foolish enough to think that many spirits in the flesh are wiser than some that are out. The splendor and creative-grandeur of the spirit of my Spiritualist-brother or sister in the flesh is often dimmed by the intrusive impudence and vulgarity of some discarnate, savage Apache, Hottentot, South Sea Islander, Australasian cannibal, fakir, Jack the Ripper, Caligula, Ivan the Terrible, Mohammed Toghlak, Paul of Russia; spirits, all cursed with the insanity of power, and a fierce megolamania, causing them to masquerade under the names of persons, often dear to us.

I have never seen or read the "Great Psychological Crime," and know nothing of either its merits or demerits; hence, I am not writing from prejudice.

My first article on the Great Mystery of Spirit Forms should be re-read in the light of my attempt to point out the great psychological and intellectual worth of the incarnate spirits of my Spiritualist brothers and sisters in the flesh, when compared with discarnate spirits on lower planes.

If my object is worthy it is entitled to respect.

A study of the grand creative-powers of my worthy Spiritualist brother or sisters' spirit in the flesh should certainly be considered as noble an effort as the study of the spirit of a brother Apache that has passed out. Am I right? I speak as unto wise Spiritualists; judge ye what I say.

If, in my Spiritualism, I therefore swing too far in the direction of psychology and neurology, I feel certain, therefore, in advance, of the large-souled forgiveness of those of my Spiritualist brethren, who do not regard their own spirits (within their bodies) worthy of as much contemplation and studious respect as the discarnate spirits of Indians, Hottentots or South Sea Island savages.

I have no cruel or unkind words, however, for these spirits on lower planes.

But I should be bordering on insanity if I affirmed that the discarnate spirit of a South Sea Island savage would be, simply because he was discarnated, a wiser teacher of natural philosophy than the living Lord Kelvin, or Edison.

And, so far as I know, there is no moral law forbidding a spirit in the flesh sometimes developing itself intellectually, beyond the limits of whole races of lower peoples, who have passed over. In such cases, which is the safest moral, spiritual and intellectual guide? The words of Sir Isaac Newton in the flesh? Or, the words of my brother (discarnate) Sioux, Choctaw, Apache, Chickasaw, or Zulu?

I must decide this question for myself, either according to the dictates of duty, taste or prejudice.

Neither is there any moral law, forbidding me to continue my study of the spirits of my great Spiritualist brethren, whilst they are in the flesh or before they pass out.

The brain of my Spiritualist brother (considered as a telephone receiver and transmitter of nerve signal-signs) is a very wonderful instrument.

Each brain cell represents a signal key.

And, according to Meynert's calculations, there are 600,000,000 of these brain cells, or keys, within the skull of every living Spiritualist.

Think, then, of the astonishing genius of the spirit of my brother—who has not passed out—revealing a capacity to understand 600,000,000 signal-signs within his own brain!

Consider his ear a telephone receiver of many of these signal-signs. His mouth a transmitter.

His own spirit possessing such a wonderful capacity for interpretation, that it can read back these 600,000,000 signa-nerve-signs into their objective meaning, and also create the same number of electric-pictures within his brain!

Is not this as wonderful as the production of raps by a kindly spirit that has passed out?

And not only so.

But that the spirit of my living Spiritualist brother—after thirty years of investigation—has been found able to change these signal-nerve-signs into electric-pictures of sensation, within his own brain and according to an exact and given law of time?

Thus, it takes him about one-twentieth of a second for his spirit to create—within his brain—a duplicated electric-picture, faithfully answering to the signal-nerve-sign (optic) of the light-form of a discarnate spirit, shining in the room before him.

But these are facts which belong strictly to the scientific psychology of Spiritualism.

It is my opinion that in the worthy attempts of Spiritualists (carried away by magnificent religion passion) to make a lofty religion of Spiritualism, that a few of them—not all—have become as averse to the further scientific investigation of the psychology of Spiritualism as the orthodox folk to an investigation of their creeds. If science, supplemented by an exalted morality, is to be the bible of the future, it is—as a Spiritualist—my duty to ascertain every aspect of science (psychological and neurological) that can help to throw light on the subject. I owe this to humanity. I owe it to myself. The last scientific word has not been said on the scientific relation of discarnate, or excarnate spirits to the brains of mediums. Mediums, very many of them, have not had the time to study the psychological laws of their own gifts. Their lives have been so driven by necessity for the dollar—many, very many of them—that they could not find time to intelligently study the laws of their own nervous systems and brains. The world has been too financially cruel to them. Then again, science is an evolution, not a dogma. And it takes time for anything to grow. Science is no exception.

The Light Among the Hills.

A Charming Narrative.

Most Beautifully Suggestive is "The Light Among the Hills," by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt. It is a narrative founded on facts alone, and every Spiritualist should read it.

"Quite a spell after that, Jim called ter me one day ter come up ter the woodpile where he was splittin' and when I got there I saw a queer sight. There on the chips and new sawdust stood some fifteen or more chickens. Their heads were all turned one way and they was lookin' at something that seemed to be just above the ground, and the feathers stood up all round their necks so that each chicken wore a ruff. I spoke to them and shooed, but they just kept staring at the something that looked ter me like nothing. All at once every chick flew right up inter the air and went off flappin' and squawkin'. Jim and I went up and examined the place where the chickens had been standin', but we couldn't find so much as an ant or a spider. Just then Daddy came out of the shed. 'Boys,' said he, 'if ye'll be kind to yer critters and take notice of them, ye'll find they'll teach ye lots of things and one of them is that they can see lots of things that you can't.'"

"Was your father a religious man?" asked Mrs. Grey.

"Wall, no; I guess not. He never blonged to any church and never talked what ye might call pious. He brought up his boys to do what was right because it was right. There warn't one of us that wouldn't have been ashamed to have told er lie or done a mean or dirty thing, or said one either. He wouldn't let us talk against folks or be unkind to any thing. I remember one time I got purty well riled at an ox I was drivin', and I took the whip and went at him. Daddy came erlong and says he, 'Ezry, how would you like that of you was the ox and the ox was you?'

"'Wall,' says I, 'he got mad and wouldn't gee.'

"'And so,' says Daddy, 'you got mad because the ox did. What better are you than he? Never,' says Daddy, 'git put out with a critter for doin' what you do yourself, and don't ever try to make anything mind you until you can control yourself.'

"That was the way with Daddy; he always made us show justice and kindness to man and beast, and yet some folks thought Daddy was dreadful wicked.

"I remember one time there come to our deestrict a man preachin' that the world was comin' to an end that fall. He got up a great excitement, and the old school house was packed full four nights outer the week. That man would preach the most hair raisin' sermons, and yell, and shake his fists at us, and stomp around while he described the terrors of the judgment day, and actually you could almost hear the trumpet blow, and see the fire er-comin' down. One day the elder was goin' by our house and seein' Daddy and me out splittin' wood he come up to see us. After a few remarks about the weather, he says: 'Wall, Mr. Graham, I haint seen ye ter meetin' yet. I hope ye have made yer peace with God.'

"'Haint never had any trouble with him, as I know of,' says Daddy.

"The Elder looked kinder funny for a minute and then he says, 'The Lord is comin' in a few short weeks, friend. Are ye ready to welcome him with joy?'

"'Just about as ready as I ever shall be, I guess,' says Daddy.

"Then he struck his ax inter the block and lookin' straight at the man he says: 'Now look here, Elder, I haint got anything against you as a man, but last night my little girl come home from your meetin' so excited that her mother had to be up with her all the rest of the night. The child just screamed in her sleep and talked about the fire and the trumpets blowin', and all them things, and I can't think much of a religion that will scare little children inter fits.'

"'Mr. Graham,' said the Elder sternly, 'I have been anointed ter go forth and proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord and the day of vengeance of our God. Do you think Noah stopped his preachin' because the children got scairt and cried every time it rained hard? Do you think that when Jonah was cryin','yet forty days and Nineveh shall be destroyed," that he stopped when the children run cryin' home to their mothers? And shall I who am sent to warn sinners of their approaching doom stop because a little girl is frightened?'

"'You mean wall, I've no doubt,' says Daddy. 'Last year about this time there was a young feller around here er pedlin' tin cat holes, and honestly, Elder, I think I'd rather be in his business than yourn.'

"Wall, the Elder went off shaking his head and groanin', and he never come near us again."

There was silence for a little while and then Mrs. Grey spoke: "Did you never have any experiences with the so-called supernatural, Aunt Liddy?

"Oh, yes," said the old lady, as she folded up her knitting work and laid it carefully in her lap; "two or three things happened to me that made a great impression on my mind, and I will tell you about them. When my sister Jane was a young girl she had a long run of fever and afterwards she uster have bad spells with her heart, and the doctor said we must watch her or she might die in one of them. One night—I useter sleep pretty sound them days—I dreamed I went into a big room and everything there was in it was a small table with a chair beside it, and on the table lay a big book. I went and sat down in the chair and opened the book and the pages were all white as snow without a mark on them. As I looked there suddenly appeared a great black letter, and then one after another they came until I read the words: 'Your sister—quick! quick!' I thought I jumped up and tried to run, and then I heard a voice cry, 'Quick, quick!' That woke me and I jumped out of bed. The moon was full and the light shone in through the uncurtained window full upon my sister's face; it was as white as death. I touched her and she was cold, and she seemed like a dead person. There was a powerful stimulant on a table in the room which we kept there night and day, and I got this and forced some down her throat. I was scairt, now I tell you, but I did not dare leave her a minute for fear she would die surely, so I rubbed and moved her about for what seemed like hours to me, and at last she come out of it all right. I shall never forget that night.

"It was several years after that the next thing happened. It was a dreadful cold night in winter and I was sound asleep, but Jane warn't; she was bothered about getting to sleep and so was wide awake when there came two sharp raps on our bed-room door. Jane didn't know whether she best speak or get up, and while she was makin' up her mind there came three more raps, and they sounded as if somebody meant business. Jane got up and opened the door and the minute she did she saw the next room was blue with smoke. She run out and there by the stove little flames were leapin' up and the floor was burnin' finely. Jane never screamed or said a word, but caught up a big braided rug and threw it on the fire and in a few minutes she had it all out. If it had not been for the raps we should have been burned out, for not a soul knew a thing about the fire until they saw the burned floor and rugs the next mornin'. I tell you, girls, folks needn't talk to me! Our folks when they die do not forget us or go way off somewhere and leave us to shirk for ourselves. They watch over us and help us all they can—which is considerable.

"Now one thing more I'll tell ye about. It happened when my boy Joe was nine months old. I took the baby and went with my husband to get the cows. We lived in a village and the paster was about two miles from the house and barn. When we got to the paster we could not see anything of the cows anywhere, so Jerry tied the horse and went to huntin' and I took the baby to a little brook and 'mused him a splashin' water. After what seemed to mo a long while I heard Jerry a hollerin' to me to take the horse and start for home and he would join me with the cows before I got there. The horse was young and high-lifed, but I was uster handlin' horses, and everything would have gone right if I had been alone; but you see I warn't. I untied the horse and turned the buggy round and backed up to the bank where I had set the baby. He had wiggled back and I could just reach him by holdin' the end of the reins in one hand. The horse kept startin' so I did not dare go near the wheels so I lifted the baby over the back of the wagon onter the seat and grabbin' his dress and the back of the seat with one hand I lifted my foot to jump in after him. At that minute the horse jumped forward, and I lay sprawlin' on the ground. Like a flash I was on my feet, for terror made me spry, I tell you. I caught the back of the wagon with my left hand and with quick movements I shortened the reins by windin' them around the wrist of my right hand; then I pulled with all my might and cried whoa! I might just as well have hollered at the wind, for she only snorted and went faster, draggin' me after her. For some reason Joe was not thrown out when the horse started, as I should have thought, but he had turned around and grabbed the back of the seat with both little fat hands, and he was now laughin' at me as hard as he could. That is the way with a baby, and older folks, too, sometimes laugh the loudest when they're plungin' on to ruin. I was just wild with fear. I knew that just before us was a very steep stony hill, and I knew that horse always bothered about trying to run down hill. I saw the whole terrible situation in a flash: It meant death to me and the baby, for mother like, I never thought of savin' myself by lettin' go. I looked about but no one was in sight. I screamed help! help! but nobody answered. I was desperate, and I pulled on the reins with all the strength there was in me and hollered whoa! with all the breath I could get, but it did no good. We got to the top of the hill, and I saw that in another skip we would be plungin' down it. I felt that I was utterly helpless and I looked up toward the blue sky and just cried out in an agony of despair, 'Save my child, O! save my child!' The power that never failed before didn't fail me then. Quick as a lightnin flash the answer came. The hore reeled back upon her haunches as if thrown by a mighty hand, and again I lay sprawlin' in the road and the baby still kept the seat and laughed at me. I was not long in gettin' up and in another minute I had jumped inter that wagon and had my baby hugged up in my arms. There stood the horse tremblin' in every limb. Her nostrils were quiverin' and her head movin from side to side. She seemed to be dreadfully scairt, but she couldn't seem to see what scairt her. After a little while she gave a long breath and stood still. I gave the word to go and for once she walked soberly down that hill. Now this story may not sound like much to you, but to me it is the most thrillin' experience of my life."

"That was a kinder Peter prayer you prayed, I'm thinking," said Uncle Ezra.

"Yes," retorted his sister, "and there was a savior near to answer it."

"I shall never forget what I have heard here to-night," said Martha as she and her aunt arose to take leave of their friends. "I thank you for your kindness, and I am real glad I came here to-night. I am going home with Aunt Laura to-morrow, and I expect to get acquainted with Auntie's friend, Mrs. Austin, the medium, and I hope to learn a great deal. I hope to receive messages from spirit friends myself and do a great deal of good in the world before I die."

Uncle Ezra leaned forward and looked keenly at the girl as she spoke. After a minute's hesitation he said solemnly: "Marthy, you're a good girl. I have known ye ever since ye was a baby and you have always been a good, stiddy girl and I'm glad on't. You come of an honest, respectable family, too, and that is worth lots, but I wanter say this ter ye: If I was you I would be even more perticular. You see jist as soon as the world find out ye are a medium, they'll have sharp eyes for all yer failin's, and ye wanter to be very careful not only not to do anything wrong but not to do anything that looks wrong either. You see that Spiritualism in one sense of the word is a new religion, and when anyone takes up a new religion they always have ter ketch it. Folks perfessing an old religion can cut up twice as bad and no perticular 'tention will be paid to 'em. I'm old enough ter be yer granddad, child, and ye won't get huffy at me, I know, if I speak my piece, so I'm goin' ter say, be real honest always. Don't ever do anything mean or underhanded, no matter what the temptation may be, and be sure yer always kind in everything ye say and do. You want ter live in such er way that folks will say, 'Marthy Weston is a good woman, and no one can say a word that's bad about her and tell the truth, if she is a medium.' Then ye see yer life will do more fer the cause ye advocate than all the talkin' ye'll ever do.'

There was a moment's silence, and then Martha extended her hand to the old man and said: "I thank you, Uncle Ezra, for what you have said to me, and I will try and be all you want me to be."

"I know ye will, child. I feel it in my bones ye will," was the cheery answer.

The good-byes were said and Mrs. Grey and Martha passed out into the soft moonlight, feeling that they were wiser and better for that evening visit.

"How strange,' said Martha. "I have known Aunt Lydia and Uncle Ezra all my life, and yet I have not known them really."

"You will find it so all your life," said Mrs. Gray. "We often fail to understand those we know and love the best, and this fact is doubly true of our acquaintances. The longer I live the surer I grow that if we want to acquire knowledge we must keep our ears and eyes open and not be too quick to judge by appearances. You cannot tell how deep a well is by just looking at it and some very ordinary looking pebbles have proved to be precious gems."

Fasting Physically, and Fasting to Spiritualize and Refine the Spirit.

Twenty-seven Days Without Food—Experience of a Chicago Girl Who Fasts Freqently, "Fasts for the Fun of It."

Fasting as a cure is a method used by Miss Hilda Smith, a music teacher, 5629 Washington avenue, Chicago. She adopted the experiment, proved it to her own satisfaction, and has made it a constant practice to fast a part of every week.

For twenty-seven days, on one occasion, she went without food. This was a test of her endurance. For curative and medicinal purposes she believes that one day a week is sufficient to fast. Her diet on other occasions is such as would lead ordinary persons to believe they were fasting.

Wheat and fruit are all that she eats.

"Wheat for strength," she says. "You can't live on fruit alone. Wheat is needed for strength. Aside from that, the only thing I eat is fruit."

When Miss Smith took to fasting she was not entirely convinced that a cure would result. It has been successful, she says.

Incidentally, she has proven to her own satisfaction that a person can live on 5 cents a day. She has done this for six months, she says. All during this fasting and dieting period she has been working as much as eight hours a day, four of which have been spent in giving music lessons.

"You know you can buy enough prepared wheat for 25 cents to last a month. And fruit is cheap."

Experience During Long Fast.

At first, Miss Smith says, the person fasting will have a desire to drink water. After the second or third day this desire will pass away and there will be no inclination to drink. Of her experiences during the twenty-seven days' fasting she says:

"I found that if I became at all hungry I could get rid of the feeling by getting in the open air. As soon as I got outside the house the desire to eat disappeared."

She believes that fasting would cure many ills with which people are afflicted. And she also believes that any one is capable of going without food at pleasure. It is a simple life that Miss Smith lays down in her creed of living. It also is an inexpensive one, and would make the problem of subsistence an easy one for many families who are hard pressed to buy steaks and roasts.

If you want to live on beans a day and get rid of all your ills here is the way suggested by Miss Smith:

"The way to fast is to eat no food and to drink only water for any length of time that you may decide upon. If, during that time, you feel that you must break the fast remember that there is another day coming, and when you do break it eat nothing except fruit for the first meal. There are short fasts and long fasts—a short fast is begun after dinner in the evening and is kept up until luncheon the next day (it is a good idea to take this last every day). The regulation short fast is started at 5 in the afternoon and is continued until the second morning following; a longer fast is kept up a week, while the longest regulation fast is twenty-seven days. When you have learned to do without eating for four weeks you may abstain from food for an indefinite length of time. In a short fast you should drink a great deal of water, as it cleanses the system. In a longer fast you should drink less each day until moisture becomes necessary only every three days.

Cure for Most Diseases.

"The time to fast is when you are either ill, or blue, or cross. A good time to fast is when you are out of pocket, but really the best time is just before your last money piece is gone; you will always find that fasting is no catch-penny affair. If you have a headache, you need to fast; if you have any kind of catarrh, heart disease, lung trouble, rheumatism, appendicitis, nerve ailments, physical or mental weakness, you need to fast. The reason is that of the two causes for all diseases the prime one is improper digestion and assimilation of food. Every night you go to bed because, you say, your system needs a rest, but did you ever think of omitting food at meal times, and especially between times, to give the digestive machinery a rest? This apparatus is among the most delicate in the human body, and still the most abused. It should be given a rest at least once a week, so that it may have an opportunity of readjusting itself through nature, of fitting its way back into its natural position, whence it has been forced by overloading.

"The late pope was a noble example of righteous living. When he was ill, in place of sending for the physician with his medicine satchel, or instead of allowing his attendants to bring him dainty trays every half hour or so to force down into the already wornout system, Pope Leo fasted.

"If you have parents or friends who, seeing that you are overworked and that your condition is run down, advise you to see 'the doctor,' do not argue with them; call upon the doctor, paste his prescription in your memorabilitor, let your little brother fire the pills from his slingshot, then fast, but do not speak of it to any one. After you have fasted a few times this advice will be entirely unnecessary, for you will feel like a different person, your nerves will be steadier, your hearing quicker, your mind saner, and, best of all, you will be happier. All disagreeable or sad feelings pass away and you become a part of the merry sunshine that you have hitherto only read about in books. When you have fasted for three days you will hear your unsuspecting friends say: 'How much better Mary looks! That doctor is a great man!'

"You should not, however, wait until sickness drives you to this expedient; fast when you are in health that you do not become ill. By all means wait until you have scarlet fever, if you prefer. Then even the doctor will insist upon your fasting. Taking it for granted, nevertheless, that you eat to live, and not live to eat, you will live long and happily by fasting one day out of every week—the allotted time for man in good health.

"If you want an example of the result brought about by this method, watch the animals in their natural, untamed lives. They are in reality the only clean, pure living creatures on earth. We cannot be above or even on the same plane with them until we can control our appetite, physical or mental. Set down a gallon of ice cream, some ladyfingers and a box of the finest confections before a cow and observe her actions. She will turn away her head in disgust. You should be proud to be compared to an animal. Do not mistake this statement. You need not be overjoyed the next time any one calls you a dog, for he is referring to the lazy, howling canine 'refined' by man. The dog in its wild state fasts once a week. The tiger fasts regularly. Some animals fast every other day, some every third day, and some half the year. These animals never eat during their periods of fasting until after living in captivity. Thus, these generations will become accustomed to the spread [illegible] are called tame, while in reality they are more savage. It is a well known fact that a cage keeper is a rare morsel whenever opportunity permits.

Becomes Easier with Practice.

"The more you fast the easier it is for you to fast, while the easier you find it the less you need it. The first meal will be hard to forego, since there will be many a hard tug both at heart and stomach. But drink plenty of water, take deep breaths, and keep busy. The next meal will be more easily abstained from, and after that you will not crave food. You can live in the gingerbread house that Grimm writes about and you will not prefer its appetizing odor to the taste of the pure, fresh air; you can watch the worms devour it and you will be glad the gingerbread house is in the open.

"Start with a one day fast during the first week; then take a three days' fast the next week and the week following. Allow two weeks to elapse; now fast eight days; wait three weeks and repeat the length of fast last mentioned. Let two weeks go by and fast seventeen days. Wait three weeks, then fast twenty-seven days. At the end of this time you will be cured, and like ise still in the flesh. Having reached is stage, you will be not only so cheerful that you are a surprise to your friends, but you will be able without detriment to sit up all night to work, to sleep at any time that is convenient, and when you are not fasting to eat when the system, not custom, demands it. Above all, do not grow conventional nor consistent. Seemingly you will walk on air, your complexion will become clear, and, while people say, although you are the picture of health, that you are working too hard and will break down, you will rest assured that you are living correctly, scientifically, and economically."

To fast Spiritually—one can do that for any length of time, and thus refine, purify and in every respect make better the spirit. How can one do it? Simply do not take into your consciousness impure thoughts. Allow no wicked thing to enter your mind. Nurse carefully the intention of doing all the good you can. Move along fighting off everything of an evil nature. This kind of spiritual fasting, would make angels of every human being.

The homeliest language carries conviction if it is the truth.

REPORT OF THE EDITOR-AT-LARGE.

For the Quarter Commencing Sept. 1, and Ending Dec. 1, 1903.

To the Executive Committee N. S. A.:—I have in the prosecution of the work assigned me, during the past three months contributed to the secular and spiritual press the following articles:

Influence of Belief in Spiritualism, Eudora (Kansas) Journal.

Have Spiritualists a Creed? Reply to the Journal, Oceana, Mich.

Result of Patient Research, reply to an editorial in the Argus, Albany, N. Y.

Superstition, reply to editorial in the Jackson (Mich.) Daily Citizen.

Swedenborg, the Relation of His Teachings to Spiritualism; written in answer to many correspondents, for the Banner of Light.

Science Knows Nothing of Ghosts, reply to Prof. Serviss, in The Progressive Thinker, Banner of Light, and Light of Truth.

Sowing the Seed, in Philosophical Journal, and Sunflower.

A Subject of Great Importance to Spiritualists, in all the spiritual papers.

Spiritualism vs. Rev. Dr. Frazer, Daily Truth, Elkhart, Ind.

Is Spiritualism a Fraud? Reply to Rev. J. M. Fields, in Ft. Wayne, Gazette. Before this article reached the office of the Gazette, Dr. Sweringen had so ably answered the attack of the reverend gentleman, and demolished his arguments, that I withdrew it and sent it to The Progressive Thinker.

Reliability of Trance, furnished the Register, Sandusky, Ohio, at the request of the Psychical Society of that city.

The Case of Mary Kidder, The Telegraph, Kalamazoo, Mich.

Reply to Rev. Howard, in Daily Truth, Elkhart, Ind., he asserting that Flammarion and Prof. Coues both renounced their belief in Spiritualism.

The work constantly enlarges and more newspapers and monthlies have sent requests for articles on the subject than it is possible to supply. While the press has for some time contained scarcely any editorial matter on the subject, the pulpits of the country have fulminated, and gospel ministers, both great and small, have "preached a sermon" on Spiritualism. Perhaps this is because they find it a drawing card, attractive and pew-filling. Or it may be from a common impulse that with a pull all-together, they may drag the temple down. But they are so far from harmony that they mutually destroy each other's contention, while from their frantic efforts they show how little reliance they have on their assertions. They whistle to keep their courage up. The greater number admit the occurrence of the manifestations as claimed, but say, "it is all the work of evil spirits or the devil." Really this is a step towards Spiritualism. For if evil spirits can communicate, does it not logically follow that the good can also? It would be a strange all-loving God who would make it impossible for the philanthropists who gave their lives in helping those in distress, and our dearest friends, and turn loose on mankind a swarm of evil ones, to drag town to perdition!

There are a few who are getting out of the wilderness of theology.

Some have fears that theology will eliminate Spiritualism; there is more promise that Spiritualism will eliminate theology. It has already stricken hell, the devil and infant damnation out of the popular belief, and has made an uncomfortable place for the old God of vengeance and hate.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

The Spiritualizing Influence of Mother Love.

Childhood without Mother Love is deprived of that which tends to refine and spiritualize its nature. Thousands of waifs are homeless, cast on the turbulent waves of life without that exelting influence, true Mother Love. There are thousands of Spiritualist homes where the adoption of one of these homeless, motherless waifs would prove a great blessing. Read this article carefully, thoroughly.

To the Editor:—Mrs. Andrew Mac Leish discourses most beautifully on "Mother Love" in the Chicago Tribune, setting forth that those who have read Prof. Drummond's beautiful lecture on "The Evolution of the Mother" will remember that he finds the beginnings of love with all that that involves, tenderness, patience, sympathy in the human mother as the result of her care for her little helpless boy. It is a beautiful thought that the babies have brought into the world all that makes life beautiful and full of joy. And what mother will gainsay the statement? Has she not felt her own nature deepen and sweeten with the advent of her baby? Has she not found patience, self-denial, sympathy, and understanding growing in her own soul with its growth? To the mother who will take it, God sends with her children the richest training, the noblest development. She has no need to ask for a wider sphere than that her children offer her. The highest stimulus to mental, moral, and physical growth is hers.

"Heaven lies about us in our infancy," says Wordsworth, and it is not only the baby that lies in that blessed light. The mother, too, may stand there, and she consciously, because it is her own attitude of willing self-denial, the free giving of herself for the object of her love that opens the door to her. If this, then, is what mother love means to the mother, what is it to the child? To him it is the sunshine of life, the only condition for natural and wholesome unfolding of the little life. We are so made that to grow naturally and spontaneously we must be happy, and we cannot be happy without love. This is true of human life at all stages, but a thousand fold is it true of the tender little being in its first beginnings.

And nature has used all her energies to secure for the baby this essential love. She has bound it to its mother by the strong bands of its helplessness and need. She has made the little body so bewitching in its beauty that it must always be lovely to those about it. She has made the awakening of the little mind a matter of such absorbing interest that all who watch it bow down and worship. Nature, in short, knows that that baby must be loved and so creates it that it cannot fail to secure, at least, some measure of its need.

If you would see what mother love is to the child look at those who are deprived of it—the motherless children of our institutions. They have care and kindness and love in a general way, but what a hungry look their faces have and how little real childish joy we find among them. I am often reminded of what one of our noble doctors, who fell at his post a few years ago, said in a lecture before a class of nurses. "If you have a little baby," he said, "who must be fed artificially, always hold it in the arms in the position of the nursing baby. I do not know the reason, but it is a fact that the food digests better." If the doctor had been a mother he would have known that it was the warm, cuddling sense of love that the baby needed.

Let us look more deeply into the matter. Why is it that love is so precious to the child? What does it do for him? First of all it gives the mother the key by which she may unlock the mystery of his nature, his own individuality Some one has beautifully said that it is melody that gives individuality to music Underneath all music lie the great principles of harmony and rhythm, but rippling through and over these runs the melody that gives the distinctive character to each musical composition. So under each life lie the eternal verities of all being, but running through and through them go the golden threads of individuality, and the mother who would fully understand her child must know those laws of being, the great principles that govern human life, and then will her love give eyes to her soul wherewith she may see and know her own child in his special individuality and in his relation to the whole. Love, then, gives insight and from insight comes sympathy.

As the mother learns to understand her child she grows to feel with him. And how the human heart responds to that. What is there that is at the same time so restful and so stimulating as the sense of being perfectly understood and sympathized with? No wonder the little child opens in that atmosphere as a flower to the sunshine And what a solid rock it is to build character upon. How seldom do we hear of a child going astray who is perfectly understood by a wise father and mother. So far we have been speaking of a love that is perfect, ideal. In such a love there can be no danger. But, alas, we do not attain unto it, and in just so far as we fall short is our love fraught with danger to those dearer to us than life, our children.

There is but one model for the love of a mother to her child. I say it with all reverence. It is the love of God to man. That is infinitely tender, but infinitely strong. It desires the present comfort of its objects, but it will secure at any cost their highest welfare. It is all wise, all merciful, ever patient, but inexorably holding to the highest standards of achievement. It will not coddle nor weakly sympathize. It is ever simulating. It demands the best. It is terribly honest. It sees all the flaws, but it is full of tender encouragement and hope, and it sees the first efforts toward better things It is the love that suffereth long and is kind; the love that beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things, the love that never faileth

We are too apt to think of love as the sentiment of affection, which demands for its satisfaction nearness to its object, which would see that object always happy for the present moment, even at the cost of future good. That is the love that makes the mother unwilling to send her child away from her, even to secure the development which he cannot get at home. It is the love that deprives a mother of strength that makes it impossible for her to see her child suffer, even though a little present suffering may make his whole life fuller of happiness to himself and others. The mother who would train her child to the greatest power and usefulness must have heroic stuff in her.

Then there is the love that is not honest, that cannot take an unbiased view of its object; the mother who can see no faults in her own children, who dwells upon their strong points and will not see the weak ones. Such a mother fails at one of the points of greatest usefulness to her child He goes out into the world with a character otherwise admirable, perhaps, but marred by one fatal flaw. In all tests for power, you know, the strength of the object tested is measured at its point of least resistance. Of what use to the world, for example, is a character otherwise amiable and lovely but lacking a sense of responsibility? The fault which might have been corrected by the mother in the little child grows to be an ineradicable weakness in the man, and the world does not regard him with the charitable eyes of his mother. We often see children of whom we must say, "How lovable she would be if only her faults had been corrected, and how much affection and esteem her mother has deprived her of by not seeing and correcting them."

Then there is the love that seems so beautifully self-sacrificing—that of the mother who effaces herself in an effort to secure happiness for her child. But, alas, this satisfaction of the mother's sentiment of devotion leads to selfishness in the child. The mother has forgotten that the thing which is good for her, the constant denial of self and selfish comfort, is good for her child also. She has gotten her own development at his expense. And the saddest part of it all is that the child fails to appreciate the wealth of love that has been poured out upon him. How sad and yet how frequent are the cases where the mother has given up everything for the child, and the child accepts it all as his just due with no sense of its value, making but the most meager return.

There seems to be two reasons for this. In the first place, the mother, in making no demands for herself, has not preserved her proper dignity in the eyes of the child, and in failing to convert his love into action she has allowed his latent possibilities for usefulness to fail of their development. For love is truly you remember what Froebel says upon this point. He represents the child in three stages of development in this matter of receiving service from others. In the first he simply accepts. It is the period of unconscious innocence. He is too young to know that the acceptance of service from others puts him under obligation. But he cannot remain in that state. As soon as he is old enough to understand he must be taught to appreciate the kindness of others to him and to acknowledge it in thanks. But that is not enough. As he grows older the kindness of others to him should rouse in him a desire to make a return in kind. His training should lead him in this direction and he should be encouraged to express his impulse in action. The doing of a kind deed increases his appreciation of the kindness done him and strengthens his nature on the side of love and unselfishness. Without training in this direction we cannot hope that he will later develop that broad sense of brotherly love and obligation to his fellow men which is the crown of a noble manhood, and which makes him count as a helpful factor in the world.

The three points of weakness in our love for our children would seem to me, then, to be—lack of strength and courage, lack of clear sighted honesty, and the lack of proper demand for a return in kind. They may all be summed up in the one great word—lack of wisdom. Who does not feel an appalling sense of need? But we are working in harmony with the creator, and all nature, all history, and all revelation go to prove that to those who seek with all their heart, the treasures of wisdom shall be opened.

Ponder well, mothers and Spiritualists generally, the exalted sentiments in the above and commence spiritualizing your child while a baby in your arms.

CALIFORNIA.

Summerland Aspects and Lessons.

How the heart of our southern California people around here grew hopeful when a few days since at the little sprinkle of rain that began to fall as an earnest of a coming storm, which, however, failed to materialize.

How little our friends in the far East can understand how we of California wait for the winter rains. They fall like a benediction upon our parched earth and they bring us the sure promise of a rich harvest of plenty. How swiftly under its benign sway the brown and sun-dried earth puts on her emerald garments and the flowers burst into fresh blossomings when the rains fall. Then new life and beauty are everywhere seen, and fresh fullness of verdure on hill and vale are radiant with the glad voice of Nature's resurrection. The birds from their mountain retreats return with their jubilant songs, and the rippling waters sing along the dry path of the river beds once more and break the long spell of silence winding through glen and valleys. The air is full of the scent of orange blossoms and the richly poinesttia flowers lay their crimson faces against the summer's light, and the day seems bathed in heaven's glory. The pepper trees are trailing their jeweled branches in the sunlight, and the red berries wear a most cheerful brightness in the morning's beams; the palms shimmer with a brighter green, while the grasses cover the wide landscape like an emerald robe. Earth seems to proclaim at our annual awakening, there is no death; and the question if a man die, shall he live again is answered from valley and hill and mountain top through lips of the arisen loved ones.

Nature is a wonderful teacher and if we heed her lessons more as she opens her books of knowledge, and less the dogmas and teachings of the religious bigot, we shall find in her springing blades of grass, her opening flowers, in every leaf-clad tree, in the rippling streams, the whispering music of love's own message and the assurance of man's immortality.

Now as Christmas is here with old Kriss Kringle's reindeers of a stored sleigh of holiday presents to present to loved ones of Christian or heathen belief with the same love and fraternal sympathy in the heart of one as the other, may the broader feeling of religious brotherhood enliven the hearts of all and quicken the spirit of a high humanitarianism in the world.

The old adage agitation is the beginning of wisdom, is fully exemplified in the present agitation now going on in the columns of The Progressive Thinker. It is doing a grand work and bringing to the front the brightest intellects in defense of spiritual truth and the higher laws of mediumship as put forth in the book, entitled The Great Psychological Crime, and the controversy deepens in interest from week to week as presented by able writers, especially as put forth by Lyman C. Howe and Mrs. Florence Huntley. The Progressive Thinker has been the leading spiritual journal in all matters pertaining to progressive and scientific thought since its first publication, and the present agitation and thought in relation to the psychological crime of promiscuous circles, the undue influence of minds dominating the will and minds of others, has touched the keynote of a crying evil in our spiritual ranks and the world at large, and is bringing out a principle which must sooner or later redound to the good and benefit of Spiritualism as well as every other system that has not for its groundwork a substantial basis of reason of justice and right.

THE LIFE RADIANT.

An Appreciative Review of Lilian Whiting's Book.

(The Life Radiant. By Lilian Whiting. Boston. Little Brown & Co., 1903. pp. 365. Cloth, $1 net. Decorated cloth, $1.25.

Mary MacLane in her new book called "My Friend, Annabel Lee," writing of "the Boston Atmosphere," says: "The air of Boston is a mingling of very ancient and modern things, and ways of thinking that are picturesque and at times lead to something. The ancient things date back to Confucius and others of that ilk—and the modern ones are tinted with Lilian Whiting, and newspapers, and the theater."

It is good to know that Boston air is somewhat "tinted by Lilian Whiting" for that means an atmosphere of true spirituality of which there is great need in Boston and everywhere else in these "strenuous" days.

All Miss Whiting's books are richly "tinted" with true Spiritualism, but none more so than her most recent work entitled "The Life Radiant," which has for its motto,

"Follow it, follow it, Follow the gleam,"

and takes its name from the lately discovered element radium, of which the author remarks: "It is hardly possible to contemplate this remarkable element in the world of nature without recognizing its correspondence in the world of spirit. If an element radiates perpetual light, heat, and power with no loss of its own inherent energy, so the spirit can radiate love, sympathy, sweetness and inspiration with no diminution of its own quality."

This "Life Radiant" is a truly religious book in the best sense of that much-abused word—not the religion of cant, of rites and ceremonies, of form, of implacable unyielding dogma, but the religion of the spiritual side of man, the pure, the free, uplifting of man's responsive soul to the divine spirit existing in the nature of things throughout the universe, the supreme goodness, the love which makes life significant and well worth living.

"The human soul," writes Lilian Whiting, "is so constituted that it cannot live unless it breathes its native air of inspiration and joy and divineness. It is stifled in the 'strenuous' lower life, its energies are paralyzed unless it seek renewal at the divine springs"—and again: "It is in the serene and joyous exaltation of life alone that one truly lives. In that sweetness of mutual trust and generous aims and overflowing love that radiates its joy and beauty to all with whom it comes in contact, and which is perpetually fed and perpetually renewed by the constant communication of the soul with God."

She finds in all the newly discovered facts of to-day's science with which she keeps herself informed and in touch, many indications of the inter-relations between the seen and the unseen worlds, which go to make sure and clear the promise of immortal life and which helps to give proof that the death of the material body is but the opening to the more real life of the spirit of which this life is but the beginning. She declares: "All these discoveries that annihilate time and space are simply the result of the evolution of life to higher stages; of the advance of man into the ethereal realm. For is not the underlying and fundamental truth this: that all is spirit? One may talk of 'the spiritual life,' but there is no other life! Withdraw the spiritual element and there is no life at all! The difference then between the physical and material worlds is only a difference of degree—as ice, water, steam and vapor are only different degrees and conditions of the same element. Progress is the transformation of the physical into the spiritual; of the lower and cruder and denser life into the finer, the more potent, the more ethereal. In its cruder and denser form there is only a low degree of potency, and only in its more ethereal forms is there higher potency. * * * There is no death in the sense in which Professor Ayrton refers to it, as a state of unconsciousness which no message can reach, and from which no reply can come. On the contrary, that transformation we call death is a condition of far more intense consciousness, of being far more alive and far more responsive to the call and the thought. * * * Spiritual vitality is in goodness alone. So far as one endeavors to follow after righteousness, to achieve and live in truth, honor and love, he is alive; so far as he fails in this he is dead, and this quite irrespective of the fact as to whether he is in or out of his physical body."

This new work is among the most helpful and inspiring of this favorite author's books. There is inwoven into its pages many suggestions of use to all classes of readers, young and old, rich or poor, learned or unlearned, Spiritualist or materialist, teaching all how to live the Life Radiant which in her opening sentence she avers to be "That transfiguration of the ordinary daily events and circumstances which lifts them to the spiritual plane, and sees them as the signs and indications of the divine leading."

The publisher's part of the work is a setting well worthy of the writer's thought and makes a fitting companion to the ten volumes hitherto sent forth to the world by her.

John the Eighth, the Female Pope.

Now that the strenuous agitation about the life and death of Pope Leo XIII. has somewhat subsided, it might be well for us to take a look backward to about the year 852 or 3 when a former Pope Leo was dead, and a beautiful, talented and wise woman occupied St. Peter's chair. Her pontificate is rarely mentioned by the Roman Catholic priesthood, but undeniable evidence is adduced in proof of it by both Protestant and Catholic historians.

Hase and Kist in their account of "Edicts Pontifical, both Public and Private," give as a special edict of Pope Benedict III.:

'LET NO ONE PRESUME TO SAY A WORD ABOUT THE FACT OF A FEMALE POPE."

This substantiates the fact that some "words" had been said about her, hence the edict.

In the MS of Athanasius prepared for Pope Adrian II. (862-867), mention is made of an English woman becoming pope under false pretense as to sex.

Marianus Scotus, a devout Roman Catholic and historian, writes in 1060:

"To Leo IV. succeeded Joan, a woman who held the See two years, five months and four days."

He left a detailed account of Joan in the abbey of Fulda. His "Chronicle" shows him to be well acquainted with church matters. His testimony, so damaging to his church, would never have escaped the eagle eyes of the holy fathers, had it not been overwhelmingly true.

Scotus goes on to say: "That in the ninth century Charles the Great sent to England for learned priests to come to Germany. Among their number was an English priest and a young girl whom he had befriended. En route the girl gave birth to a daughter who was named Joan. This child developed into a beautiful, talented woman."

She fell in love with a monk of the abbey of Fulda, and to be near him she changed her name to John, put on a monk's dress and entered the abbey. The lovers found too much restraint and went to England and later to Athens, Greece. Joan took up the sciences and became noted for her talent and wisdom. Her lover sickened and died, and she went to Rome where she taught in the school of the Greeks. The young professor became famous and earned from an admiring populace the name, "Prince of the Wise."

When Pope Leo IV. died the popular professor was unanimously chosen to succeed him, and in due time occupied the papal chair. She ruled with such wonderful tact and wisdom as to astonish the world.

But the scene changes, for the church of Rome as well as for this remarkable woman. At the celebration of Period of Rogations while mounted on her horse and in papal attire she became suddenly ill and fell from her horse. She gave birth to a child, which the enraged priests strangled, and with their anathemas ringing in her ears, she died.

This scandalization of the Romish clergy was astounding. No wonder such efforts have been made to bury her history with her body, but truth is mightier and must prevail.

After this unholy accident the clergy constructed the "holy chair," and there after no woman has graced St. Peter's chair.

History says that in the cathedral of Sienna (in the middle of the 15th century) busts of all preceding popes were placed, and between Leo IV. and Benedict III. was a portrait of Joan, with this inscription: "John the Eighth, the Female Pope."

Stephen, the Dominican, in his "Seven Gifts" mentions Joan as "John VIII, an English woman." Another gives Joan's life in full. He was Vincentius Bellavacensis, of 1260.

Autograph MSS of monks are preserved in the Dome, France, giving a minute detail of her pontificate as Popess Joan. De Cormenin, a devout Roman Catholic and historian, says, according to "Champions of the Church": "The majesty of the priesthood, the pontifical infallibility, the pretensions of the holy see to universal rule, all that scaffolding of superstition and idolatry on which is placed the chair of St. Peter falls to the ground before a woman pope."

Many more excerpts and proofs might be added, but enough have been given to prove the claim.

Let us ask, what is the lesson to be learned from this page of history? This, that the people of the twentieth century demand freedom from all ecclesiastic bondage of soul and body; that we must make a clear distinction between principles and personalities, for we know the latter are never infallible, hence it matters not whether a man or woman rules; that to build up a strong, healthful humanity, justice and progress must reign supreme, rather than the creedal authority of popes or preachers; lastly, that the fullest freedom of speech, press and mails are America's greatest safeguards against superstition of all kinds. Let us make of this a truly enlightened nation.

A Wonderful Trance, Described by Dr. Bland.

In December, 1865, my wife and myself were members of a small circle invited to the home of Mr. Merritt, of Indianapolis, Ind., to witness what promised to be an extraordinary manifestation of spirit power. The medium was a Miss Maggie Morgan, of Ohio, then on a visit to her friends, in the city. She was a trance medium, and while entranced the evening before, the controlling spirit had said:

"If you will follow my directions to the letter, I will give you a demonstration of spirit control such as you have never witnessed. I will show you what a real trance is. You have never seen this medium, or anyone else in a profound trance. But do not tell my medium what I propose to do, or that anything out of the ordinary is expected to take place at the seance, arranged for to-morrow afternoon, lest she become nervous; and I beg that the members of the circle be not alarmed at anything that may occur, but have perfect faith that the medium is safe in our hands."

The circle was formed at 3 p. m., the medium being seated in a large rocking chair. In about an hour she was in such a deep trance that she leaned back in the chair, and her feet were placed upon another chair, which permitted her to recline in an easy position. There were two other physicians in the circle, all of us skeptics, and we, by request of the control examined the medium's pulse, noted her breathing, etc., from time to time. Her pulse declined in volume and frequency, her breathing also, slowed down gradually, until the action of both heart and lungs had entirely ceased. To all appearance, Maggie was dead. Her body grew cold and rigid, and emitted the peculiar odor of a corpse.

Mrs. Merritt was clairvoyant, and she said that she saw Maggie leave her body, and a band of spirits escorted her to the celestial home of her grandparents, where she was most affectionately received. For an hour, Mrs. M. gave us a detailed account of the medium's pilgrimage, telling who and what she saw. I made notes of her words, and when at one o'clock, the medium returned to and reanimated her body, her story of her experiences tallied perfectly with my notes.

At 12:30 this apparently dead girl arose to her feet, and from her pallid lips came a voice wholly different from hers, which said:

"Maggie is on a visit to the spirit realms, and I am in control of her body, but she will return soon, and I will withdraw and assist her to re-enter her body. You who are present can also assist her by putting her feet in very warm water, joining hands in a circle about her, and singing a hymn.

Then addressing one of the doctors, the spirit asked him to put this girl's body back into the chair. He attempted to do so, but it was so rigid that he could not bend it in the least. He was then asked to bend an arm that was thrust toward him, but he utterly failed. The cataleptic condition was perfect.

At one o'clock, symptoms of returning life were noticeable and by a quarter past one, the heart, lungs and other vital organs had resumed their normal functions, and the body had resumed its normal state, as to temperature.

The first sign of returning consciousness observed, was tears stealing from between her closed eyelids, and rolling down her cheeks. Then from her lips came the whispered words, "Glory, glory, glory," repeated a number of times.

Maggie had eaten no dinner before going into trance, and by direction of her spirit guide, a bowl of soup had been prepared, which she ate with relish, and then entered upon an account of her marvelous experiences. And her story was a wonderful one. She gave also, personal messages from departed friends to different members of the circle, but her descriptions of scenes in the spirit world were most interesting to me, though I was not then prepared to accept her story as anything but a cataleptic dream.

Maggie was a frail girl, and so anemic at that time, that her friends thought her days on earth were numbered. But immediately her health began to rapidly improve, and she soon became quite robust. She is still in her terrestrial body, and in good health. I met her at the Chesterfield, Ind., camp-meeting in 1902, and enjoyed talking about that wonderful experience of hers, thirty-six years before.

On reading my book, "In the World Celestial," she said that the descriptions of the spirit world given in that work corresponded with her experiences which she remembered perfectly.

A Decision That May Mean Much.

Dr. Wm. Green, who was ordained by the Truth Seekers' Society of Los Angeles, Cal., was recently arrested for practicing mediumship without a license. His conviction was based upon the fact that he was not legally qualified as a minister of Spiritualism, in that he was not endorsed by the California State Spiritualist Association. This technicality, which convicted him, established a recognizance of the C. S. S. A.

THE VICTORS.

I sing the joy of endeavor,
The worth of the hard-fought field,
The victor crowns for the deathless host
That battle, and do not yield.
The numberless, nameless thousands
Who wage the heroic strife,
Sad failures as earth may deem them,
Crowned kings in the war of life.

Palace and hall stand empty—
Not there are my heroes found.
Toilers and moilers, go seek them out
On poverty's battle ground.
The stain of their strife is on them,
Their scars are bared to the sun,
And each dead day stamps down its seal
In sign of a victory won.

Look for their blood. You find it
Blurred red on the minted gold
As drop by drop from their aching hearts
It is filched, and bartered and sold.
Their backs are bowed to the burden,
But their eyes look up from the clay,
With the burning fire of unbroken will
To struggle another day.

And however the world may count them
I know, on the roll of fame
The last great day will see inscribed
Each unknown warrior's name.
Who fought for his fair ideals,
Who bore the heat and the strife
With a dauntless will, at last shall be Crowned king in the war of Life.

IS SPIRITUALISM A SCIENCE?

To the Editor:—Please put me down as one who thinks that Spiritualism lies within the domain of more or less, "accurate, classified, information," and that being true we have the legal and constitutional right to wear the "Crown of Science," rather than bear the "Staff of Authority, called Religion!

The way for mediums to avoid trouble is to tell the truth, and make no charge for it, as each recipient would contribute dollars, halves or quarters if informed that the medium makes no charge but a free-will contribution of such an such an amount is needed to pay the expenses of the medium!

I am reminded of a friend's fight years ago in New York state as a medical practitioner, who, at that time was in trouble but by that little device beat his enemies out of sight.

PERSONAL MAGNETISM

A College Chartered Under State Laws, With a Capital of $100,000, for the Purpose of Teaching Personal Magnetism and Hypnotism by Correspondence.

EVERYBODY MAY NOW LEARN

Ten Thousand Copies of a Valuable Work on These Sciences to be Given Away to Advertise the College.

The American College of Sciences, of Rochester, N. Y., is a novel institution. It is chartered under state laws, with a capital of $100,000, for the purpose of teaching Personal Magnetism, Hypnotism, Magnetic Healing, Self-mastery, Self-confidence, and the higher development of Will Power; by correspondence.

At an expense of over $5,000 the college has issued a remarkable work on these sciences, ten thousand copies of which will be given away absolutely free. The book is elegantly illustrated with the most expensive engravings, and it is decidedly the finest and most comprehensive work of its kind ever published. It is the product of the combined talent of thirty distinguished hypnotic specialists and scientists. It thoroughly explains all the hidden secrets of these sciences. It is full of surprising experiences, and makes many startling disclosures in regard to the use and possibilities of this secret power.

The college absolutely guarantees that anyone can learn these sciences in a few days at home, and use the power without the knowledge of his most intimate friends.

From the names and addresses of several hundred students which were offered that they might be communicated with, eighty-four were selected. The replies received were more than sufficient to convince the most skeptical in regard to the wonderful benefits to be derived from this mighty power. There were absolutely no failures. All had learned to make practical use of the sciences. The following extracts are taken at random from the letters, for the benefit of readers:

J. H. Schneller, 1844 Avon st., La Crosse, Wis., writes: "Hypnotism truly reveals the secrets of life and the mysteries of nature. My own father could not have convinced me of its wonderful power if I had not actually tested it for myself. I consider a knowledge of it invaluable to those who wish to get the most out of life; to those who wish to achieve success and live up to the full measures of their possibilities.

Mrs. Effie M. Watson, Martinsville, Ind., writes: "Hypnotism opens the road to health, happiness, and prosperity. It should be studied by every one. I would not part with my knowledge of it for any amount. The instructions have developed within me a force of character, an ability to influence and control people that I did not dream I could acquire.

J. W. Clinger, M. D., Springfield, Ohio, writes: "I have used the methods of hypnotism taught by the American College of Sciences in two cases of difficult surgical operations with perfect success. It is a complete anaesthetic, and preferable to chloroform or ether. I acquired a practical knowledge of hypnotism in less than than three days. The book is grand."

Rev. T. W. Butler, Ph.D., Idaho City, Idaho, writes: "I have cured a number of chronic cases of rheumatism, dyspepsia and paralysis of long standing; have not had a single failure; I consider a knowledge of Personal Magnetism invaluable. The book has greatly increased my own powers.

Dr. W. P. Kennicutt, 529 State st., Binghamton, N. Y., writes: "I had long suffered from nervous prostration and dyspepsia. My case baffled all medical skill. I studied hypnotism from the American College of Sciences, and tried it upon myself with surprising results. In one week my stomach was better than it had been in thirty years. I could eat anything without the slightest distress. I can hypnotize myself in five minutes and sleep all night; have hypnotized a number of others.

The first ten thousand persons who write to the American College of Sciences will receive, absolutely free, the marvelous book that brought success to the above persons. It is intensely interesting from start to finish. It should be in every home. If you want a copy send a postal card, addressed to the American College of Sciences, Department 242, Rochester, N. Y., and you will receive the book by return mail, postage paid.

OBSESSION AND POSSESSION.

We take pleasure in introducing to our readers Mr. J. C. F. Grumbine, of Boston, Mass. At one time he was a prominent Unitarian Minister, but finally drifted into Spiritualism. He claims that in cases of obsession, "The individual is living his life, for a spirit is an absentee in the body, where, for instance, another spirit forces the tenant to vacate his house or body for a season or time. Though he live as an automaton, he is amenable to destiny and will and does profit by his occult and mysterious experiences."

To the student who has perceived the import of freedom or sovereignty, the question of the susceptibility of spirit, in all spheres of its expression and consciousness, to Divinity, and of its ability to realize it, independently or free of external suggestion and influence, is not not perplexing or unanswerable. To the neophyte who approaches the inner world of mysteries with eyes veiled and judgment warped by preconceived sophistries, the telepathic processes and the spheres of illumination are wrapped in impenetrable mystery. He perceives no visible rent in the veil, and all occult and metaphysical teaching, whether of the old or the new schools, seems powerless to remove the doubt or free the mind of an incubus. He declares that the silence is the hothouse of fruitful evils; that in it the mind is misled by its own or suggested vagaries; that the souls of men are under obsessing influences; that telepathy is the instrument for the propaganda of evil by secret confederacies of spirits who ply their nefarious work to wreck lives and cast them into outer darkness; that the subjective mind is not trustworthy unless under the searching scrutiny of the normal reason; that because wisdom is imparted, not in vocal speech or forms intelligible to the senses or natural man, but mystically, the message, authority and essence of Divine Teaching and Revelation must ever be questioned and repudiated.

It must be admitted that these allegations seem plausible, and therefore should be met, even though they form what must be termed the formidable weapon of the new recruit to Universal religion. That such allegation should be made, not by the materialist but by one of the household, proves that the heresy is not to be lightly dealt with or easily governed. And yet it is true that those who sincerely believe that they are so deceived, are devout seekers after the light, and lovers of the truth. That they should be so obsessed, demonstrates that they have been, and in a measure still are, "under the shadow."

All systems of philosophy concerning divinity aim to remove the cloud that overhangs them and obscures the serene and open vision.

How far, it may be reasonably asked and with due reverence, are the objective and subjective states amenable to suggestion, or in other words to the will of other or outside intelligences? How far does the law of consciousness and thought transference govern and hold humanity? Is there freedom and sovereignty, or must the affirmation of the Master of Israel, "I am in the Father and the Father in me," or "I and the Father are one," be taken to imply, not divine immanency and sovereignty, but causal Karma or fate where there is neither sovereignty nor freedom.

The nature and essence of the spirit will throw a light upon the mystery.

Each one is essentially divine.

The finite and the infinite differ only as the object and subject differ from the Self, which is God. Differentiation is but an appearance. Finity has to do with forms, with time and space in which forms manifest, with separation and limitation. Infinity has to do with the spirit unmanifest in eternity, one and absolute. The spirit manifests but is not manifestation. Nor is Being limited by existence. God breathed into dust (manifestation) the breath of life, but that life is from and of God. And so Paul taught: "In Him we live and move and have our being," an entrancing doctrine of neoplatonists and Christian mystics who held to the Divine Presence and Immanence.

We neither lose nor gain anything by manifestation, because both evolution and involution, birth and rebirth, imply innate Divinity. Therefore while at birth the soul vibrates on a material (objective) plane, which veils the spirit, at death (another form of birth) it vibrates on an ethereal (subjective) plane, its correspondent. Birth, esoterically, is the going out or out-breathing of the spirit; death is the going in or the inbreathing of the spirit. The change is purely an incident in the soul's existence, birth and death being coincidental, so to speak.

The law of similars and contrasts holds each soul to whatever he likes or dislikes and these likes and dislikes make up the sum of its attractions and repulsions. This law as kindred affinities and disaffinities holds the soul to every atom of the tree of life. It ramifies and governs the roots and branches, it permeates and rules the trunk, vital forces and anima bruta. And as it is in the lower, so it is in the higher correspondencies.

Therefore, in order to realize the significance of a "sphere" of spirit one must actualize a spiritual state. A state none can extemporize, and it is the fruition of spirituality.

Spiritual states or spheres flow into each other by the law of attraction, but while each one is separate and different from the other, even where they appear to be as one, the union is only an appearance, not a reality.

These states or spheres are of the spirit. They are manifest, expressed, realized, because of spirit.

Herein lie the possibilities of suggestion, influence, control, guidance, telepathy and inspiration about which so much error is written and so many confusing doctrines taught.

Herein also springs the source of the inductive or objective, the deductive or subjective method of self realization which lies at the centre of the mysteries of hypnotism, mesmerism and Spiritualism. (See "Memoirs of a Physician," by Dumas.)

The truth is that by the mathematical formula of numerical progression all spheres or states of the soul can be associated and co-ordinated. If we begin with one, whatever is allowed for environment and temperament certain unfailing states will follow and will be perceived and realized; not that human nature is the same the world over, nor that there is not sufficient variation to the working of the rule to admit of an occult and seeming mysterious and inexplicable force, but despite the unknown quantities it is true that spirit will produce like states by the unchanging law of being. And this it will be well to always remember. Planes and spheres, environments and states correspond as the echo to the voice, the reflection to the image.

Obsession becomes inevitable through all planes and spheres where freedom and sovereignty are not exercised and realized.

Each one is held to such spheres and planes, such states and environments which measure and define for him the degree of the realization of Divinity, and to that extent are his fate and destiny fixed. He is omnipotent, but he may realize and manifest but a small fraction of it. So it is with omniscience and omnipresence. All that God is, the man and woman is, but God is to be realized and expressed.

Freedom becomes both a capacity and a realization, the one, the potential power, the other, that power put into action or manifestation. Sovereignty, likewise, is the spirit's birthright but it is slowly evolved or expressed in the apotheosis.

Obsession is therefore an alternative of possession and expresses limitations which the soul places upon its power. It is not, as some have hinted, the result of imbecility, insanity, idiocy, hysteria and negativeness, although these mental and physical maladies inevitably inspire and induce it.

Obsession comprehends generically all who are bound by that which is less perfect, and such as are so bound live in each other's feelings, thoughts, acts or spheres, and dwell in each other's planes and mansions.

It can be further said that even where such obsession prevails the individual is living his life. For a spirit is an absentee in the body, where, for instance, another spirit forces the tenant to vacate his house or body for a season or time. Though he live as an automaton, he is amenable to destiny and will and does profit by his occult and mysterious experiences.

The closer the spirit's relation is to matter the more painful and relentless is the obsession and vice versa.

As the soul recedes from matter the finer the nature must be, and the less susceptible is he to any sort of obsession.

Physical obsessions are less likely and less numerous where the ego is under the dominion of intuition, as the oracle of divine inspiration is sufficient to lead it.

The Divine Presence and its oracle which obsesses no man, teaches the via vitae. And he who relies upon and follows intuition or conscience will never be obsessed. He will co-associate with kindred souls but they will not seek to dominate him, nor will he attempt to dominate them. Each will be sovereign but it will be a sovereignty which both share and enjoy.

Control is obsession, but suggestion and telepathy are not control. Suggestion is to bring under, (subgero) as the words signify by derivation, and it is not forceful or dominating, while telepathy is the process by which thoughts and feelings, are sent and received and refers to the sympathy. In other words, suggestion is the active and telepathy the passive agent. Telepathy has been exalted into the science of suggestion, but originally it implies the same meaning as thought transference and is the process by which through the sympathy a suggestion is received and perceived. Control may use suggestion as a means to an end but applied suggestion of the right sort is immeasurably more beneficial than control. Control is vitiating, where it is not debilitating, and leads to the horrors of demonism. Control and suggestion have to do with the will and both can be fatal to self-realization.

Therefore care must be taken lest the suggestion leads to a perversion of the ego, a pernicious bondage to another's will, or a state of obsession where intuition is dethroned.

Only such suggestions as reveal or imply illumination or adeptship through self-realization should be sought.

The oracle by which suggestions of a subordinate form may be determined, will be the intuition or the conscience, and they will be accepted or rejected as they are fine and uplifting or coarse and degrading, in short, if they be for or against Divinity.

And the mystery of the Silence through which as in the warp and woof of the spirit's loom suggestions work their shuttles, will not imply chaos nor sheol where fallen angels ply their nefarious work and hordes of elementals and elementaries work untold mischief and evil, but it will become an openness itself, lucid and radiant with the intelligence that is forever one in the sphere of Divinity.

Self-Regulation in the Living Organism, as Illustrated by a Prominent Physician of Berlin, Germany.

The phenomena documenting the self-regulative tendencies of living organisms [as set forth in the Chicago Tribune] are among the most interesting and most wonderful problems of modern biology. The fact that such tendencies exist has been known in a general way for centuries, but not until recently has science discovered the universal extent of those tendencies and their actual character.

Self-regulation means the tendency of living organism to counteract, by biological or structural changes, influences of a destructive or deleterious nature. Some of the regulative phenomena of the human organism are well known and recognized as such by science. It is generally known, for instance, that perspiration is a regulative phenomenon the object of which is to preserve the normal temperature of the body. Other instances are the powerful development of the muscles of the legs in professional dancers, bicyclists, and mountaineers, the development of abnormally strong bones in persons in the habit of carrying heavy loads, and the increased activity of the heart in cases of kidney disease.

Several German and French biologists recently have made a careful study of the subject and gathered a great deal of important material which throws an interesting light upon the problem of self-regulation.

The regenerative faculty which the human body possesses, as documented by the healing of wounds, the restoration of destroyed tissue, and the knitting of broken bones, is developed to a much higher degree in animals of a lower order.

The planaria, a worm quite common in every swamp, may be cut into several pieces, aid each piece will develop into a smaller but otherwise perfectly formed individual. Stenostomata and other animals of a lower order are endowed with equally remarkable restorative faculties. Recent investigations have led to the discovery that plants also possess restorative faculties, though the latter are not so strongly developed as they are in animal organisms.

Dr. Hildebrand observed that, after the first leaf developing from a seed of cyclamen europaeum had been cut off, two new leaves grew in its place. In other case a young plant developed three new leaves in place of the original first leaf, which was stopped in its growth by the seed capsule, from which it could not free itself.

Prof. Goebel has expressed the opinion that the restorative faculty of plants is so limited, because the presence of embryonic tissue in the nodes or centers of vegetation even of fully developed and mature plants makes superfluous the restoration of complete organs that have been injured or destroyed. It is not necessary for a tree the foliage of which has been gnawed off by bugs or caterpillars to restore the partly destroyed leaves, because there is nearly always a sufficient supply of embryonic tissue in the trunk and the branches to develop new buds and new foliage. The leaves of some plants, however, seem to possess considerable regenerative power. The leaves of bryophyllum, if cut from the mother plant, develop new leaves and roots at the growth centers, or, if the latter are also removed, at any convenient place of the leaves' surface. The leaves of cardamine, nasturtium, and other plants possess an equal regenerative power. Nymphae stellata has leaf buds around the stems of all its leaves, but they do not develop into new individuals unless that becomes necessary by the decay of the leaves or by their becoming severed from the mother plant.

Boirivant observed that if the leaves of robinia pseudacacia are removed important anatomical changes take place in in the stems of the leaves, the object of which seems to be to enable the stems to assume, as much as possible, the functions of the leaves.

The power of organisms to adapt themselves to functional changes is one of the most important phenomena of self-regulation. The structural changes in broken and improperly mended bones are a good illustration of adaptation. Other well-known examples are the influence of activity upon the size and development of glands, muscles, etc., the fact that the glands of the stomach secrete peptic fluid only when food is introduced and secrete only enough to insure digestion.

Animals and plants insufficiently nourished retard their metabolic assimilation and mature more rapidly than under favorable conditions. The formation of anti-toxins in the animal organism, to counteract the destructive effect of toxins introduced in the system or developed by septic influences, is another interesting example of self-regulation.

While most of the phenomena of self-regulation may be explained as purely mechanical manifestations of the self-regulative faculty of organisms, there are some so complicated and so clearly to the purpose that many scientists are inclined to attribute them to a theological principle of casuality governing all living organisms. One of the most perplexing phenomena of that kind is the regrowth of the extirpated lenses in the larva of tritan taeniatus, which was observed by Prof. G. Wolff in over 100 cases.

LAKE HELEN CAMP, FLORIDA.

Since last I wrote you, the arrivals have been Mrs. Rock, of Washington, D. C.; Mr. and Mrs. David Sherman, who have been about three days in their beautiful cottage, and Mrs. Thatcher and her daughter, Miss Ethel, from Jamestown, N. Y., who have rented the home of Mrs. Emma Huff. Mrs. Huff is spending the winter in California.

The Lowers, of Maine, have moved into their new cottage.

Mr. and Mrs. Bartholomew have named their new cottage "The Hiawatha."

Mrs. Laura G. Fixen is in Australia, and would like to sell her fine cottage, beautifully furnished, for $1,000. We miss her kindly face.

Mrs. Dr. Brigham's cottage is still unopened. She has been very ill, and not able to come.

Mrs. Brigham has rented Brigham Hall to Mrs. Ellen M. Fisher who will take charge of it. Mrs. Fisher is the lady who is so satisfactorily conducting the affairs of the dining hall, and all letters of inquiry addressed to her as regards board and rooms will be answered at once.

The hotel never was in better condition, and those who are already settled there for the winter feel it is really a homey place; all letters concerning rooms in the hotel, if addressed to Mrs. Helen Sage, will receive immediate attention. Engage rooms in either the lodging house or hotel early, and come and see us before the regular camp opens. We have Sunday meetings. The one on Sunday, Dec. 20, was addressed by Mrs. A. S. Wheeler, of Waltham, Mass. She was followed by two or three others. An evening service was held in the large dining room of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Spencer.

The dining room and kitchen belonging to the association have been enlarged, and through the kindness of Mrs. Sully of Buffalo, and Mrs. E. H. Thompson, of Lily Dale, paper was donated. Curtains were given by Mrs. Palmer, and the work of putting on the paper was done by Dr. Joseph Sherman and wife, and Mrs. Thompson. Over twenty more can be seated by the enlargement of the dining-room.

The pipe is laid for the water works and the engine will soon be placed, so that water will be at every home in the camp.

Christmas day was a gala day for our camp. Before noon the thermometer had reached over 80 in the shade, and all nature seemed to have united in a Christmas chorus. Mrs. Ellen M. Fisher, the hostess of the dining hall, aided by her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Cardot, of Burnham, N. Y., and other efficient helpers, prepared food for 62 people.

Mrs. Rose Johnson, of Dunkirk, N. Y., is in charge of the dining-room for the season, and with the aid of good friends it was most beautifully decorated with our national colors and beautiful palms. It was also the occasion of a surprise to James D. Palmer and his wife, of Willoughby, Ohio. President Bond and others, knowing it to be their fiftieth wedding anniversary, felt it would be in keeping with their helpfulness at this camp to prepare a surprise for them; therefore a table was placed in the center of the dining hall and arranged especially for them and six friends. A marriage bell hung above it, and the table was decorated with roses.

Mrs. Palmer was gowned in white, and wore roses. It would hardly seem possible that they had been married fifty years, for in his dress suit, with the joy of the occasion lighting up his face, he scarcely looked to be fifty years old, and she, though her hair is white, still retains the looks of life's summer-time. At sight of the marriage bell they began to understand that they were remembered, and the writer must say right here in justice to herself that it has been at the earnest request of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Palmer that she has striven to reproduce what was then an impromptu ceremony on her part.

At the close of the banquet, President Bond arose and thanked most heartily Mrs. Fisher for the most excellent Christmas dinner. He complimented Mrs. Johnson and her efficient corps of waiters for their kindly and prompt service, but, said he, this day has another meaning than any Christmas has ever had before for us, as it is the fiftieth anniversary of the wedding of Brother and Sister Palmer, but I will not talk longer, but will ask Mrs. Twing to continue the service upon this happy occasion. Mrs. Twing referred to their wedding day fifty years ago in a great farm house 'mid the snow-clad hills of Pennsylvania, of the happy company there; of a few happy years together; a blessing coming to them in the form of a little daughter; then the clarion call for defenders of our country; of Mr. Palmer answering the call; of the weary years when the young wife fought a fight with grief and fear; of the soldier's return weak and weary with mental pictures of battle-fields and pain; then victory, and the little one grew stronger and beautiful, then left the home nest and joined hands with one who has been with her across many seas, until the cities of the old world are like homes to her, and sunny France and Italy like our own sunny south. The river Nile and other rivers that are looked upon in the history of other countries as so far off and full of interest are to her an old story. The plains of Judea, the city of Jerusalem and other places of deep interest, she has visited, both with the thought of the artist and the reasoning of the student. Her marriage has been blessed by two children; one who is now a sturdy business man of New England, the other the wife of a prince of Roumania, and though her little one she clasps to her heart is very near a crown, those who have loved that little mother from her childhood, can but feel that no matter how it may fare with her royalty, her heart will turn back to the country her grandfather fought for, and our own Stars and Stripes be dearer than the flag of any other country. Mrs. Twing then asked the bride and groom of fifty years to join right hands and pledge anew their lives to each other, feeling it might be to them a benediction that would follow them to the country that hath no pain.

President Bond's wife then brought forward a silver chocolate service lined with gold, and it was presented to them with the love of many friends, to which Mr. and Mrs. Palmer responded very feelingly.

Mrs. J. S. Johnson has just arrived from Anderson, Ind.

The sad news reached us a few days ago that President Hilligoss was very ill, but a telegram has been received that he is better and will soon be with us, accompanied by his good wife.

On Sunday, Dec. 27, Mrs. Joseph Hodes Buchanan read a most interesting original paper upon the subject, "Be Thyself," which was followed by complimentary remarks.

The Progressive Thinker is hailed with delight by the campers. We hope many will subscribe for it and other spiritual papers.

HAPPINESS.

Self-Interest the Motive of All Voluntary Acts.

Talk about happiness—it is the sum total of all desire. The deep sacred motive that inspires every act.

All other things are sought for simply and solely because it is believed, that, directly or indirectly, sometime, somewhere, in some way they will contribute to happiness. Or what is the same thing, diminish suffering.

No voluntary act ever occurs without a motive. That motive, in its deeper inner precincts of the soul, is always happiness.

I know that this idea is unpopular. But what do we care for popularity? It is the truth, and nothing but the truth, that we are after.

There is no such thing as disinterested benevolence.

No such thing as an effect without a cause. The cause cannot move self without self-interest. There must be a motive for every voluntary act. That motive in its ultimate design is always happiness. Though many times the result is just the opposite.

No person can successfully gainsay the position I have taken. But as to the best way to obtain happiness, it is the greatest and most important question ever propounded to mortal man.

The way is plain, but, oh, my! how far we stray from the direct course. One thing we may always depend upon. God's or Nature's laws never change. Never vary in the slightest degree.

When we once learn their effect upon a certain class of thoughts, acts or deeds, we may be sure it will always be the same.

While we are in the physical form, we comprehend more readily the results that follow infringements upon God's laws that pertain to material things.

It does not take us long to learn that we must keep out of the fire, or burn; keep our heads above water, or drown; resist the law of gravitation, or get smashed up. But we are very obtuse about comprehending the result of jealousy, hatred, malice, fraud and dishonesty.

Yet the administration of Infinite Wisdom covers every thought, act and deed. No person, no matter how high or how low, can possibly transgress any law and escape the suffering that is sure to come as a result of that transgression.

The sooner we learn the immutability of Nature's laws, the impossibility of getting from under their jurisdiction, either in time or eternity, and that obedience to, or harmony with them always brings peace and pleasure, while transgressing them brings suffering and misery—the sooner we will be on the direct road to that grand, beautiful, lovely condition we call heaven.

There is no possible way of being happy without being good; no escape from wretchedness and misery while we disregard Nature's behests.

Happiness cannot come by abusing the body with poisonous liquors and tobacco, or taxing it with extra strains and bruises, or by breathing impure air.

Neither can it come from vile, corrupt and impure thoughts. Nor from jealousy, hatred, malice, dishonesty, hypocrisy, deception and fraud. The laws pertaining to the moral and spiritual nature of man are just as unvarying in their operations as those affecting material things.

We must learn that the only possible means of reaching heaven or happiness, is through mental, moral, physical and spiritual rectitude. In other words, being good, doing what is right, which is being righteous.

Hell is the suffering, wretchedness and misery that come as a result of sin, or wrong doing.

The only possible escape is through ceasing to sin, doing right.

In other words, obeying the law.

The highways to heaven and to hell are both plain and clear. No one need mistake the route.

We take our choice, and are sure to get the proper result of that choice.

It may seem strange to some but the motive for every act of the human family, without an exception, is happiness for self.

Says one, "I do many things without a thought of any benefit to myself."

Ah! my dear sir, how easy it is to be mistaken. What do you do those things for? You say, "just to help others. To make others happy." But what do you want to make others happy for? Why do you care a snap whether anybody else is happy or not?

You say: "Do you take me to be a savage? Am I destitute of human kindness and sympathy? I certainly could not be happy seeing others suffer and do nothing to help them."

Ah, yes! That is just it. Could not be happy. And you do it so that you may be happy. That is the motive. Just what I have been telling you. It is all right. It is kind and good in you to want to help others because you could not be happy without doing so.

I want you to see that there is a self-interest in every act. And that it is perfectly right that there should be.

I want everybody to learn that it is to their self-interest to be good and kind and helpful to others.

Duluth, Minn. JOHN T. DOW.

Devils or Demons.

The hypothesis that diseases were caused by devils or demons getting into the body somehow and taking up their abode there, which was universally believed till far into the Christian era, was perhaps "a good working hypothesis," but is not credited nowadays except by a few devout people. But I have heard some microphobes express their belief that all bacteria were devils, and perhaps they are, only very small ones. But their smallness need not militate against their claim to diabolic nature, for I remember reading that some great theological authority—possibly some conclave of Sorbonne doctors—had calculated or decided that 20,000 spiritual creatures, angelic or diabolic, I forget which, could dance comfortably on the point of a needle. This would about put them on an equality, in point of size, with the microbes that take possession of our bodies in diabolic fashion. Conn tells us that a cubic inch of milk that has stood twenty-four hours contains 13,000,000,000 microbes, and a bacteriologist lately announced that every time we wash in our morning tub we lose from ten to twenty millions of microbes. The hypothesis of bacterial disease being diabolic possession need not therefore be abandoned on account of any supposed difference in the sizes of the respective agents of the presumed invasions. It will doubtless be grateful and comforting to the devout persons alluded to to find their belief in diabolic possession as the cause of disease confirmed and corroborated, or, at least, rendered probable, by this latest development of pathological science.—Homeopathic Recorder.

Do You Know What It Means to Cure Constipation?

It means to turn aside and throw out of the body all the woes and miseries caused by a clogged up system, and they are many. Constipation means that the bowels are weak, so that they cannot keep up that constant motion the doctors call peristaltic action. When that stops passages cease, the blood begins to absorb the poisons through the walls of the intestines and thus disease is scattered everywhere. Death often lays its foundation in this way. Torturing diseases like dyspepsia, indigestion, kidney troubles, liver complaints, heart disease, headaches and a hundred and one other complaints start that way. A cure must come through toning up, strengthening and invigorating the bowels. This can be easily, gently, and permanently done by Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine. It is a tonic laxative of the highest class. It builds up the bowels, restores the lost action and adds new life and vigor. Only one small dose a day will positively cure constipation of any degree by removing the cause of the trouble. Try it. A free sample bottle for the asking. At the Head of the Banner of Light.

J. J. Morse, of England, a splendid medium and an author of note, has assumed charge of the editorial columns of the Banner of Light.

DR. J. M. PEEBLES.

We are glad to hear that the venerable pilgrim is gradually approaching that point in his career when he can again say, "I am in perfect health." The Doctor has passed through a severe ordeal in his last sickness, and his complete recovery may almost be regarded as a miracle. In accordance with the teachings of his pamphlet, "How to Live a Century," he doesn't propose to take his departure to spirit life before he reaches his one hundred years of earth life.

Certainly Fresh.

The Rev. C. T. Russell, in a sermon in Columbia Theatre, Washington, D. C., put forward views that have at least the merit of being new. It has always been a troublesome business to reconcile the rule of a good and merciful God with the evil and injustice of the world. Rev. Russell cuts the knot with a single sword-thrust. He says there are three dispensations; from the beginning to the flood; from the flood to the dawn of the millennium, and the millennium. Does God reign? He did from the time of Adam to the flood; he will when the millennium dawns, but now that "God reigns" "such a thought even is blasphemous. The facts as we know them, unite with the scriptures in teaching that God is not now exercising the kingship of the world."

In this dispensation "God does not reign. History shows us most conclusively that the present dispensation has been an evil one from its beginning until now. It has been marked by trouble, crime upon crime, calamity upon calamity—individual and national, a warfare along lines of selfishness and sin."

Who then does reign? The devil is the prompt answer.

It surely must have been discouraging to God, after his six days' work, which he pronounced good, to find at the end of the first dispensation that everything was so awry that he had to drown out mankind like a nest of rats, saving only one family, and starting the second dispensation to find it so hopelessly wicked that he had to retire from the struggle and give the world over to Satan!

If the contention of the minister is true, Satan has made a success of his government considering the material he had to start with during these 3,000 years, and if left alone will bring the human race up to the high grounds of political freedom and justice.

This is an all embracing explanation and it's a wonder it has not been before thought of. Nothing goes amiss with the devil. Everything sinful he is right here to be responsible for. It is astonishing the world is not infinitely worse. It has been godless for 3,000 years. It becomes as difficult to account for the great amount of goodness, as it was for the evil under the rule of God. The devil has reigned, and God has been absent for 3,000 years and yet mankind advances, and there is certainly a hopeful percentage of goodness in the world.

The problem changes sides with its equations, and the difficulty now is not to account for evil under a dispensation of God, but of goodness flourishing like a gree bay tree under the reign of the devil! These ministers drifting over the chartless sea of Theology are as amusing as a circus. As rink masters they are not a success, but for side shows, they are incomparable.

"WHO IS TO BLAME," will be the subject of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond's discourse next Sunday.

Facts Relative to the Fox Sisters.

The Editor-at-Large, Hudson Tuttle, is ever on the Alert to furnish interesting information for the public. While his farm life is quiet and unassuming, his grasp of things spiritual extends over the entire country. These interesting and important facts relative to the Fox Sisters, furnished by Mr. Titus Merritt, the veteran Spiritualist, of New York, will be read with deep interest.

[The early history of Spiritualism is already becoming obscure, and the chief actors and witnesses have gone into the great beyond. Hence everything which throws light on the subject, whether the great movement is true or false, has an increasing value as the years go by.

Last year the death of a "Mrs. Smith," said to be one of the "Fox Sisters," was taken for an occasion to herald the "confession of these sisters, and the press far and wide published the same. The so-called "confession" had been made nine years before, and yet was given out as news! That made it the more remarkable and revealed the purpose of the slanderous report. Spiritualists should be well informed as to the beginning of the movement, and the lives and character of the "Sisters," the truth as to their so-called "confession."

The facts and their confirmation have been difficult to obtain, and hence it is most fortunate that at this critical time, an unimpeachable witness comes forward, with a clear knowledge of the events under discussion. That witness is Mr. Titus Merritt, of Yonkers, N. Y., who for many years was a friend of the Sisters and an observer of their manifestations numberless times and confirmed without a doubt, as to their spirit source. He was their friend and adviser to the last moment of their transition. A man of keen observation, united with remarkable sympathy for the unfortunate, when Kate and Margaretta came from England in destitute circumstances, he at once went to their assistance feeling that they were more sinned against than sinning, and not responsible for their conduct.

In a letter accompanying the MS. he writes that he has almost reached the four score mark, (77) and seeing so many false reports, he feels it his duty before he departs this life to give his testimony on the side of truth.

Especially valuable at this time is the strong declarations of this veteran, when mediumship is ruthlessly assailed as the cause of mental and moral degeneracy, and the "Fox Sisters" are constantly brought forward as examples. Spiritualists will do well to hold these facts in memory to meet these charges when they are repeated, as they will be to the century's end as the lies about Paine and Ingersoll are, as though never questioned.]

THE MANUSCRIPT.

Leah (Mrs. Underhill) was born when her parents were living together harmoniously and her father was an exemplary man. But a serious cause of contention arose. He went away and not until twenty years after her birth did he return. He lived the life of a profligate, drank heavily and boasted that he could drink more than any one else and not show it. During all this time he sent money home to his family, obtained it is supposed, by gambling, at which he had marvelous good fortune. It was under these conditions that Kate and Margaretta were born. They had an inebriate father, and the prenatal impressions thus received were the cause of the wrecking of their lives. I could constantly see the exertions of the controlling spirit to hold the Sisters up and away, and they would succeed for awhile and then their power would fail and the innate habit assert itself.

At the time the rappings began, the behavior of the young girls was everything that could be required by the most fastidious. They were modest and unassuming and gentle in manners. Their conduct after they went to New York was highly commendable, and their seances constantly demonstrated that departed spirits and those exalted in the life beyond, communicated. Many of the wealthy invited the Sisters to their homes to give seances, and at the close of these they had refreshments passed, with wine or beer, and unconsciously the habit was formed. The hereditary inclination was inflamed and grew to dominate their wills.

There has been dispute about the ages of the Sisters. From reliable sources I find that on March 31, 1848, Kate was fourteen years, Margaret, eleven and Leah thirty-four years old. Leah had a fair education and had taught school, and when they all went to New York she was capable of caring for her younger sisters. They were the guests of Horace Greeley, who was one of the first to call upon them. Joseph L. Turner, who forty years afterwards generously gave the privilege of interment of Kate and Margaretta on his plot at Cypress Hill Cemetery, was the second caller. They were the frequent guests of Alice and Phoebe Cary, William C. Bryant, George Bancroft, Rev. Dr. Hawks, Nathaniel P. Willis, Dr. Marvy, Dr. John W. Francis, J. Fennimore Cooper, Dr. C. D. Griswold, and a host of the best citizens. Their seances were attended by people from almost every part of the United States and the world. The evidences given through their instrumentality were overwhelming, and convinced thousands. How could they otherwise than be convinced when their friends long since dead, rapped out answers which no one else could know, and by absolute tests gave assurance of their presence? In fact in no instance were they detected in fraud, and the united opinion was that whatever the source of the happings, the girls were innocent of deception.

When Leah married Mr. Underhill, she could not attend to her new duties and be the mentor she had been to her sisters. They had to go alone, and in their conspicuous position, there were great dangers for them. Designing persons who wished to bring disgrace on the cause, set snares for them, and when these failed they resorted to slanderous and abusive stories. There is no necessity of calling in the aid of evil spirits, or of referring to their mediumship as a cause of their deterioration of character. The wonder is that they lived through it all and retained their remarkable powers. It was not obsession, and it is untruthful as unjust to take them as examples of the evil effects of mediumship. In fact their mediumship was their constant sustaining power. Overborne it was at times by hereditary tendencies; at other times almost obliterated.

When controlled, that is under the guidance of the spirits, they were courtly in manners and peers in any society. That they attracted such men as Dr. Kane and Barrister Jenckens, proves that they were of more than ordinary endowments.

In 1886, when angry with Mrs. Underhill because she was worn out by their importunities and refused to assist them, Mrs. Kane made this peculiar statement to me: "Mr. Merritt, I have many times been offered big money if I would go on the stage and say we sisters did all the rappings with the joints of our feet, and to spite Leah I sometimes think I will consent to do so." To this Mrs. Jenckens replied: "I will never do that for money or spite."

I then said: "Now let me hear the best you can do with your joints." There was a slight grating sound totally unlike the spirit rap. Mrs. K. said: "Oh! I can tell you the secret. The spirits rap in conjunction with the movement of my toes." I replied: "You cannot upset what has been already accomplished through you; you will only injure yourself. Galileo might as well come back at this late date before the Cardinal at Baltimore, or the President, and make another oath that the sun, moon and stars seen through the great Lick telescope make a complete circle around this little earth every twenty-four hours."

The spiritual tide ebbed and flowed in not a very straight line, until September 1888, when really there was a true storm center, but like all other storms, it passed away and left things brighter. How it was brought about will be more fully told in the statement Margaretta made to a reporter immediately after her "expose." How much her faith in Catholicism influenced her, and how far the promise of wealth, cannot be apportioned. Both together overcome her resisting sense of right and she yielded to the persuasion of one Mr. Frank Stechan, who had figured in a certain class of theatricals, to go upon the stage of the Academy of Music, East 14th street, on the 21st of October, 1888, at eight o'clock, and give the New York World a grand opportunity to make a sensation. They advertised it largely, the city was billed throughout, and everything done to draw the crowd. It was expected that Spiritualism would, after the exposure of the trick of its chief exponent, collapse and be heard of no more.

Not so; the eventful evening came; the Academy of Music was well filled at good prices, but the chief actor was not there; the crowd was uneasy and stamping. Mrs. Kane and Jenckens lived up town, and Manager Stechan hastened to their residence. Mrs. Kane said she would not go, but promised that she would if given three hundred dollars in hand, and Mrs. Jenckens would go with her. Kate said, "Margaretta, you need the money, and I will go and take a seat next to the platform, but will not go on with you."

I had an engagement at Adelphi Hall and did not attend. I well knew that Margaretta depended on the spirits to make genuine manifestations, and had been pressed into the affair by her necessities for money and for other considerations, and I had little interest in the matter. But I had reliable persons there, sitting near the platform, and they reported that several times during the performance, the raps came far away from the sounding board, and the manager would say to Mrs. Kane; "Don't let them rap off the board! Make them rap on the sounding board!"

It was a disappointing fiasco from start to finish, and resulted in what theatrical people call "a rough house." Instead of checking the advance of Spiritualism in the city, it stimulated investigation, and many who attended the performance came to Mrs. Brigham's meetings and became interested in the philosophy.

Manager Stechan coined money out of the business and went to Boston where although he did not create a sensation, succeeded in having a good house and skipped with all the cash, leaving, Mrs. Kane unpaid, and the good Mr. Luther Colby, then editor of the Banner of Light, had to furnish her money to return to New York.

In November 1889, Margaretta made a full explanation at the residence of Henry J. Newton, 128 West Forty-third street, in the presence of John L. O'Sullivan, ex-minister to Portugal. An able reporter by the name of Welch—an intimate friend of mine—was engaged and his report was published in the New York Press, Nov. 5, 1889.

[To complete the narrative of Mr. Merritt, I present the following extracts from the paper in which it was published.

In a voice trembling with the intensity of her emotions, she said: "Would to God I could undo the injustice I have done the cause of Spiritualism when I gave utterances that had no foundation in fact. Promises of wealth and happiness were held out to me in return for an attack on Spiritualism, whose hopeful assurances were so deceitful.

"The charges I made against Spiritualism were false in every particular. I have no hesitation in saying that my belief in Spiritualism has undergone no change. Its genuineness is an indisputable fact." The most enticing of these "promises" were held out by Cardinal Manning, who wrote to her advising her to abandon "this wicked work of the devil," and by exposing the work of his Satanic Majesty, make herself secure in the esteem of the Mother Church. In her statement to the reporter, she evidently withholds as much as possible information which would involve that church, but she says enough to show that she had strong influences brought to bear on her from that direction.]

Mr. Merritt continues:

Mr. Henry J. Newton made an appeal to the members of the First Spiritualist Society of New York, of which he was president, for assistance in caring for Margaretta during her last sickness, and well presented how the Sisters had suffered as martyrs for others and the cause. I regard my acquaintance with them as most fortunate, for I received constantly what to me was absolute evidence of the genuineness of the manifestations. When Margaretta was a helpless invalid during the last weeks of her mortal life, I frequently called to ascertain her wants and on every occasion the rappings greeted me and I received answers and messages. By a peculiar combination of circumstances I was alone with her when she left the mortal body. There were continuous rappings, giving intelligent answers, even after she had sank into the unconscious state. But when death finally released her spirit the sounds ceased, and were heard no more.

And here I want to speak of a manifestation, which to me was a startling test of spirit presence.

For a more perfect understanding of this matter, let me premise, that after the fiasco at the Academy of Music (it was the next day) I met Mrs. Underhill at the residence of Mr. Newton. She was almost insane with chagrin over the conduct of her sister. When I defended Mrs. Kane, on the ground that she did not realize the effect of her actions and should not be held responsible, both Mr. and Mrs. Underhill were angry at me. From that time she was implacable and rejected every appeal for reconciliation.

A medium, Mrs. Victoria Hill, was a guest of Mrs. Newton, and it chanced that they were holding a seance only three hours after the death of Margaretta. I absolutely know that no one on Manhattan Island knew of the event. It was impossible for the news to have reached the Newtons. Yet Mrs. Underhill came to the seance and gave the message which I present in full.

MESSAGE FOR TITUS MERRITT.

Message received March 8, 1893, at the residence of Henry J. Newton, 128 West Forty-third street, New York City, through the mediumship of Mrs. Victoria Hill, a guest of Mrs. Newton's, on the evening of March 7, before anyone on Manhattan Island knew of Margaret Fox Kane's demise at 4.30 a. m., March 8, at Mrs. Ruggles' in State street, Brooklyn. I reached Mr. Newton's at 8:30 a. m., to inform them; Mrs. Newton opened the door and informed me that there was a message for me from Leah Fox Underhill, through the mediumship of Mrs. Hill.

THE MESSAGE.

Friend Merritt:—What can we offer you for your faithful and tireless care and watchful anxiety for the welfare of one poor afflicted one, held so long a captive under the worst forms of captivity. "No spirit in prison" has been more rudely handled, and we have seen, since passing over, just the state, yet powerless to aid her.

Could we replace the material loss you have sustained so often in faithful ministrations, how gladly would we bring about the ways and means. The true reward for such acts of a truly generous and sympathetic soul like yours awaits a higher return and it will greet you here, where every wrong is righted, every wish so oft desired satisfied to the fullest extent.

Pa and Ma send their blessings rich with endless gratitude.

Poor child, poor child; what heavy mists enshroud her. I would ask the friends of progress everywhere who know our sorrow to sometime give us their united aid whenever sitting for manifestations in silent concentrated thought, for the furtherance of the work of liberation.

She is in the wise care of experts at present and we know time will reveal to us their success in restoring the lost chords of a wrecked life, and therefore we rest content.

I shall greet her with all memories of the unhappy past entirely forgotten and forgiven. You know what I mean when I confess all bitterness of feeling personally removed and in its stead, only love as it was in the old days when in her childish confidence she looked to me for help and advice. God and all goodness by ministering ones bestowed, ever bless and keep you free from dangers unforeseen or undeveloped good the so-called evil of the world.

Yours gratefully and eternally,

LEAH FOX UNDERHILL.

Witnesses:—John D. and Margaret (parents); Katie (sister.) Then followed my relatives that Mrs. Hill never saw or heard of—Daniel N. Merritt (my father); William and Isaac Merritt (my uncles); Charles H. Foster and Robert T. Hallock (friends). (Signed) TITUS MERRITT.

[The facts here presented, are most important and have greater weight because they are vouched for by an eye witness, one of unimpeachable character. The Spiritualist is justified in declaring that the "Fox Sisters" did not expose the manifestations through them or declare themselves frauds. It is also as well proven, that their mediumship was not the cause of any deterioration of character. On the contrary, it was a source of strength, and when they allowed their spirit friends to influence them fully they were upright and strong.]

HUDSON TUTTLE,

Lyceum Literature.

The following contains a good suggestion for the benefit of our lyceum conductors, that they may not fall into the ways of the Sunday-schools, as depicted. Spiritualists may congratulate themselves that the children of our lyceums are supplied with a really excellent quality of instruction, free from such trash as "David's Psalms in meter," and the like. Compare the Sunday-school literature mentioned with the high and noble class of instruction embodied in Tuttle's Lyceum Guide, and you will feel proud of our superiority in style and quality.

As stated in the Chicago Chronicle, the literature and songs of the modern Sunday-school were condemned recently by Professor Robert Baird, head of the department of Greek at Northwestern university, in a lecture to a class in Greek literature. The professor contrasted the literature read by the children of this generation with that of forty years ago and there had been a backward step.

"Noble thoughts," said Professor Baird, "should always be couched in noble form. I wish this fact could be impressed on the minds of all who intend to teach children. If noble expressions were given to noble thoughts in after years the pupil would not detest the language in which he learned the ideas and possibly the thoughts themselves.

"Unfortunately these principles do not seem to be accepted to-day in the imparting of moral and religious truth. It is not necessary for me to specify what I mean. I refer to much of the Sunday-school literature and many of the Sunday-school songs of to-day.

"The fact should always be borne in mind that noble thoughts should not be imparted to the child in a form which he will abominate in later years. In this respect I think the children of forty years ago were better off than the children of to-day. I am almost inclined to say it would be better for the young people to receive little Instruction than to be instructed in literary forms that they will detest in later life.

"When my brothers went to school in Scotland they were required to memorize every day a double verse of David's psalms in meter. This is an example of what they learned not in Sunday-school, but in day school:

The Lord is my shepherd;
I shall not want.
He maketh me down to lie
In pastures green. He leadeth me
The quiet waters by.

"The boy who learned that kind of literature was not ashamed of it when he became 80 years old.

"Thomas Carlyle on being asked to write something to be read before a society of free thinkers replied he had been taught when a boy that the chief end of man was to serve God and glorify him forever. I think that in some respects the boy who was required to learn the catechism and some of the psalms was better off than the boy of to-day. One reason the 'Iliad' and 'Odyssey' of Homer have endured through the ages is that their noble thoughts are couched in noble language."

Small Chance for Adults.

There is little chance for the conversion of any man after he has passed the age of 23. The spiritual period of girls is 16 and of boys 17. This is the giggling and gum-chewing age of girls and the awkward age of boys."

These were the asertions of Dr. William E. Barton, pastor of the First Congregational church of Oak Park, in addressing the Fellowship Club of that suburb. The theme was "What We Owe the Child Physically, Mentally, Spiritually." Dr. Barton's division was "Spiritually."

"General education has little effect on the spiritual phenomenon known as conversion," he said. "It occurs in the spiritually perfect period of human life, and what is to be done with the child spiritually must be done between the ages of 12 and 17. Too much emphasis cannot be placed on the teaching of a child to distinguish the coarsening influence of such things as the low vaudeville and the penny arcade with its indecent pictures.

"Any thing that makes the child clean, healthy and happy is not to be despised. The spiritual nature must always be paramount. It is the spiritual character that justifies the spending of thousands of dollars on the training of Helen Keller and it was the spiritual nature that justified the calling of a surgeon accounted the best in Europe to America to treat a single child."

Mrs. George W. Plummer spoke of the child "Physically" and said:

"The child has the right to be well born. He has the right to expect at least good parents and grandparents. The child has also the right to good health. The growing neglect of physical welfare and the criminal adulteration of foods make life seem to be the very cheapest thing in the world."—Chicago Chronicle.

Does this not indicate that persons who have grown to mature age and mature thought are not susceptible subjects for evangelistic Christian impressions and the hypnotic or semi-hypnotic suggestion paramount in revival methods?

It is the young, the callow, the immature in age and mentality, that are most readily affected by ordinary religious revival influences.

THE HOWE-HUNTLEY DISCUSSION.

It will be resumed next week. Circumstances beyond Mrs. Huntley's control prevented her from getting her reply to this office in time for the current issue.

Driven Away by the Hymns.

The Gospel ministers have racked their brains to find the cause of the absence of men from the churches, yet it remained for Rev. Ward Beecher Pickard to stumble on to the real motive. "Our hymns are responsible for the scarcity of men in the church," he declares. "I do not blame men a bit for their reluctance to attend church where these meek, namby-pamby, expressionless and meaningless songs are sung."

Rev. Pickard, when he found himself well started, struck out in other directions. "When a crowd comes in from a football game, the lusty heavyweights do not want to hear, "I want to be an angel and with the angels stand, with a crown upon my forehead and a harp within my hand." They are like the boy whose mother told him if he was not good, he would not be an angel. "I don't want to be an angel," he said, "I don't want to be an angel and wear hen feathers." Rev. Pickard thinks that the manner in which Christ is painted by the artists has much to do in making his religion one of "women and children." They painted Christ as a weak, effeminate, pretty man, full of sorrow, and thus gaining the sympathy of women. Rev. Pickard is for a manlier religion, and he sees the failure and has the manliness to acknowledge the unjust treatment of those outside by the church of women. He says: "There has been an army of strong, good men all around us, men who were too broad and large to enter into the churches through the little, narrow, theological door which we ourselves constructed. We thought them different from us. In our ignorance we pitied them. God pity us!"

Now the light surely is breaking! Twenty-five years ago such talk would have been rank heresy. Then the "strong, good man," outside the church persecuted as an offender against God, and the attempt made to cut him down so he could enter the church door. Now the pigmies inside finding the outside giants can come in in no other way, proposed to enlarge the door, making it so large a man with all his strength can enter.

But does this iconoclast realize the consequences? When these men enter the church, not only the namby-pamby hymns will go, but the namby-pamby prayers and preaching. And after the new order, will the church know itself?

THE IROQUOIS DISASTER.

Chicago has been visited by an appalling disaster in the burning of the Iroquois Theater. Six hundred men, women and children lost their lives, three ministers of the gospel being among the number. A careless Mayor, corrupt Aldermen and dishonest officials are responsible for this awful disaster.

Romanism and Our Public Schools.

That was a significant statement made by Archbishop Quigley in his recent address, that all non-Catholic teaching is anti-Catholic. The inference is that all instruction by Catholic teachers in the public schools is Catholic. Surely the church would not allow Catholic teachers to give anti-Catholic teaching!

It is said that about one-third of the children in the public schools are Roman Catholics, while two-thirds of the teachers are Romanists. It illustrates how the church is worming its adherents into all departments wherever it can do so.

If the Catholics are entitled to separate schools, built and maintained by the state, then the Presbyterians, the Methodists, the Episcopalians, and the Baptists are entitled to the same privilege. The idea is absurd.

It is plain we are going to have a fight with aggressive Catholicism on the question of the American system of public schools. Such leaders as Archbishop Quigley are becoming impudently aggressive in their anti-American crusade.

This Arch-Romanist wants the state to "provide schools for the minority." This is just what the state does—as everybody knows. But what he wants is that the government provide and support schools to teach Romish faith, Romish religion. He wants Romish schools supported at the expense of the people. He wants a union of church and state. He wants what is diametrically contrary to the American idea that the government is secular and not religious and should have nothing to do with the support of any church or religion whatsoever.

Romanism can never become Americanized in its purposes and ideals.

The Great Moral Daily.

A company of gospel ministers with other pious persons of Buffalo, N. Y., organized for the purpose of publishing a "great religious daily," such a paper as Christ would have were he on earth. Rev. Dr. Gifford was one of its officers. It was to be called the Sun, and be edited with heavenly wisdom, and free from scandal reports, police news, no Sunday edition, and Monday's paper was to be made up of reports of sermons. A paper altogether angelic in morals and pious to the liking of Cotton Mather.

Well, this lively scheme had to have money to back it, and its ministerial promoters hit at the endless chain plan. Anyone subscribing three dollars, and furnishing proof that they had written sixty letters and sent them to others, asking them to help in the good work, was to be paid fourteen dollars out of the company's funds. Letters and money with lists of names poured in a flood into the secretary's office. The get-rick-quick-fools were evidenced in the majority, and the ability of the company to pay between four and five hundred per cent for the use of their money did not appear to have been questioned by the dupes. Thousands of dollars were coming in, and the great moral daily would have been launched, freighted with piety, had not the tyrannical postoffice officials forbid the company the use of the mails. Its circulars, were, in the opinion of the department, obtaining money under false pretenses. Those who sent their money and sixty letters will not receive the fourteen dollars; they will be lucky to get their three dollars back.

The lay mind will be filled with humiliation because of its incomprehension of the "morality" of this scheme, and how a paper published in this manner and edited by men who see nothing wrong in the method, can be an improvement on the every-day paper, which makes no pretensions of being edited in a pulpit, but pays its debts in an honest business manner.

Holidays in Excess.

Holidays are now in order. Politicians are not satisfied with the number in America, they are ever plotting for new ones, thinking thereby to please the people. Birthdays of prominent men seem to give satisfaction; so every decade from this forth, it is probable, a new holiday will be added until in a millennium they will be as numerous as in Catholic countries, and idleness to observe them will become almost universal.

Wm. E. Curtis, the traveling correspondent of the Chicago Record-Herald, in a late letter from Madrid, says: "There are 128 holidays in Spain, not including Sundays.'" Add that day to the list, then one-half of all the days in the year are consecrated to idleness, at the expense of productive industry.

As labor constitutes the wealth of a nation, and as there are now but few holidays with us, we can well understand why the great prosperity in this country. And, applying the same rule to other countries, we can well understand why those people, where priestcraft has decreed so much idleness, are so poor. And does it not partly tell why laborers, with their families, are leaving those countries, and flocking in such vast numbers to this, where they are exempt from such exactions? Instead of enlarging the number of holidays in America we could be profited if we would abrogate some we have.

MAKE REPLY TO ARCHBISHOP.

M. M. Mangasarian and Rev. R. A. White Defend School System.

M. M. Mangasarian and Rev. R. A. White took up the educational issue in their sermons recently, and both disagreed with Archbishop Quigley. Their arguments follow:

M. M. Mangasarian (Independent Religious Society): "In what respect do our schools displease the Catholics? Are the sciences taught in them unreliable? Are the text-books garbled? Is their history faulty? Are our teachers immoral or inefficient? 'They do not teach religion,' says the Archbishop. But why cannot the church assume that duty and relieve the schools of so delicate a subject? The schools are not complaining that the churches do not also teach the sciences and the arts. Why should the church quarrel with the schools for not teaching theology? Again, the archbishop denounces as oppressive and tyrannical the requirement of a normal school certificate from every applicant for a position as teacher in our schools. But if the Catholics consider it a sin to study in our schools, why are they so anxious to teach in them? It is the verdict of history, and I say this without any ill feeling, that no church, Catholic or Protestant, is a success as an educator."

Rev. R. A. White (Stewart Avenue Universalist Church): It cannot be maintained that our public schools are either godless or irreligious. If the archbishop means that they are not sectarian, we agree. This is one of their virtues. Schools are not necessarily godless or irreligious because they do not teach Presbyterianism, Catholicism or some other 'ism.' The denial by the archbishop of the right of the state to educate children is an old denial, but inconsistent with the needs and rights of democracy. The state has a perfect right to do whatever insures its stability and welfare. In a democracy enlightenment is the only sure basis for stable and safe institutions. In the United States we have the most diverse social conditions, religious differences and racial traditions to be found anywhere in the world. To mold these into a homogeneous whole without doing injustice to a genuine individuality is the herculean task of our American institutions. Our chief instrumentality for doing this is the public school. Your church divides; the schools combine. Your private schools separate according to wealth or religion; our public schools mix rich and poor, Jew and Gentile, Catholic and Protestant. The public school is the one genuine mixer."

DESTINY PROPHESIED IN OUR LIVES.

A Lecture Delivered by Mrs. H. P. Russegue, at Springfield, Mass.

The poet, the philosopher, the preacher, the teacher, has pointed our thought to this truth, that we are thinking beings, that there is a destiny prophesied in our lives, and we ask, What is that destiny?

We are conscious beings, each one bearing the impress of the law which is expressed through him that tells us what that life implies. That law is the foundation upon which all life rests, upon which all growth depends, and upon which the advancement of races must reply for all time to come. Man is by nature a religious being, because he is a progressive being. He is by nature aspiring, hence everywhere in life we see the ultimates of character defining themselves in so many directions, unfolding all the possibilities of the intellectual powers of man, and we are beholding not only this wonderful evolution, but we are marking the degrees that have left their eras in the history of human life.

In the thoughts of the age we can recognize the civilization of races. We behold how advanced man is in art, in science, in philosophy, in wisdom, in every phase of human progress, by the records he leaves in his work, and we recognize at the same time how much more glorified, how much more beautiful God is to his perception, when we see the march that his religious nature has made. He is unfolding this cognition of divinity, in his recognition of his whole goodness that applies to life. We cannot perceive the goodness of a divine life beyond the outlines of our own experience, that cannot, and does not, appeal to our consciousness, and awaken within us that which is highest and best. We see in the universe so much that we are wont to criticise, but we must always remember that we are criticising that which we believe is beneath us, and aspiring to that which we believe is superior to us. We are reaching from the finite to the infinite. We are growing from the less to the greater. We are marching out to the fulfilling of the law that phophesies the Trinity for us.

Emerson so truly spoke when he affirmed, "That he who knows Heaven best is he who sees most of heaven in life. He who knows what heaven implies best is he who discovers unto himself the best good, the highest truth, the advanced attributes of human intelligence.

It is easy for us to draw the line between human and divine life, because we call that which is best divine, that which is less we call human, forgetful that there is nothing outside of us which we aspire to that has not its counterpart within us. It reflects that which is the germ of truth in our lives. Thus, if we behold something good, and reach out our hands to procure it, we have found the need in our own lives for that good. If we see a principle that is entertained by another man or woman, by any person superior to our standard of judgment, to our capacity, and aspire to that goodness, aspire to that superiority, we have found the reflex of that condition in ourselves, and we are striving to blend the good in our lives with that divinity that we discover in the lives of others.

Thus the religions of the universe have blended their influences. They have grown larger. They have recognized a larger goodness. They have discovered a grander truth. They are learning a larger life. They are expanding in their sweetness, beauty and usefulness to the world. The religions of the world have been marked on the mile-stones of time by their uses, by their application to human necessity. Zoroaster, who recognized in Persia the wondrous beauty and goodness of a monotheistic God, discovered the whole universe embodied in that Deity. He gave his followers the beauty that accrued from his own soul, from his own spirituality, and they carried it down into Turkey, and there it became perverted by the Jews. It was misdirected, and it was opening within channels through which the human mind was led to reach upward to that which was best and truest to the understanding. Thus that monotheistic god reverted to the triune life, but this is a relic which belongs to the religions of the long ago; to the religion of Pan; to the religion of the materialists.

We find that nature affirms the trinity that manifests itself in everything, but in that which is brought to the three material planes, we find the reflex of man's opinion, of man's judgment, of man's perception, of man's consciousness of what God implies to him, of that which appeals to his intelligence, and how it appeals to him, he gives out to the world about him.

Zoroaster in his teachings gave to the world the idea that there was over the universe one being, supreme in power, supreme in will, supreme in majesty, supreme in the great forces of the universe; but it has been directed in so many channels, that we have drawn the line between these conditions, between the material and the spiritual, until today the most of the religious world believe that the natural world is not the spiritual world, and natural life is not the spiritual life.

There is not and cannot be anything unnatural in the spirituality of man. There is nothing unnatural in divinity. It is superior, it is supreme, it is all-pervading, it is all-uplifting, it is all-aspiring, it is evolving its wonderful potencies until the world is richer for the better understanding of them; but there is in this life such a consciousness of the spiritual presence of the infinite, that at last there is gleaned from that divinity that overspreads our lives, that inheres our natures, that underlies our universe, that is everywhere about us, that we are breathing it into our souls and bodies into our lives. Into everything its life, its being, its force, its law, that at last we are coming to the cognition of the fact, that there is no separation between the kingdom of God and the kingdom of man. There is no line of separation. He is here, his soul is in our souls, his life is in our lives, his love dominates our being, as it does his universe, and we cannot extract it from ourselves. We cannot throw it away. We cannot confine it to any kingdom, and call it the kingdom of God, and find elsewhere a kingdom where he is not.

The spiritual life that is everywhere about us is the religious life of man. It is that which is uplifting, which is exalting man. It is not only uplifting him in the thought of a divine life, but it is uplifting him in morality, in humanity, in a general outgrowth of the best qualities of human intelligence. There is greater consciousness of the Deific life to-day than has ever existed before, and how do we know it? Because we behold its manifestations everywhere about us. There is no condition of life so low but that the religion of man, the spiritual perception of man, is reaching down to help to attain to a higher level of perfection. There is no wall so great but that the spiritual knowledge of humanity is peering into the mysteries that have induced such conditions, and is trying to elevate them to a higher and better expression.

The religion of Buddha was the religion of self-abnegation, it was the religion of selfishness, the religion of personality, the religion of an inherent divinity believed to have been confined to the one life. It was that which taught humiliation, prostration of the less before the greater, the humility which reflected the littleness of man, and not the condition which lowered his worthiness, and which made him look upon nature as unworthy to the good which surrounded him. On the contrary, to-day, the spiritual religion of the land is so great, its mind is broader, its need is as tangible, is as necessary. Its hunger establishes the call that is going out and out to a higher truth for its growth. Thus, if we are thinkers, if we are thnking men and women, if we are progressive, if we are enlarging the possibilities of our minds, the only way that we can discover the uses of this process of development is in appropriating its good to our every-day wants, to every-day living.

The Christian church has performed the great good of elevating woman to a higher standard. It has accomplished so much by putting up as the haven of rest the Mother-Mary! It has impersonated the purity and sweetness and source of spirituality largely embodied in the dominion of nature. Much has been accomplished in this wise. It has equalized the rights, the character; it has equalized the intellect; it has given to each that which is best needed, until to-day woman stands equal to man before the world. Her intellect is as great; her perceptions as clear, her intelligence as active, her morality as pure, her intellectual propensities as forcible as those of men.

Education has become general, and through it all we perceive a larger religious growth, a sweeter religious influence, a higher religious power, a greater good shining out through the world, because all are bound to the empowering spirit of the Father, God. Thus, then, do we see the march truth has made up the heights of the past to the present, and we behold the prophecy it outlines for the future, until we know religion has taken the majesty of God, has taken away the personality, and made the universality of his spirit the divine potency of all life.

To-day, evil has grown less. Scarce any man, or any people, believes in the personality of evil. They no longer encompass it by disfiguring human beings; they no longer outline it by an object of terror; they no longer hold up the finger to poison the minds of childhood, or pervert the attention of the youth. They no longer picture to the child the object of terror.

Evil to-day is a disease, and the physician is truth, is knowledge, is wisdom, is God's goodness, God's love, a higher brotherly unity, a diviner living, a holier worship, that which is best in life. Thus religion has more attributes to-day than it has ever known before. It is more universal in its application, it has righted a wrong, it accepts without creed the best there is in every life. This is the spiritual growth of the race of men of every sect, of every belief.

Our own religion, our spiritual belief in a spiritual life, has accomplished much for the race. It has not confined itself to one sect; it has not formed a boundary of any one denomination. It belongs to the world, and why? Because it is spiritual, and it belongs to the spiritual nature of humanity. It belongs to the spiritual aspiration of human souls. It belongs to human intelligence. It is the call of every human need, and it answers that call because it is the voice of every human need, and it answers that call because it is the voice of divinity. It is to be found everywhere. It would by no means decry the good that any church or any sect has accomplished for the advancement of mankind, but I would proclaim this truth, that no one has found the limitation, no one has found the confines of its goodness. It is so great that the spiritual life of man is reaching out to-day for a higher communion, and is not satisfied with that which is confined to earth-life alone.

A hundred years ago the fact of a cable under the seas that should bring to you at your breakfast table the news of foreign countries, was an unheard of possibility, and man would have laughed to scorn such a proposition. To-day, you can commune with friends for good or for evil, for joy or for sorrow, and know all the events that are transpiring throughout all quarters of the globe, and are reported over the wire that connects one continent with the other. So your thoughts go out across mountains and seas, your spirit presents all conditions of material life, and you are sending out to the world your influence for a greater good. This is a RELIGION IN TRUTH, because it is bringing worlds nearer together. It is bringing the pulsations of human life so close that you are the tributaries through which the pulse of the divine spirit can be heard.

To-day the religion of the world has become so general that we answer the call of need from all over the earth. Worlds are being compassed by the light of the spiritual knowledge of man. You are no longer confined to the thought that you must only recognize that which you cannot see or hear, and which you cannot understand as divine. You have brought God home. You have enthroned him in your souls. You have made him all that you are, and you are seeing, living and thinking in his realm. This is the spiritual nature of man. It is enlarging, it is quickening, it is becoming more active, it is becoming truer, and you cannot look abroad upon the earth and find to-day the same narrowness of mind, the same confining influences that were a power that dwelt with man one hundred years ago.

What has accomplished this?

Simply the enlarging of the human thought. Simply because human thought has grasped life with its meanings more sincerely and more profoundly than ever before. What has been the largest influence conducive to the growth of this thought? The recognition of a spiritual force upon which thought could go out to the remotest points of earth.

Spirit communion has brought into realism, into the practical knowledge of our every-day lives (it makes no difference whether we believe or call ourselves Spiritualists or not) the spiritual attributes of the universe, and we are using them for the advancement of the race.

The spirit communion that to-day establishes the foundation upon which the modern Spiritual religion is resting is only one of the attributes of God, one of the attributes of divinity. You may pervert its uses, you may pollute its channels, you may pervert its messages, you may misconstrue its teachings, yet its truths are infinite, they are born of God. You cannot throw them aside. They will overcome every obstacle. They will march on the human journey of life until man has reached the higher and better conditions that belong to human nature.

Spirit communion has brought us nearer to the divine presence. It has made God to us paternal in his love. We do not look upon affliction as God's judgment because of our error; our cities are not razed to the ground by fire because God is angry. We are not punished because of the demoniacal influence that may generate in the spirit some power outside of this universe. We are taught by it to observe the reasons why we are pointed to the foundations of evil, until evil is blossoming into good, and how do we see this? In a thousand ways; yea, in many thousand ways.

We look into every city in the land, and what is the result of our observation. Disease prevails. Your streets are dirty. Your sewers are imperfect. Disease is generating in your midst.

Who punishes you?

Your ignorance. The moment your intelligence is applied to those conditions, you are hearing the voice of Almighty God speaking to the wants of man, because evil is fleeing away, and life is taking the place of disease. So it is with all the evils of morality and immorality, all those that belong to the diseased minds. You are looking for causes, and to-day religion has founded the home for the inebriate. Later on it will form a home for degenerates. It will find the causes for moral disease, and apply the healing balm of knowledge and spirituality, and man will rise out of his disease. These are the things that religion does. Religion cleans your cities, uplifts its morals, converts its lepers to active, useful citizens, and when religion commands and finds the cause, good is forthcoming.

This, friends, has been the great lesson that Spiritualism has taught for fifty years.

It has not been confined to the little home at Hydesville, but it has gone out and out until the whole earth has sent out its responsive call for more light, more knowledge, more spirituality, and the spirit from the other life, or the life just across the threshold, that is opening wider and wider to human souls, comes back freighted with the knowledge to help mankind to higher levels.

Spiritualism, pure and undefiled, is that religion which ennobles man. It makes use of everything that exists for his advancement in purity, in morality, in humanity, in a love for truth.

Spiritualism may have been misused, misapplied, misappropriated in life, but it still shines out its rays permeating the universe, pure and clear, and it will shine on and on and on forevermore. It cannot die, nor can its light be extinguished, because the spiritual nature of man is enlarging, quickening, and is living a higher spirituality, a higher goodness, a higher usefulness. Thus out of this comes a moral that every thinker must apply to himself.

Spiritualism has been disintegrating in its thoughts, in its power. It has entered every community. It has invaded every home. It has gone into every church. It has entered every school. It has found its way into almost every human heart, and why? Because the human soul is crying aloud: Am I to die, or am I to live? Are those whom I have cherished, and whom I have watched over, are they gone, are they dead? And the answers come down through time, and the spirit of God has answered the prayer of human hearts; and through the tiny rap it came, and through the voice of angels it has sung itself into the life of man. It has been written upon the walls of time. It has come to the mourner's heart. It has reached the needy ones, and it has always spoken, and always will speak of life, life eternal. It means that life which is larger, sweeter, better, truer, nobler, holier, diviner, more and more glorified, the more we know of it

On, Spiritualists, you may believe the door is open. The father or mother, sister or brother, and wife or husband, has passed through and spoken to you. But that may mean nothing to you any more than to see an automaton dancing upon your streets; but it means life beyond the grave, for it tells the story that man thinks, lives and speaks beyond the grave.

What does it mean? It means a larger, better, sweeter, and holier life, a more God-like life. It means bringing from without the heaven of which we have dreamed, to within the heaven that we can live. It means we have found the land where our hopes are verified, where our dreams come true. It means that every moment's time we have found the joys to which we aspire. We have found the spirit that answers the call from within, and we are again with our loved ones, and they are with us. They are not dead, they cannot die, for God has breathed into them his spirit, and they, and we, are living souls forever.

Civilization Hopping on One Foot.

Woman has not suffered alone through the denial to her of political equality. The human race is like a man who through infancy, youth and manhood, has compelled his right leg to bear the burden of his body, regarding the left merely as an ornamental appendage, to be swung up by supports, and tricked out with ribbons, lace and jewelry. The one limb would be nerveless and feeble, the other lame and overworked, and the progress of the whole body would be halting, uneven and slow. So it is with the body politic. With the enfranchisement of women there will come a nobler era. Then with interests that are identical, with a humanity common to both, the masculine head married to the feminine heart, wisdom supplemented with love, man and woman shall together work out the great problems of life, and a nobler and better civilization shall come to the waiting future.

L. O. HULL. REPLIES TO MR. McKINSTRY.

SHOW VS. PHENOMENA.

As an agnostic I am a searcher for truth. I would rather believe in immortality than in annihilation, and like many other agnostics I would have faith in the dogma of Spiritualism if I could witness such phenomena as are frequently described in Spiritualistic publications.

If Spiritualism is true, it is a matter of surprise to me that its phenomena are so rare. I have lived for many years one hundred miles from Chicago and within seven miles of cities containing more than twenty thousand inhabitants, without knowing of a medium in this region who pretends to show materialized spirits to the public gaze, or to get communications by slate-writing, trumpet speaking or in any other supernatural way.

Spiritualists should understand that the only way to convert disbelievers is to show them the phenomena which they tell us are of such frequent occurrence, and by foretelling what is going to occur instead of waiting until after the occurrence before telling us about the prophecy.

If spirits can tell us, as is so often alleged, about events occurring in distant places, then why, during the siege of Pekin, when all the civilized world was trembling in anxious suspense, did they not describe the true condition of affairs in that city? And why do they not prophecy results of matters in which we are all interested?

Apropos of this inquiry I copy as follows from the last number of the Review of Reviews, page 750:

"The only convincing proof that a given communication is the work of a spirit (whether a disembodied human being, or a sixth-rounder, or an elemental, or a sylph) must be found in clear evidence that no human intelligence could have been equal to produce it. The man of science at once suggests satisfactory tests. If any medium would answer twenty questions about the near future, stating such facts as the maximum temperature at Greenwich on three days a month ahead, the price of consols next settling day but four, the winner of the Derby and the Oaks and the St. Leger, the sex of the next child born in a royal family, and the number of claims made on a given insurance company in December next, there would be general conviction that some superhuman intelligence was at work. All these facts are beyond the present knowledge of any human being, and it is inconceivable that chance could produce correct answers to them all."

The Review of Reviews copies the above from an English journal. Instead of asking our Spiritualistic mediums to answer these questions I will propose two as a sufficient test:

First; Which party will be successful in the next presidential campaign, and what will be the number of electoral votes given for each candidate in each one of the United States?

Second: Will Peary be successful in his next attempt to reach the North Pole, and if successful at what date will he reach the pole?

Now if the spirits will give to these questions such answers as are verified by results I venture to affirm that Spiritualism will be given a greater boom than Luther's preaching gave to the Reformation.

Nelson, Ill. J. McKINSTRY.

Mr. McKinstry states, in effect, that if spirits can return and communicate, that they will foretell, through their mediums, a given number of future events. My experience has taught me that even in this material world, we rarely get things exactly as we want them; how much less, then, can we expect it in spiritual things, where conditions are subtle and little understood? I do not believe that spirits are infallible, nor do I believe them omniscient; that is an attribute of God, and we do not believe that when we leave the body we become as Gods, knowing everything.

We believe that spirits can and do return and communicate, even if they do not answer all the questions of mortals.

Mr. McKinstry never saw a spirit, notwithstanding the fact that there is a mass of evidence mountain high from reliable witnesses who have seen them, he will not believe in their existence, they answer his particular questions, and time proves their truth.

Now, let us apply this same rule to mortals. I never saw Mr. McKinstry, and notwithstanding the fact that thousands of reputable people testify that he lives, that they have seen him; I contend they are all mistaken, deluded, they they cannot deceive me, and state that if he really does exist, that he must prove it by answering the questions he himself propounds, and they must stand the test of time. Now, Mr. McKinstry cannot do this, therefore he does not exist. This is sophistry, pure and simple, but a practical application of his own argument with the character reversed. So unless we are wilfully committed against the fact, we must accept the evidence of others, just as we do in other things and admit that spirits as well as Mr. McKinstry do exist, even though neither may be able to answer the questions; in short, the existence of neither depends on the ability to answer them.

Stanley made wonderful discoveries in Africa, and we believe his statements, without demanding that all his experiences be reproduced for each of us. If the testimony of others is not to be believed then we might as well burn all our histories.

Victor Hugo says: "There is a time when the unknown reveals itself to the spirit of man, a sudden rent in the veil of darkness makes manifest theings hitherto unseen, and then close again on the mysteries within," and I sincerely hope that this time will come to Mr. McKinstry, but I will quote a few instances where it came to others, and it seems to me to prove the agency of spirits, according to his own standard: "The only convincing proof that a given communication is the work of a spirit must be found in clear evidence that no human intelligence could have been equal to produce it."

M. LaHarpe, a celebrated member of the French Academy, states that at the beginning of the French revolution of 1788 M. Cazotte, and a group of eminent persons were invited to dine with a member of the academy. "While they were at table he turned to Condorcet and informed him that he would poison himself in prison, to escape the executioner; told Chamfort he would open his veins by twenty-two incisions of a razor, and yet would die only some months afterward; told Vicq d'Azyr that he would cause his veins to be opened six times in one day in an attack of the gout, and would die that night; told Nicolai, Bailly, Malasherbes and Raucher that they would perish on the scaffold; told Duchess de Grammont that she and the king of France and many others in high rank woud be taken to the scaffold, and that he himself should be crushed. All this he signified would occur in less than six years. The prediction was literally fulfilled, everyone dying as predicted."

John P. Coles, a medium, published in New York Daily Times of Dec. 3, 1854, and more fully in Sunday Dispatch, Dec. 10, a prediction that the Czar of Russia would soon have serious difficulty with Mencikoff, and in just three months from the 29th of November Czar Nicholas would die. This was fulfilled, and his last act was the removal of Mencikoff.

Josephine says that when a girl she was told by Euphemia of her native isle: "You will be married soon; that union will not be happy. You will become a widow and then—then you will be queen of France. Some happy years will be yours, but you will die in a hospital amid civil commotions."

Wm. T. Stead and about a dozen others had a seance with Mrs. Burchell, a medium, in London, March 20, this year, when she foretold the terrible royal tragedy in Servia, when King Alexander, Queen Draga and others were slain three months later.

Mr. McKinstry says: "I am a searcher for truth and I would rather believe in immortality than annihilation." These are noble words, and I believe touch a responsive chord in every breast. The heart of man recoils at the ghastly thought of universal death, and Spiritualism alone offers the evidence of universal life, and inasmuch as mediumship is latent in most every human being, I think the best way to investigate is in the sacred home circle. The process of development is sometimes slow, but the phenomena you do get are genuine, which I am sorry to say is not often the case with mercenary, professional mediums. I blame no one for being skeptical and demanding proof; that is our privilege, our duty, as rational human beings; he who thinks with difficulty believes with alacrity. I was an agnostic myself until I was converted in the home circle, without a medium, and I sometimes think it could have been done in no other way. So I extend the right hand of fellowship to Mr. McKinstry and wsh him Godspeed in his search for truth.

Mormonism Bars Negroes From Entrance to Heaven.

Salt Lake City, Utah.—During the funeral services for Eugene Burns, one of the most prominent colored men in this state, Patriarch Miner, president of one of the quorums of the seventies of the Mormon church, walked up to the pulpit and, to the consternation of the mourners, began a highly sensational discourse. He declares that the dead man could not enter heaven. All that ever existed of him lay in the coffin before the altar. He further said that an Ethiopian could not reach the state of exaltation necessary to entrance into heaven. His soul was doomed before his birth.

The Rev. Mr. Brown (Baptist) replied to the remarks of the patriarch, referring to a quotation from the Bible to prove his contention that any man could be saved on the conditions of salvation laid down in the Scriptures.

Burns was a grandson of Abel, the body servant of Joseph Smith, prophet of the Mormon church. Abel was, according to Patriarch Miner, the only one of his race who ever succeeded in gaining entrance within the pearly gates. The reason he was so successful in accomplishing that feat, according to the patriarch, was his loyalty and service to Joseph the Prophet, and his belief that the Mormon religion was the only one.

The reason assigned by the patriarch for the non-admission of Ethiopians to the other side is the fact of their dusky skins. No man with black skin may enter the gates of heaven, he holds. "We believe," he says, "that there are three orders of spirits. In the first class are included the spirits that have never been incarnated. Having never been given a human body they are doomed to grope in darkness throughout eternity. There is no redemption for them. The second class includes the spirits which have been incarnated. They have been given the privilege of coming into the world and being redeemed through the plan of salvation that is open to us. That class is the whites. The third and last class of spirits is the class that fell. Because of their fall they are compelled to reside in bondage. They are given carnate bodies, but can never lift the yoke of bondage. That class of spirits includes the negroes. Abel, the body servant of the prophet, believed in Joseph Smith as a prophet and the latter-day dispensation. Hence he was exalted, and, so far as is known, he is the only one of his race who ever overcame the conditions of his bondage. For the colored race, however, there is an exalted state in the next world into which they may go. Provision has been made in the teachings of the Prophet Joseph, so that the negro may step up into that proliminary state of exaltation, and when he gets there a chance is given him to accept redemptions, according to the teachings of Joseph Smith.

The above shows up the priestcraft, what they practice and preach at this age of enlightenment, and time when the human race are allowed to think for themselves.

SEND THEM TO BED WITH A KISS.

O mothers, so weary, discouraged,
Worn out with the cares of the day,
You often grow cross and impatient,
Complain of the noise and the play;
For the day brings so many vexations,
So many things going amiss;
But, mothers, whatever may vex you,
Send the children to bed with a kiss!

The dear little feet wander often,
Perhaps, from the pathway of right;
The dear little hands find new mischief
To try you from morning till night;
But think of the desolate mothers
Who'd give all the world for your bliss,
And, as thanks for your infinite blessings,
Send the children to bed with a kiss!

For some day their noise will not vex you,
The silence will hurt you far more;
You will long for the sweet children voices,
For a sweet, childish face at the door.
And to press a child's face to your bosom,
You'd give all the world for just this;
For the comfort 'twill bring you in sorrow,
Send the children to bed with a kiss!

MEDIUMSHIP OF THE GODS

The Ancient Divinities and Their Work.

Superior souls of the universe in the past selected and elected one mind, one person in a spirit material body on earth who shall be a leader for all mankind on earth and themselves until further public notice or otherwise.

We can and should consider plans by ancient gods for mankind while spirits of mankind were invisible material bodies.

It appears as if ancient gods and mankind have been at war and the gods held fast to ideals. The Rig Veda teaches: "Assemble; speak together; let your minds be all of one accord, as ancient gods, unanimous, sit down to their appointed share. The place is common, common the assembly, common the mind, so be their thoughts united. A common purpose do I lay before you. One and the same be your resolve, and be your minds of one accord. United be the thoughts of all, that all may happily agree."

Under Peter, according to the New Testament, we find similar plans: "And the multitude of them were of one mind; neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common. Neither was there any among them that lacked; for as many as were possessors of land or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid down at the apostles' feet, and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need."

Think of the intent of the gods and apostles. The gods had the best plan. The apostles should have held houses and land in common. The influence of a leading mind in a city is wonderful.

Zeus.

Tuesday is set apart in honor of Zeus, an ancient god. If Christians and their God are recorded as a person and persons, all other people and their gods are equally worthy of mention both by type and in name. Zeus was the greatest in power of the national gods of the Greeks, and he was a favorite among Egyptians. Zeus was the son of Cronos and Rhea, brother of Poseidon and Hera, the latter was also his wife. He expelled his father and the older reign of the Titans; assumed the throne of the world, and successfully resisted the attacks of the giants and conspiracies of some other gods.

In the division of duties, after the dethronement of the Titans, Zeus gained the rule of the air and heaven, Hades of the infernal or internal regions, and Poseidon of the ocean; while the earth was left subject to the influence of all three, though Zeus was regarded as having the supremacy throughout all departments.

Crete and Dodona were the places where the honor or worship of Zeus was most cultivated. Zeus was chief of kings, gods and mankind; protector of kings, of law and order; the avenger of broken oaths and of other offenses, etc.

Cupid.

Cupid, one of the gods in ancient times, was powerful in bone and desire of one of a sex, for one or more of the other sex. Sometimes this god sends his spirits as if there were a fever heat in his subject and the subject, he or she as the case appears, lusts or loves.

Historians are in doubt about who were parents to Cupid, the god of lust, love and desire. Son of Vulcan and Venus, or of Mars and Venus, leaves his mother in both reports as Venus.

The symbols of Cupid are the bow, arrows, quiver and wings; sometimes a bandage covered the eyes. Cupid sometimes blinds people mentally to the faults of another for a time, then the blindess is removed and desire, love, honor and even respect passes away and are not in that presence again. A fat, healthy child is also used as a symbol of Cupid. His darts pierce the fish in the ocean, lake, river, yea, even the flies on the wall. Birds of the air, and the ancient gods of Egyptians and Greeks were hypnotic subjects to the power of Cupid and his spirits.

The immensity of space was his home, but, like his mother, Venus, he specially loved the flowery thickets of Cypress. Cupid was one of the early gods of the Pelasgians, since the worship of him at Parion on the Hellespont was connected with the Pelasgic religion of Samothrace, one of the gods. Cupid was a messenger of the gods to mankind. Cupid had a host of aids who were active at many places at once.

The history of the gods is an interesting study and their history is as correct and reliable as the histories of saints and the mediums of our time, perhaps the histories of the gods are more reliable because liars were not favorites with most of the gods.

CURES DEAFNESS AND CATARRH

ONLY ONE REMEDY IS CERTAIN AND THAT IS "ACTINA."

Deafness is the direct result, in 95 out of every hundred cases, of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The effect of catarrh is to fill up and clog the air passages with deposits, these in a short time stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Deafness ensues, and the hearing cannot be restored until these deposits are removed. It is impossible to reach the inner ear by probing or spraying, and that is the reason why the greatest aurists and physicians find their skill baffled. But science has discovered a way to reach these heretofore inaccessible portions of the head. This discovery has been named "Actina." It is a vapor current which, passing through the Eustachian tubes attacks and dissolves the clogging catarrhal deposits, so that they pass away, and at the same time loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, so that they immediately respond to the slightest sound vibration. Ringing noises in the head are also caused by catarrh, and are the premonitory signs of deafness. "Actina" never fails to cure this distressing affliction; we have known cases of years' standing to be cured in three weeks. "Actina" is also a certain specific for asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are either directly or indirectly caused by catarrh. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, also sent Free. Can Telepathy Explain?

Results of Psychical Research.

By Minot J. Savage.

Dr. Savage, in this book of 248 pages, discusses problems that have vexed intelligent minds probably to a greater extent than any others, saving those of the religious life. He states a great number of well-authenticated instances of spiritist revelation or communication. His discussion is frank and fearless, and merits the widest reading, for he deals with facts and experiences. Price, cloth, $1.00.

The Influence of the Zodiac Upon Human Life,

With Character Readings of Persons Born Upon the Cusp.

The principles found in this volume are both a science and a religion, for a better and a far happier humanity. It points to the planets as an index to the human character and liability to diseases; also gives the gems and colors suited to temperaments evolved under certain planets. But the author, ELEANOR KIRK, lays special stress upon the fundamental principle that "All maladies known to man can be entirely dominated, forever cast out, by those who realize that mind is the master and body the servant." ..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Maggie Waite writes: "Sunday, December 28, the Metropolitan Spiritualist Society held a very interesting meeting. Dr. McWilliams lectured, followed by a short talk by Mrs. Effie Moss; both speakers were listened to with the closest attention, followed by messages by the pastor, Mrs. Maggie Waite. Jan. 10, Dr. McWilliams lectures for this society again. Jan. 17, a testimonial will be tendered Wm. C. Ralston, the main guide of Mrs. Maggie Waite, it being the sixteenth anniversary of her mediumship and public work. Beside the regular service on that occasion a musical and literary entertainment will be given on the 28th. Dr. L. Freedman sang a solo and was given at its close an applause that showed the pleasure of the audience in listening to his fine baritone."

Charles Barnes, the excellent trumpet medium, has been at Bushton, Ill., holding seances. J. V. Thompson a prominent Spiritualist, writes, speaking favorably of the good work Mr. Barnes is doing. The tests he gave were excellent, and the answers to questions by the spirits were to the point and very suggestive.

Miss Mattie Woodbury writes from Bay City, Mich.: "I have closed my work here for the present, and find our people so kind that I regret to leave them. Mail addressed to me at Bath, Mich., will reach me the first week of January. I will go anywhere in the state to work, on reasonable terms."

Dr. Conger, the eminent author and physician, writes: "The Progressive Thinker grows better every issue. The Dec. 26 number is full of choice articles."

The well-known medium, Mrs. Isa Wilson Kaynor, writes from Grand Junction, Colo., under date of Dec. 24: "I expect to leave here for Texas Monday, to work for the Texas State Association, commencing at Bowie. I leave many friends here, and all expect me back in the spring. It seems wrong that Colorado does not form a state association under the N. S. A. Many small towns want help to organize, yet mediums and lecturers hold back."

Dr. J. H. Randall writes: "The Golden Rule Church is planning to have regular Sunday afternoon services, and to give any honest mediums a chance who may attend its meetings, for part of the time. I have been formally elected its pastor, but will continue my work for the North Side Sunday evenings at 1546 Milwaukee avenue."

D. A. Herrick is serving the Grand Rapids (Mich.) society for January, and will answer calls for funerals within reasonable distance.

B. F. Wallingford writes: "It is with pleasure I send for the renewal of my subscription to The Progressive Thinker. It comes like the morning dawn after a stormy night of darkness. May the good work go on until every one may know the truth."

Emily N. Oakden writes: "I am so glad to be able to renew my subscription again. I can hardly wait for the time to come for the next paper. That is such a beautiful poem, 'My Mother Over There.' It is worth the price of the paper to me."

Dr. H. E. Ballard, president of the Universal Occult Society, writes: "The Universal Occult Society, presided over by the Hon. R. Gilray, is still holding its meetings Sunday evenings at the parlors of Mrs. Grace Aitken, 253 Thirty-first street, near Michigan avenue. The lyceum under the leadership of Mr. Clarence Caldwell, is making decided progress, not only in number of children, but in developing their young brains through calisthenics, thereby building living monuments to herald the great and everlasting truths of our beautiful philosophy. The trustees of the society are still on the hunt for a permanent place of meeting, and as soon as such is obtained we shall put ourselves in shape to meet the demands of the seekers after truth. Bro. Gilray, with his beautiful thoughts, is always most interesting. Sunday evening, Dec. 20, Brother Gustafson made clear the law of psychometry. Last evening, Brother Marsh took up the suggested subject, Universal Life, and handled it in a masterly manner. The psychic reading from articles sent in following the Sunday lectures, by Mrs. Grace Aitken, are worth many miles of travel to listen to. The socials given by the Ladies' Auxiliary every other Saturday in Mrs. Aitken's parlors, are distinguished by many intellectual treats, aside from the sociability the good things we have to eat promotes."

Oscar A. Edgerly, the well-known trance speaker writes: "During the months of December and January I am serving the First Temple Spiritualist Society of Newport, Ky. I find the society composed of a very earnest band of workers, who are doing much for our cause in this vicinity. After the first of January the society has arranged to have me speak Sunday afternoons in Cincinnati, Ohio, and Sunday evenings at the Temple here in Newport, hoping in that way to reach a larger number of people. During the months of February and March I shall fill an engagement with the First Spiritualist Church of Elmira, N. Y. I shall be pleased to hear from camp associations desiring to employ speaker for the first four Sundays of July. Home address, 29 Public Square, Lima, Ohio."

D. D. Wait writes from Vermont: "I enclose a clipping from Boston Post of Dec. 21, which speaks volumes in showing the trend of Catholicism in America. The writer forgets to mention that Catholics murdered three of our presidents. He doesn't stop to contrast Catholic Spain, the Philippines, and all other countries where Catholicism is the predominant religion, with the United States. Even here we are little aware of the controlling influence in church and state. The shrewd politician counts his defeat as sure if he sounds a note of alarm against this hydra-headed monster, posing as man's only means of obtaining God's favor. The press, with a few honorable exceptions, are silent, for fear of losing patronage, and so the work of tightening the reins is allowed to go on while we allow ourselves to sleep on in fancied security. What prophet can foretell the time or picture the horrors of the conflict when Catholicism shall venture to measure arms with Liberalism. I have confidence in the powers of the spirit world, aided by the sturdy blows dealt by The Progressive Thinker, that they will not venture the rash experiment of foisting upon the people a religion whose course can be traced all the way down the ages by rivers of blood and persecution too revolting to repeat."

At the Mormon Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Utah, Elder Walker A. Wallace, who has just returned from a mission to Germany, said there was not much to tell of his work because he had been compelled to leave when just at the point of beginning his labors. A year ago there were 100 elders in Prussia alone; now there are less than half that number. The police, incited by the ministers, said Elder Wallace, are always after the Mormon missionaries. Elder Ephraim Jensen preached upon the necessity for pure hearts and clean thoughts. The Holy Ghost, he said, would not remain with a man or woman who was not pure in heart. "We need to pay more attention to the mind instead of paying so much attention to the body," he said. "It is easier to forsake wrong conduct than it is to control the mind." The speaker related an "experience" or vision which had come to him. He said he stood in spirit at a street corner and saw the people addicted to various kinds of sin surrounded by swarms of evil spirits. It was revealed to him that these spirits of intemperance and lust were attracted by the thoughts of those to whom they attached themselves and, in turn, incited their subjects to the commission of evil deeds.

H. E. Martin writes: "Conferences are doing a good work in Grand Rapids, Mich.; they furnish opportunity for young speakers to develop their worth and abilities. Feeling the need and value of conferences, Mrs. Emma Gibbs organized conference meetings in Page's hall over a year ago. The society has grown so that its meetings are large and interesting. Many local talent take part. Miss Gibbs is already a good speaker. She has organized a Ladies' Aid Society, called the Willing Workers. The meetings give mediums opportunities to practice and develop for public work. Miss Gibbs' pleasant and sociable manners have a great bearing in bringing strangers into her society, thus enlarging her spiritual work. If more were like her, there would be more harmony in the Spiritualists' ranks."

J. M. White writes from Kansas City, Mo.: "The materializing seances now being given by Mr. W. W. Aber at his home at 3422 East Tenth street, are attracting a great deal of attention. All that come recognize their departed ones, and many hearts are being made glad by the work being done by his guides. The intellectual circles are very strong in scientific demonstrations and especially in form demonstrations. At one of the seances for intellectual work not long ago, Col. R. G. Ingersoll, Gen. U. S. Grant and the late President McKinley manifested. Those who came to scoff have been completely overcome with the results they have received. One lady not long ago came to make fun, but when she was called to the cabinet and her loved ones from spirit life met her, she broke completely down, and from mocking she was moved to tears. A personal friend of the writer, who was last heard from en route to Siberia as a missionary some ten years ago, materialized here and dictated a message to be sent to his mother near Fort Scott, Kansas."

John Beyer writes from Sterling, Kansas: "You must not think us dead or asleep because we have not written for so long. Our society is prospering nicely. We have some very good home talent developing rapidly, and at the same time we had with us in November, Mrs. Bartel, and her work gave very good satisfaction. We also had Mrs. Bledso and Mrs. Wagner and their work is always appreciated. We had last week Rev. C. H. Cook with his stereopticon views, which was well received. He added to his selection of spirit pictures four from this place, two from Dr. Wm. Scheth, and two of ours which were obtained one year ago by the Bangs Sisters. I wish to state that Rev. C. H. Cook is a very conscientious man, and would not show any pictures purporting to be spirit pictures unless he can have the legal documents with him, stating how they were obtained, and acknowledged before a notary public."

Now is the time to awaken interest in your members who have become careless, and to add new ones to your society. Dr. J. O. M. Hewitt, 533 West Madison street, Chicago, is one of our ablest speakers, and can be recommended to any society that needs his services. The Doctor has served as pastor of the Church of the Spirit Communion for the past two years, and his lectures have always been well received. If you are in need of a good lecturer, write for terms at the above address.

Charles J. Barnes, the well-known trumpet and physical medium, is now visiting his sister, Mrs. Hamilton Gill, at her residence, 522 West Monroe street. While in the city Mr. Barnes will assist Mrs. Gill in her usual Sunday and Thursday night meetings. These circles are especially interesting to skeptics and investigators, as several strangers recently attending same received some remarkable tests. Mr. Barnes leaves the city January 10, to fill an engagement at Warsaw, Ind.

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "Dr. Geo. B. Warne will lecture for the Hyde Park Occult Society, on January 10. Regular Sunday evening service at 7:45 sharp, at 323 East 55th street. Everyone knows what the Doctor can give, and it is just what we all need. Come and hear him."

Harry J. Moore lectured last Sunday at Hayesville, Iowa. Next Sunday he lectures at Oskaloosa.

M. C. Matthews writes from Pittsburg, Pa.: "It is just two months since we dedicated our church. Rev. B. F. Austin, of Canada, officiated during the month of November. His lectures were interesting and instructive to a degree that made us stronger in our stand for the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism. So well did Brother Austin do his work that he gained the hearts of the people, leading many to wish that he could remain as settled pastor. Brother F. Corden White was with us, assisting in the work with Brother Austin during November. He gave satisfactory evidence of the continuity of life to many people. His services in November were donated as his subscription to help pay for our church. For December he was engaged as our test medium, giving messages which were recognized and afforded consolation to all who received them. The speakers for the month of December were Mrs. C. L. Stevens and Richard F. Tischer, alternating in the Sunday services. Mrs. Stevens, wife of our worthy president, evidences a high order of spiritual unfoldment. Her lectures are along the line of constructive Spiritualism. Mr. R. F. Tischer also has given his time and talent freely in the interest of our church. Brother Tischer is an earnest worker in the cause of Spiritualism. He has been a grand help to our society here. He is young, and from present appearances the future has something good and bright for him. It is with a degree of sorrow we have to inform you that we have had two of our old and earnest workers pass into the spirit world. Bro. John H. Knight, ex-secretary of our society, passed out from exhaustion on Dec. 14, 1903. May his soul enjoy that peace and happiness in his spirit home that it anticipated and prepared for in this sphere of life, is our earnest wish. Mrs. Belle Gorden passed to the spirit world, Dec. 22, 1903. She was a member of the board, also of the Ladies' Aid Society of our church. For January, 1904, we will have the pleasure of listening to the truth as it may be given from one of the giant minds in our line of science and philosophy. Prof. W. M. Lockwood will be with us and no doubt will sweep away some of the cobwebs of the superstition of the past, and give us something for our foundation of knowledge and belief, nothing less than the great Omnipotent Order of Nature in all its corelated energies and formative principles. The Ladies' Aid Society will give an afternoon lunch and oyster supper on New Year's eve. We will also hold watch night services the same evening. We do not think there will be any one present with a long, sober face, hunting for something to which he can make resolutions that cannot be kept. We will have bright, happy and joyous faces here to greet our friends when they come. Our Ladies' Aid is a great help to our society, not only financially but socially. Under the present management, Mrs. Ahl as president, and Mrs. M. A. Matthews as treasurer, and a number of lady members equally willing and earnest to help with the work, will make the social entertainments a success. Mother Irwin is still with us, although not serving us in caring for the building, the work being too much for her present health. She is faithful in her attendance at the meetings, helping as much as she can."

Speaking of The Great Psychological Crime, Frank T. Ripley says: "I do not believe that when a medium is honest and true, that a spirit can make them do wrong, or injure them in any way. To those who desire good, goodness can only come. Always pray to the higher intelligences, and all honest mediums will be protected."

G. Hamilton Brooks writes: "Dr. Juliet H. Severance, who has the courage of her convictions, and a creater of public opinion, will lecture for the Englewood Spiritual Union, at Hopkins' Hall, 528 West 63rd street, Sunday evening, January 10. Her subject will interest the many readers of The Progressive Thinker—'Is Mediumship a Psychological Crime?' We bespeak for Dr. Severance a crowded temple. This is an opportunity to hear a talented speaker, who has had years of experience, and has the knowledge that many are seeking."

Georgia Gladys Cooley writes from Denver, Colo.: "Though in the land of sunshine, and breathing the purest mountain air, my thoughts at this moment turn toward my friends in colder climes, especially the dear old Progressive Thinker, which, in spite of blizzards and wrecks, is now in my hand. After a busy day it is indeed a pleasure to read this dear friend, and see what other workers and loved ones are doing. I fancy I see the happy faces and outstretched hands of the good sisters and brothers at the various bazaars, and am happy to read of such glowing accounts of the same as reported in the General Survey column. A happy and prosperous New Year to one and all, and a long, long life to the dear old Progressive Thinker."

BUFFALO MASS-MEETING.

The officers of the New York State Association of Spiritualists have arranged for the holding of a state mass-meeting at Spiritual Temple, corner Jersey and Prospect streets, in the city of Buffalo, on the 1th, 16th and 17th of January.

Speakers and mediums engaged are F. Corden White, the well-known test medium of Lily Dale; Rev. B. F. Austin, Editor W. H. Bach, Lyman C. Howe, Tillie U. Reynolds, H. W. Richardson and others.

All Buffalo societies are invited to join in this meeting and many leading Spiritualists from nearby towns are expected to be present and participate. A good musical program will be provided and a grand meeting is expected.

SPIRIT THOMAS PAINE.

To the Editor:—At the conclusion of your article on the "Materialization of Thomas Paine," in the issue of Dec. 5, you said you would wait with anxiety my further report. The appointment for a second appearance had to be deferred at my request. It was renewed at the seance on Dec. 7, when I received a written message, saying: "Thos. Paine will give his address Friday night." Presently there came another message as follows:

"I will report Paine Friday night. W. B. Lord."

Mr. Lord and I worked together as stenographers for many years, in both houses of Congress, and as partners in New York City. Our sign in Nassau street was "Burr and Lord, Shorthand Writers." Mr. Lord died in December, 1884.

At the close of the next seance, Dec. 9, I asked George Christy, the spirit guide, how Mr. Lord was to perform the task of reporting Paine. I had expected to do it myself He said: "He will do it in the cabinet—will write it out in longhand for The Progressive Thinker."

At the seance on Friday, Dec. 11, I was selected by George Christy to sit beside Mr. Keeler in front of the cabinet for materialization and spirit voices. Presently Paine's face and form appeared. It was the same as before, about 5 feet 9 inches in height. He had a ruffled or fluffy shirt bosom, and those who came up close described the face as resembling his portrait painted by Romney and engraved by Sharp. The nose was prominent and aquiline, the chin protuberant, the forehead high and the hair wavy. Unfortunately I could not see it well, as the face was above and back of my head; nor even at close view would I be able to make out the distinct features with my failing eyesight in the dim light.

Paine could utter but a few words while visible, but he said he would presently speak through the trumpet, and in a few moments he did so. It was the same deep-toned voice as before, and he spoke slowly, with frequent pauses, at a rate of not more than sixty words a minute. Speaking through a trumpet makes articulation indistinct. Neither Mr. Keeler nor I could catch every word.

A large paper tablet had been placed on the little table in the cabinet on which the spirit of Mr. Lord was to write out the words spoken. After the speech was ended other voices came and told us that a written report had been made. George Christy said: "There was a fellow here writing a report for Mr. Burr."

Just at the close of the seance a hand came over holding the folded leaves of the report for me to take. I failed to grasp the papers and they fell to the floor. The light was turned on and Mr. Keim read aloud the writing. So far as Mr. Keeler and I could remember it was a verbatim report of the words spoken by the spirit of Thomas Paine. The handwriting is graceful, and reads as follows:

"Good evening, fellow citizens. I am Thomas Paine—passed to spirit life in New York, 1809. I am glad to come here and, by my own words, refute the charges that I changed my views on religion.

"It is in very bad form for any person or set of persons to malign anyone while living, but I find no words in the human language adequate to express my contempt for the body of Christians who have kept alive to this day the lie against a friend and brother whom they consigned to oblivion in the grave and the fires of torture nearly 100 years ago.

"I passed to that great beyond without knowledge, but in the nope that I would find an immortal world, and a God of peace in place of the revengeful spirit the Christian world had ordained to reign in the realms of glory. I find a life continued, but that it is everlasting I cannot even now say. And the same eternal God that reigned in all nature about us on earth reigns supreme in this supernal world."

WM. HENRY BURR.

Spiritualism in Grand Rapids, Mich.

A real live conference meeting in the northern suburbs of the city is one of the attractions for the thinking people and Spiritualists of Grand Rapids. It is over one year of age; was organized and is conducted by my father and myself, but owes its thriving existence to the demands of the people for truth and progress, and to our staunch and loyal friends this side of the veil and beyond. To the latter it owes its organization. Our platform is broad. Topics of the times are discussed. We cross swords in friendly combat, and grow wiser in the fray. We differ, but harmony and eagerness for truth prevails. Our spiritual avoirdupois is weighed and measured, and like the farmer who turns his peaches from one basket to another that they may thereby fill the measure, so our spiritual baskets grow full by the reweighing and measuring of our spiritual status.

Another feast, spread in a little different fashion, but none the less effectual, is placed before downtown audiences at Lincoln Hall, by the Grand Rapids Spiritualist Association. During the months of October and November, Mrs. Cora A. Morrell, of whom the public is sure to know more, dispensed the truths of the spiritual philosophy in a masterly way. Her lectures sparkled with gems, whose lustre will not grow dim in a day, but will live in our lives, and shed their radiance into the world.

She is followed for the months of December and January, by our good brother Mr. D. A. Herrick, who is too well known by the Spiritualistic public to need an introduction or comments from my pen. However he is striving to unfurl the banner of Spiritualism before the world, drawing the lives of his hearers upward—even to the hilltops.

Our Mrs. Coffman is at present sojourning in Grand Rapids, but is soon I believe, to leave us, and again take up the spiritual mallet to proclaim her truth to the world. Sunshine goes with her, and so our supply diminishes with her departure. With greetings of the season to The Progressive Thinker and its friends.

Women Can Save the World.

In a remarkable sermon Dr. Samuel Ringgold, the aged pastor of St. John's Episcopal Church of Knoxville, Tenn., declared that the salvation of the world would have to come through the suffrage of women. In no other way, he said, could he see how the world is to reach the condition of spiritual welfare but by the efforts of women through their ballots and through the influence which they can exert over others. Dr. Ringgold is nearly 80 years old, and is the rector of one of the largest and most fashionable churches in Knoxville—Cincinnati Enquirer.

FROM THE N. S. A. HOME OFFICE.

The holiday season may have had much to do with the dearth of news at these headquarters, as nothing of consequence to the public has of late transpired; of course the usual routine of office business has gone on, and our missionaries have kept themselves busy, but we have nothing further to chronicle at the present time.

The contributions to our Mediums' Relief Fund have been very small, and it looks as if the fund will be largely depleted ere many months unless further additions are made to it. The number of mediums formerly reported are still annually pensioned; we have given temporary aid to several, one case being that of a worthy, veteran medium, now of New Jersey, who will receive a monthly payment during the winter; after that she hopes to be able to live without such aid. Before these lines reach the eyes of your readers I think Mrs. Geo. F. Perkins, now of California, the worthy and sorely tried veteran medium, whose health is of the very worst, will be placed upon our permanent pay roll, as long as the funds hold out. Is not this a glorious work? We trust that some of our good Spiritualists who have not before contributed to the fund, will emulate the example of a good brother in Arizona, and donate one dollar a month to the mediums' fund.

The Spiritual cause is not dying; we are hearing of its good work in many places; Indiana seems to be taking a new start, some new societies in that state are rising from the ashes of others, energy and zeal are displayed in the revival; steps are being taken for the formation of a state association in that district.

I have here to correct a mistake recently published by some of our papers. A few weeks ago a secular paper in this city published a statement that a Spiritualist Temple is soon to be erected in Washington, D. C., at the cost of one hundred thousand dollars; that the designs had been shown and so forth; such designs as the paper mentioned, were drawn up some years ago, but nothing whatever has been done, or is being done at present concerning the affair. We do not know from whom the papers got the unwarranted statement.

One of the prominent officers and members of the Theo Society, of this city, an auxiliary of the N. S. A., Isaac Sharpe, has just passed away; he was formerly governor of Kansas, a free-soil advocate, an anti-slavery defender, and an all-round reformer, also a lawyer of marked ability. At the last convention of this association, Ex-Governor Sharpe appeared, though very ill at the time, to represent our cause, and to speak on an important question that agitated the assembly; his words were able and awakened much sympathy for the cause he espoused. Such workers are missed when they drop from the ranks, though we know they are not idle.

In regard to the last convention we wish to state that Mme. Florence Montague was duly elected a delegate by the California State Association, and that her credentials were forwarded to us, but as the lady could not be present an alternate was seated; a telegram from Mme. Montague, expressing greetings and good will was received at one of the evening entertainments and read to a large audience by President Barrett, as it came too late for the day session, there being three hours' difference in time between Washington and San Francisco, the telegram was probably not included in the notes of the convention made by the reporters of the spiritual papers. This explanation seems to be due the lady.

With cordial greetings, and a "Happy New Year" to all,

MARY T. LONGLEY,
N. S. A. Secretary.

FRAUDULENT MEDIUMS.

Reason Why They Are So Styled, and the Remedy.

Ever since the rappings were first heard at Hydesville, to the present day, a majority of our mediums have been denounced as frauds by the churches, the laity and by Spiritualists as well. What seems remarkable, no medium has escaped the charge. One investigator goes out into the world glad to say that So-and-So is an honest medium, and gave perfect satisfaction; another investigator goes out and denounces this same medium as a fraud, and exposes him in the papers.

It goes without saying that every effort has been made by our leading journals, speakers and representative leaders, to stamp out the unreliable element in the manifestations, but thus far in vain. The nefarious work prospers, and the frauds are multiplying, and if this state of affairs should continue a few years longer we may as well give up the cause and conclude there are no reliable mediums—none worthy the support of the best element of the people, though at the same time admitting the truth of intercommunion between the two worlds.

The reason why they seem fraudulent is because they give readings to fraudulent people—people who are liars and seeking dishonesty for selfish aggrandisement. Let them forever refuse to sit for such people, and in a very short time confidence will be restored in all who are honestly and truly devoting their forces for the enlightenment of the people of earth, and be recognized as little lower than the angel friends in the spirit world.

The Remedy.

When a person applies for a sitting, let the medium give a psychometric reading of that person before a reading is undertaken. By cultivating this faculty, and having a little patience they will soon become masters of the situation, and the right channel will be found in which the truth will be sustained instead of a lie as in the case so often now. Let the guides of the medium investigate the character of the investigators, and learn their purposes in coming for a sitting. If they are after information which will enable them to defraud a fellow-mortal, to interfere in affairs not for the good of spiritual growth and soul-building, don't sit for them; send them away with a kindly word and tell them to first fit themselves to receive a message from the spirit world. This course will have a great influence. It will enable people who have not heretofore known the truth about honest mediumship to learn it, and it will help them to get in touch with a higher principle of life, draw to themselves a band of spirits who are not liars and frauds. No matter about the money which the medium missed and perhaps needed, better starve the medium a little while than the truth forever, and money coming from such a source with its attending influences is worse than none.

Here in El Paso this plan has been demonstrated beyond question. The plan is the result of close observation of a life-long Spiritualist, and a reliable medium, one who has been years in the work and has been denounced along with scores of other honest mediums by this dishonest army of investigators, but since acting under the direction of this nobleman in spiritual work, not a single failure has been known; not a single investigator has cried fraud, but to the contrary and from a pecuniary standpoint he has succeeded.

This medium calls on his guides to, in silence, give a careful reading as soon as the one wanting a sitting approaches, and when they discover that the purposes are fraudulent and dishonest, that they are surrounded by a band of undeveloped and lying spirits, they drop a curtain between the sitter and him, and under no circumstances does he sit for them, but does not say he cannot, but will not, and then gives advice and directions for preparing themselves for a message from that summerland where we can all obtain spiritual knowledge and learn the laws of higher living and grander truths.

It did not take long to develop this phase, and let us all pull for a cleaner field for the mediums to labor in, and not denounce them for what they are not to blame. When a medium is entranced and under control of his guides, and they, like the medium, anxious to give the sitter a message, give way to the band of spirits the sitter brings with him, and his purpose being fraud, what else could be expected.

Let all join hands in demanding honest sitters, and support the mediums in every way until they have developed this safeguard, and onward will be the march to progressive Spiritualism, encouraged mortals and greater happiness among all.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

From his earth-home in Canaan, Me., Dec. 24, 1903, Levi W. Bragg, aged about sixty-six years, passed to Spirit Life. Mr. Bragg had been in poor health for about one year prior to his transition, yet his departure came unexpectedly at the last, as he had seemed somebetter for a few days previous. Suddenly, and without warning, the Angel of Life called him, and he reached out his hands to clasp those of the dear ones gone before, then entered into the life of the soul. Seated in his easy chair, conversing pleasantly with the members of his home circle, neither he nor they knew the nearness of the change. The call was quickly given, and as quickly heeded.

Mr. Bragg has been a life-long resident of Canaan and was well known to all of his fellow citizens. His was a kindly heart, full of sympathy for those whom he loved and generous to a fault in his efforts to do for them. He possessed a sunny, hopeful nature, and always felt that "something better was coming to-morrow. For him, that "something better" has indeed come. His Christmas festival was celebrated with his loved ones in the higher life, where none of the weaknesses of the body, no physical suffering and no more pain could fetter him. He strived to live and do the right, as he saw it, and fulfilled life's purposes as best he knew.

He had no doubts as to the future. The religion of Spiritualism had long been his solace, and upon it he relied implicitly. He has been a reader of the Banner of Light and Progressive Thinker for many years, and was a frequent visitor at Etna and Madison camp meetings in Maine. He is survived by his wife, a son, a daughter and grand-daughter, who have the deepest sympathy of all in this great sorrow. The funeral services were held at his late residence in Canaan, Sunday, Dec. 27, and were conducted by the writer, at the request of the deceased brother, made some months ago, when everyone, save the sick man himself, thought he would surely recover. Peace to the memory of the good man gone, and may loving angels cheer and bless his sorrowing family on earth.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Mrs. Caroline Pratt Spring passed to the higher life from her home at Pratt Hollow, N. Y., Dec. 22, aged nearly 95 years. She was for many years a firm Spiritualist, and a woman of strong individuality, possessed of a broad and progressive mind, and retained her mental faculties unimpaired until very near the last. She was esteemed and respected by all. Mrs. Spring was a sister of Morris Pratt, founder and donor of the Morris Pratt Institute, and was the last surviving member of the Pratt family. She was the oldest of several children, and Morris was the youngest, and her funeral was held at the old farm home just one year to a day from that of the brother, the day before Christmas. The writer traveled half across the state to officiate on that occasion, this funeral being the seventh one for the month of December conducted by myself.

Dunham officiated at the funeral, which was largely attended. He will be missed at the Grand Ledge camp, as he was one of the faithful attendants there. MRS. J. H. DUNHAM.

This is a new "Catechism" in the full sense of the word. There has as yet appeared in the world of liberal literature nothing like this most wonderful little book or reason. E. P. It deals with the questions of God, Immortality, the Creeds, the Clergy, the Church, Prayer, Religion, Jesus and his Teaching, the Growth of the Scriptures, and many other philosophical and ethical questions with the utmost candor, age and clearness. 188 pages. How a Woman Paid Her Debts.

I am out of debt, thanks to the Dish-washer business. In the past three months I have made $500,000 selling Dish-washer. I never saw anything sell so easily. Every family needs a Dish-washer and will buy one when shown how beautifully it will wash and dry the family dishes in two minutes. I sell from my own house. Each Dish-washer sold brings me many orders. The dishes are washed without wetting the hands. That is why ladies want the Dish-washer. I give my experience for the benefit of any one who may wish to make money easy. I buy my Dish-washers from the Mound City Dish-washer Co., St. Louis, Mo. Write them for particulars. They will start you in business in your own home. L. A. C.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

—OR—

DIAL PLANCHETTE.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

Prominent in Spiritualism.

We present here a list of prominent modern Spiritualists, nearly all of whom, and especially the scientific men, have arrived at their belief by careful and protracted experimental investigation. Can any reasonable and unprejudiced person, in the face of this testimony, deny that Spiritualism has a scientific basis?

Sir William Crookes, F. R. S. and Gold Medallist, discoverer of the Sodium Amalgam Process, inventor of the Radiometer, Otheoscope; Past President British Chemical Society, Gold Medallist French Academy of Sciences.

Professor Oliver J. Lodge, F. R. S., Dr. Sc., LL. B.; Prof. Physics, University College, London, author of "Modern Views of Electricity."

"I went in a state of scepticism as to the reality of Physical Phenomena produced without apparent contact, but this scepticism has been overcome by facts."

Professor W. F. Barrett, F. R. S. E., Professor of Experimental Physics and Dean of the Faculty of the Royal College of Sciences, Ireland

"The impressive fact of the phenomena is the intelligence behind them and the evidence of an unseen individuality as distinct as our own."

William Gregory, F. R. S., M. D., Professor of Chemistry in Edinburgh University, author "Outlines of Chemistry," "Animal Magnetism," etc.

Dr. Robert Chambers, F. R. S., LL. D., author of "Vestiges of Creation," "Cyclopedia of English Literature," etc.

"Already Spiritualism conducted as it usually is, has had a prodigious effect throughout America, and partly in the old world also, in redeeming multitudes from hardened atheism and materialism, proving to them, by the positive demonstration which their positive cast of mind requires, that there is another world, that there is a non-material form of humanity, and that many miraculous things which they had hitherto scoffed at are true." "I have for many years known that these phenomena are real, as distinguished from imposture; and when fully accepted, will revolutionize the whole frame of human opinion on many important matters."

Cromwell S. Varley, F. R. S., Consulting Electrician to Atlantic Telegraph Co., and to the Electric International Co.

Professor Herfert Mayo, F. R. S., M. D., Professor of Anatomy and Physiology, King's College, London.

"Twenty-five years ago, I was a hard-headed unbeliever. Spiritual phenomena, however, suddenly and quite unexpectedly, were soon after developed in my own family. This led me to inquire and to try numerous experiments in such a way as to preclude the possibility of trickery and self-deception. That the phenomena occur there is overwhelming evidence, and it is too late now to deny their existence."

Dr. John Elliotson, F. R. S., M. D., Professor of Medicine in London University, President of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society of London, author of the "Lumley Lectures on Diseases of the Heart," editor of "The Zoist," etc.

Dr. Lockhart Robertson, F. R. S., sometime editor British Journal of Mental Science.

"The writer (Dr. L. Robertson) can now no more doubt the physical manifestations of so-called Spiritualism than he would any other fact, as, for example, the fall of an apple to the ground, of which his senses informed him."

Earl of Crawford and Balcarres, F. R. S., Past President of the Royal Astronomical Society.

Alfred Russel Wallace, F. R. S., LL. D., D. C. L., the foremost living European naturalist.

"My position, therefore, is that the phenomena of Spiritualism in their entirety do not require further confirmation. They are proved, quite as well as any facts are proved in other sciences, and it is not denial or quibbling that can disprove any of them, but only fresh facts and accurate deductions from those facts."

Professor James Challis, F. R. S., Plumian Professor of Astronomy and Experimental Philosophy, Cambridge University.

"The testimony has been so abundant and consentaneous that either the facts must be admitted to be such as reported or the possibility of certifying facts by human testimony must be given up."

Professor A. De Morgan, late President of the Mathematical Society.

"The Spiritualists beyond a doubt are on the track that has led to all advancement in physical science. Their opponents are the representatives of those who have striven against progress."

Professor Butlerow, Professor of Chemistry in University of St. Petersburg.

Professor William Denton, the eminent lecturer on Geology, author of "Our Planet, its Past and Future," "Soul of Things," etc.

"Spiritualism is a belief in the communication of intelligence from the spirits of the departed, commonly obtained through a person of susceptibility, called a 'medium.'"

Professor Joseph Rodes Buchanan, M. D., Professor of Physiology, Electric Medical Institute of Cincinnati, author "Therapeutic Sarcognomy," "Manual of Psychometry," "Moral Education," etc., editor "Journal of Man."

Professor Elliott Coues, M. A., M. D., Ph. D., Professor of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy, Norwich University, etc., Professor of Biology in the Victorian Agricultural College, Member of the National Academy of Sciences, author of "Field Ornithology," "Air Fauna of Columbeana," etc.

"Will you have the opinion of such a person as I have described, who for about ten years has studied, watched and followed the phenomena of so-called Spiritualism, and who speaks from personal experiences with almost every one of them? Then let me tell you that I know that the alleged phenomena of Spiritualism are true, substantially, as alleged."

Professor G. J. Fechner, Professor of Physics and Natural Philosophy, Leipsic, author of "The Soul of Plants," "The Zendavesta," "The Things of the Future," "Elements of Psycho—Physics," "The Problem of the Soul," and "About the Life Hereafter."

Professor Robert Hare, Emeritus Professor of Chemistry in the University of Pennsylvania, Graduate of Yale College and Harvard University, Associate of the Smithsonian Institute, inventor of improvements in the Oxyhydrogen blow pipe, and member of various learned societies, author of "Spiritualism Scientifically Demonstrated."

"Far from abating my confidence in the inferences respecting the agencies of the spirits of deceased mortals, in the manifestations of which I have given an account in my work, I have had even more striking evidences of that agency than those given in the work in question."

Professor Alexander, Rio de Janiero; Professor Cassal, LL. D.; Professor H. Corson; Professor Edland, Sweden.

Professor Tomaso Ermacio; Professor Hoffman, Wurtzburg; Professor Kiddle, M. A., U. S. A.; Professor Ockhorowicz, Warsaw; Professor Perty, Berne; Professor Schriebner, Leipsic; Professor Armand Sabbatier, Dean of the Faculty of Sciences, France; Professor M. Seling, Polytecnic, Helsingfors.

Professor Tornebom, Sweden.

"Only those deny the phenomena of Spiritualism who have never examined them, but profound study alone can explain them."

Professor Edward Weber, Professor of Physics, Leipsic, and founder (with his brother) of the doctrine of the vibration of forces, author "Electro-Dynamic Measurement" (4 vols.). No scientific reputation stands higher in Germany than that of Weber.

Professor Wagner, Russia.

Professor J. C. F. Zollner, Professor of Physical Astronomy at the University of Leipsic, Member of the Royal Saxon Society of Sciences, Foreign Member of the Royal Astronomical Society of London, of the Imperial Academy of Natural Philosophers at Moscow, Honorary Member of the Physical Association, Frankfort, of the Scientific Society of Psychological Studies at Paris, etc., of the British National Association of Spiritualists, London.

"We have acquired proof of the existence of an invisible world which can enter into relations with humanity."

Prof. Broferio, Milan; Professor Margheiri, Naples.

Professor James H. Hyslop; Psychology, Ethics and Logic.

"I shall not remain by the spiritistic theory if a better one can be obtained to explain the phenomena. I advance it simply as a hypothesis that will explain the facts. . . . There is no other explanation but Spiritualism."

"Dr. Hodgson's allegations cannot be dismissed with a sneer; nor can any critic escape the responsibility of proving the suspicion of fraud which he may wish to entertain. What strikes the reader with amazement, if fraud of any kind is excluded from the account, is the astonishing character of the theories required to escape the conviction that the immortality of the soul has received a scientific demonstration."

Professor R. von Esenbech, President Royal Academy of Sciences, Germany.

Mrs. Catherine Crowe, author of 'Night Side of Nature."

Mrs. De Morgan, author "From Matter to Spirit."

L. Cahagnet, author of "The Celestial Telegraph."

Professor Mapes, U. S. A.; Professor Falcomer, Alexandria.

Dr. Richard Hodgson, M. A., LL. D., a prominent member of the British Society for Psychical Research, and Secretary of the American one.

Dr. Ashburner (one of the Queen's physicians), author of "Animal Magnetism and Spiritualism."

"I have myself so often witnessed spiritual manifestations that I could not, if I were inclined, put aside the evidences that have come before me."

Dr. Garth Wilkinson, M. D., M. R. C. S. E., F. R. G. S., author of "Human Science," "The Greater Origins and Issues of Life and Death," "Life of Swedenborg," etc.

Dr. Paul Gibier, Director of the Pasteur Institute, New York, Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, author "Spiritualism or Fakirism," "Psychism, Analysis of Things Existing," etc.

Dr. Paul Gibier, whose recent loss to science and Spiritualism is deeply to be regretted, contends, in his interesting 'Analysis of Things,' which has for its sub-title, 'An Essay upon the Science of the Future,' that the proof of man's possessing a consciousness which survives the change called death, has been already established by the phenomena of Spiritualism."

Dr. E. D. Babbitt, M. D., LL. D., author "Principles of Light and Color," "Human Culture and Cure," "Religion, as Revealed by the Material and Spiritual Universe," etc., Dean of the Eclectic College of Fine Forces, California.

"After two years' investigation of the fact and numerous seances, I have not the smallest doubt and have the strongest conviction that such materialization takes place, and that not the slightest attempt at trick or deception is fairly attributable to any one who assisted at Miss Cook's seances."

THE GOLDEN RULE.

It Is Defended as Just and Right.

To the Editor:—It should be made clear to the readers of The Progressive Thinker, embracing as they do, an army of honest investigators, that the essay in No. 731 of The Progressive Thinker, over the name of E. W. Baldwin, on the Golden Rule, is only representative of the muddle of materialistic thought concerning things spiritual, and in no sense in harmony with, or a part of, the divine philosophy of Spiritualism.

If only the spiritually illumined were readers of your journal, then this article referred to might well pass unnoticed. But considering the almost chaotic state of public thought on things spiritual makes it needful to occasionally mark the line dividing the spiritual from the material so plainly that the novice may be sure of his way.

The article under consideration declares that: "Were this principle, the Golden Rule, lived up to strictly, the world would soon become wreck and ruin." Asserts that: "After two thousand years of preaching no man has lived up to it." "The Golden Rule was born of priestcraft * * * and is by its very nature utterly and hopelessly impracticable. * * * Science never stoops so low as to use the term Golden Rule." 'This teacher, possibly means pseudo science!

"The Golden Rule is the shibboleth of the Christian theology. No other bait is more tempting." The evidence of the truth of this last assertion is scarce, almost, as hen's teeth, when sought for among people ruled by priestcraft.

"The Golden Rule stripped of its glitter is a pewter rule." Is an ignis fatuus and should, as soon as possible be buried with dead things of the dead past. Then, logically, should be entombed with it the fame and names of all the world's great epoch makers since human history's early dawn.

In so far as the spiritually enlightened are concerned it is not needful to go into a rehearsal of obligations we are under to recognize and obey the precepts of the rule that in our language is called Golden. Like all other great principles it is great in its simplicity. First, it demands our sincere consideration and obedience, because our origin is identical. We are from and of, one soul and spirit.

The terms, soul and spirit are not synonymous, and should never be used interchangeably. The spirit is the fine material body, the home of the soul here and now, and after transition.

Second the Rule or Law is binding on all because our basic rights and needs are identical. The rights of one are the rights of all. The conditions that affect the welfare of the individual affect for good or ill every member of the race. The things I do to my brother I do to myself. The life we live daily, supposed to affect self only, adds to or detracts from the welfare of the entire human family, just as a pebble cast into the sea is said to displace the waters of an ocean.

As the universe, including man is a microcosm, so the Law under consideration is limitless.

To close, I will only add, all true friends of the divine gospel of Spiritualism should unite daily in a petition that this last best gift from heavenly spheres be speedily delivered from its pseudo friends.

Paint Me as I Am.

"Paint me as I am," commanded sturdy Oliver Cromwell once upon a time, as the artist was about to omit the wart that protruded from his brow, and it so tickled the puffy brush wielder that he never ceased to wonder on the strange complexities that constituted such a nature.

Men of the Oliver Cromwell type are rare in this day. That is, especially as per qualities that make up shams and frauds; men, if you please, who have nothing more ennobling to parade than a superficial grace to make the public heed. With them the art of an empty blandishment means everything. But walk into the crowd of a thousand if you like, mingle with the throng as it comes and goes here in crowded Chicago, or in any other locality for that matter, and you find the outward man dominant and highly propagated.

It is by no means an omen of evil to always look one's best. What counts with most people is the appearance the man puts up. Is the banker, the merchant or the broker looking for a kind to fill a place of trust? The kind appears in many forms and representing many conditions of life. What does the banker, the merchant or the broker do? As the kind appears in the gilded office in turn, one by one, two critical eyes scan his outward self for the flaw that might represent a careless manner or a sloven pride. The appearance usually counts in the choosing, bet on that.

It would be ungracious to say that the banker, the merchant or the broker would see a rusty wart adhering assiduously to the brow of a kind who comes to be chosen and repel his industry by a prompt dismissal simply as a cause of that. Ah, no! Only the illustration speaks for itself.

It is refreshing to meet a man who can look through dirt and dust, through the signs of a siege of long suffering and want, to see the man who struggles, aspires, labors and is persistent in an effort to win life's daily bread. It is encouraging to meet a man who looks above and beyond outward conditions the catch the glimmer of a noble life, a worthy ambition.

Every kind is entitled to a chance. All men are created equal and are entitled to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." The Cromwellian idea is a good one, and a careful consideration of the precept contained therein might be more than ordinarily beneficial to all who think of him as a dominant character in the world's affairs.—William B. Norris, in Chicago Examiner.

THE HIGHEST POWER OF ALL.

There is a power that dwells within,
Responsive to my call;
'Tis fearless, deathless, free from sin—
The highest power of all.

This mighty power can conquer fate,
Whate'er may befall;
It soon disperses fear and hate—
The highest power of all.

It brings me happiness and peace,
And blessings great and small;
From pain and death it gives release—
The highest power of all.

When bright hopes fade and friendships die
And disappointments fall,
Trust in the never-failing "I"—
The highest power of all.

Here and Hereafter.

BY CHARLES DAWBARN.

Nature Plays Prestidigitateur.

Now we go back a little in order to study more closely the real game Nature is playing, of which her ball play was merely a phase. She is the grand prestidigitateur; apparently getting up her exhibition either for practice or her own sole amusement. Of course the whole may be but one of her lessons for some other class on some other speck in Cosmos. She keeps her little essentials carefully concealed, and seems to be trying how many changes she can make by moving them so quickly that even Intelligence can't see the process.

At first it seems little but a thimble and a pea game, only the pea never comes out twice alike. So far as we know it is merely dexterity and speed, for her corpuscles are themselves indestructible, and unchangeable. All she can do is to mix them up in ever-changing proportions.

The game looks very simple at first. Just a few units go into the thimble and come out a molecule. A very pretty trick, and very neatly done. She can put that molecule back and it comes out the original units. But with a bigger thimble to hold them, she collects more units and out pops a pea so large that it will do for a world. But long before that, and without any change in her units, she moves them faster and faster till suddenly the blended molecules come out of her thimble with a "will" to them.

That was a superb trick. There did not seem to be any "will" in sight when she covered them with her thimble, so we call that a "critical point," though really we don't know how she did it. We can imitate some of her movements, and work our pea under a thimble, but a "will" does not seem to come out. I know Professor Loeb thinks he has done the trick. With a few salts and the egg of a star-fish, he declares he has done it, but Nature laughs. He has just borrowed one of her thimbles. That was all. The "will" was already in the egg. Will is only another name for life. But, as with all conjurors, it is speed of movement that produces the desired effect, and every molecular combination seems to change its expression and its form when the combination moves with sufficient rapidity. It is at those changes that Science discovers her "critical points." Names are for the most part expressions of ignorance. They hide what we don't know.

We have seen that what was called "matter," suddenly evolved what is called "will," and thus became what is called "alive." But accretion went on, and is what is called "growth." But these changes will only bear just so much thimble-rigging speed before the pea disappears altogether. This is illustrated in the appearance and disappearance of organs such as sight and hearing. Here is deaf matter. Lift the thimble and it hears. Shake it up pretty sharply, say to 60,000 shakes in a second and that pea disappears. But that matter was also blind. Shake it a few millions of millions times and it sees, or thinks it does. A little more of the shake and that pea has gone too. A change has to come if you continue shaking. The new discoveries have been of more shakes. Radium will shake sores on to a man of science, and burn the hands off an inventor, or leave him blind. That is a point a man can't pass. But Nature can, with the greatest ease. She just continues to shake her units, till what we call "life" comes a little more to the front than ever before, and the man begins to hear without ears, and see without eyes. That was a "critical point" and Nature's game continues to depend entirely upon how fast she can make her pea balls travel. So at last that man compels us to acknowledge that he can see without eyes and hear without ears. I am not clever enough to say just how and when Nature does it, but I once cut from a newspaper a poem I did not read, and laid it in the lap of a lady, who at my request read aloud the third verse, although the poem was wrapped in twelve thicknesses of paper. This was what is called "clairvoyance" and was an excellent pea from that thimble. Of course it was the other side of a "critical point," and I was not surprised to find the old sense organs had gone to sleep, and new ones were at work in that rate of movement.

A most miserable attempt at a name was made, and the process was called "psychometry." But it was just as much a fact as any other of the thimble-rigging operations. Stand back of that "critical point" and you would bet your last penny with the thimble-rigger that there was no pea under that thimble. The beaten scientist was disgusted, and refused to play any more on that side that "critical point." But Nature enjoys the fun and keeps right on.

Once again we recall that she plays with nothing but the original three, in her hand. Just substance, energy and intelligence, although after passing the last critical point they are no longer bounded by any form we can recognize. When you are sensing without any sense form to do it with, something has happened. When "will" becomes a shooting star, and master of time and space, all but a dozen or two of scientists rush back shrieking that such thimble-rigging is outrageous, and somebody ought to stop it. But the game goes on all the same.

We have watched the thimble game, first, when the units became matter. Next, when that matter suddenly evolved "will." And thirdly, when the blended form appeared as Intelligence playing a new role; working without any special organs we could detect, though telling her tale through the old form, with which we were familiar. And we have discovered, or think we have, that the real difference consisted in the quickness of Nature's movements, for there were always, so far as we could see, the same unchanged units all through the game. But now comes the most startling display of prestidigitation we have so far witnessed.

Once again the thimble is lifted. It had had a man pea under it. We could swear to that, but behold, he has gone. At first it seems as if there were just a blank nothingness, whereupon the audience puts on crape, the clergy talk of hope, and the sexton tolls the bell. The man has gone. It is "good-bye," and the tears fall as the widow and the orphans walk home. But once again Nature laughs. It was merely another of her wonderful "critical points," for from the upturned thimble issues a form so refined that it is invisible to the normal eye. But by some less normal sense its lips are seen to move, and they hear it speak of happiness, joy, love and a glorious reunion. Nature's game is at last seen to mean the development of a manhood impossible amid any of her slower vibrations. Such was the birth and the lesson of "spirit return."

Blind Tom, the Great Medium.

Once the World's Wonder—"Blind Tom," Musical Prodigy, Still a Man of Mark—Lives Quietly at a Home in the Highlands with His Guardian—Thirty Years Ago He Was a Lyceum Attraction—Could Play Most Difficult Compositions After Once Hearing Them.

It is something more than thirty years since an uncouth colored lad known as Blind Tom, says the Chicago Chronicle, created a furore throughout the country by his wonderful skill as a piano player. He was totally uneducated and had never received lessons on the piano, yet he could play the most intricate compositions with absolute accuracy after having once heard them. People traveled miles to hear him play and theaters and concert halls were not always large enough to hold the crowds. This went on for years until it was a rare thing to find a person who had not heard him. "Tom" retired into private life about fifteen years ago.

About three years ago it was reported by the press of the country that this musical phenomenon had died suddenly in a New Jersey sanitarium from the result of an operation. A prominent New York newspaper devoted a column of space to the account and an interesting analysis of his brain by a New York physician was published. The newspaper reports were erroneous, of course, although the impression that he was dead was widespread.

As a matter of fact "Blind Tom" has never been ill a day in his life and is now enjoying an existence more full of comfort and happiness than falls to the lot of most mortals. Some time ago a gentleman interested in music had his attention called to the fact that this great negro pianist who delighted thousands of people a generation ago was still in the land of the living and opened negotiations at once with his guardians.

Still Retains His Talent.

At his home in a picturesque villa on the Shrewsbury river, near the Highlands, where he resides with his guardian, a descendant of the late General James N. Bethune, who owned him as a slave, the gentleman found "Blind Tom." At first he was inclined to be sceptical as to Tom's ability to render the beautiful musical compositions that electrified the public more than a score of years ago, but he found that the wonderful prodigy and freak of nature had retained his remarkable power of mimicry and rententive memory and in no way evidently were they impaired. He gave several compositions from such masters as Liszt and Gottschalk, with an interpretation as skillful as those pianists who have been technically educated. His accomplishments cover a wide range. Any one in the audience can play an air on the piano that Tom has never heard and this wizard of the keyboard will immediately repeat the same, almost perfectly. His touch is delicate, but firm, and his technique superb. He uses his fingers as Paderewski would use his. All the mysteries of the keyboard are his own, learned not by science, for he has never been taught, but divined by that sense which has mastery over him.

Despite his affliction Tom is always in a happy frame of mind and is very religious. He will only play sacred music on Sunday. He says the Lord's prayer and is fond of reciting passages from the scriptures. Tom can ony dimly distinguish objects. Years ago in Paris an operation was performed on his eyes, with only this measure of success. He has a habit of turning up his eyes when playing, as though divinely inspired. He likes to let the sunlight fall directly on his eyeballs.

As Simple as Ever.

When he talks to himself he will repeat a word or phrase several times, either to emphasize it or through pleasure in the sound, or else he is filling in his time until some other idea shall come in his mind. For instance, he went on this way for some time as he strolled up and down the veranda: "Wagner, Richard Wagner; yes, Mr. Richard Wagner He is dead. Dead. His last opera. His last opera. 'Parsifal,' 'Parsifal.' His last opera."

Of Slave Parentage.

When "Tom" was 8 years of age he was taken through this country and Europe and played in public to the wonder of all who heard him, and the stupefaction of pianists. He met Meyerbeer in Paris and he heard most of the celebrated musicians of the day. Of the later-day pianists Josef Hofmann afforded him the greatest pleasure. Paderewski's playing affected him so strongly that they had to take "Tom" aawy.

He has made fortunes for his guardians, who bought his slave mother, with the "blind boy" thrown in. There is much dignity, pathos and sweetness in the character of this wonderful prodigy, who is now more than 60 years old. His old mother is still alive, aged 85, and there is no reason why her gifted son, the only one of her twenty children known to fame, should not attain greater longevity.

He was born within a few miles of the city of Columbus, Ga. His parents were slaves, common field hands, of pure negro blood. "Tom's" fame as a pianist has gone the world over. He has performed in every city in the country, Canada, Mexico and Europe, where he played before the royal families.

In appearance he is an awkward, uncouth and ungainly looking man and looks more like an overgrown boy. He is a little over 5 feet 7 inches in height and weighs 240 pounds. His woolly hair is cut close to the head. He has a low forehead, flat nose, thick lips and heavy jaw and is, in fact, a perfect type of negro. He usually wears a black suit and a plain black bow tie.

"Blind Tom" showed his musical ability at the age of 2 years, when he used to sign songs. When he was 3 years old he heard the first piano and always stood outside his master's house listening to it when it was being played. One day he managed to get into the house, and, seating himself at the instrument, ran his fingers over the keys and very soon played the tunes that he heard others play.

This is a description of the man who has produced such beautiful and weird harmonies and who has rendered the compositions of the famous writers of music in such a manner that the composers themselves have been astounded.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as to Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo. Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "other-worldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Conditions of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BEYOND THE VAIL

A Sequel to "Rending the Vail."

The two volumes together as a record of practically obtained facts demonstrating the claims of Modern Spiritualism as to post mortal survival, are unique and overwhelming.

Every communication is from a full materialized spirit form, in good light, and either spoken audibly or written in full view by the form. There is not an automatic or trance message in the book.

It is illustrated by several engravings, the originals of which were drawn in the presence of the circle by a full form materialized spirit artist.

BEYOND THE VAIL is, as a rule, the experiences of spirits in both worlds—their own account of their lives on earth and their progress after death to their present condition of freedom from earth conditions. The narratives are intensely interesting, instructive and often highly dramatic.

Coincident with these are the profoundly philosophical comments of the controlling spirits of the seances. Prof. William Denton, Thomas Paine, Dr. W. H. Reed and others—covering, law, medicine, jurisprudence, theology and metaphysics. There are no books in existence of like character or of higher authority. Price, by mail, $1.75.

Free Moral Agency an Illusion.

The most vital problems of life are not yet solved. Man, born in ignorance, with vicious heredity and false environment, could not be otherwise than imperfect—a condition of humanity that gives color to the dogma of total depravity. Susceptible to strong emotions, powerful passions and innate selfishness and sensuality, he must necessarily act out his nature according to the impulse of his feelings, and in so doing he exhibits his true character, or rather, his existing character.

It will be necessary in this article, to outline the fundamental principles of human nature as manifested in human conduct, which the following brief analysis will disclose. The two primary elements that constitute the mental characteristics of human nature, are Sensation and Consciousness. Sensation is essentially the life, in esse—it is that in which we move and have our being—the mainspring of all our activities. Defined specifically, it is desire ever seeking satisfaction—the desire to live, to enjoy, to be happy.

Consciousness is that state of mind in which we are aware of our being, our feeling, thinking and acting, and of our conception of external things. It is the field of the intellect, and gives rise to knowledge, to reason and to demonstration. These two primary elements are inseparable. Sensation would be useless without consciousness and consciousness would have no value without sensation.

These two primary elements include and afford every interest in life. All interests are realized by action (human conduct) whose force is in sensation.

The desire to live, to enjoy, to be happy, gives rise to a concern in our well-being, and the love we feel for others, gives rise to a concern in their well-being.

Our well-being has its rise in the good; and our ill-being in the evil. The question of good and evil is one of morality; the good is moral—the evil is immoral. Agency is action. Since agency has its rise in sensation (feeling of some kind), there is moral agency and immoral agency whose rise is in the desire or feeling that gives rise to it. Morality is not subject to the will.

The question now is, Is agency free or compulsory? There can be no life without action. The question is not, Shall we act or not? but How shall we act? The act is a necessity, but the manner of the action is the all-absorbing question to consider.

Since all voluntary action has its rise in desire, and we do not will our desires, the character of the action is determined by that of the desire that gives rise to it. If the desire is to murder, the act prompted by it will be murder; if the desire is to aid one in distress, the act prompted by it will be a benevolent act; therefore, the character of act being determined by that of the desire; and the desire not being subject to the will, the character of the act is not subject to the will; and the dogma of free moral agency is an absurdity.

A few words will be necessary to explain the difference between liberty and freedom—the meaning of which is often confounded and used interchangeably. Liberty is unrestrained self-assertion in the pursuit of individual interests in so far as they do not interfere with the like interests of others. It has to do with desire—the impelling cause of action and is obedient thereto. There can be no independent action. Since action is an effort to satisfy desire, it must be dependent thereon. Neither can there be independent self-consciousness, since consciousness is dependent on sensation, and would be of no value without sensation.

Desire is self-existing, self-acting and self-determining. Liberty of action is determined by the good or what is felt to be good, by the actor, and has its rise in desire, but is conceived in consciousness. Liberty is concerned in the initiation of action; that is in the what to do.

Freedom has to do with the means of action, and is concerned in how to do. One confined in his cell is deprived of his liberty; but he can act so long, and in so far as he is free to act. He can sit or lie down, or do anything in regard to his comfort with the means at hand. In the custody of an officer on his way to jail, he can be dragged along, or he can walk; he will do that which is the least painful to him.

Before freedom can act a motive must be formed. Motive has its rise in desire. Here the will has its office, and deals with the means for the satisfaction of desire. The will is the combined action of several faculties. First, is the intent to do; second, the determination to persevere; third the devising and considering of means; and fourth, the choice of means, and their employment in the satisfaction of desire. It will be seen that neither freedom nor the will is brought into requisition until the motive is conceived; and that motive has its rise in desire.

But there is a subject whose importance is indispensable in this consideration, namely, Feeling gives rise to the sense of reality in what is felt. The feeling is real; but we mistake the reality of it for the consciousness of it, and accept that as a finality and act upon it. Feelings are aroused into consciousness by the stimulus of facts and events (environments). For instance, one being absent, is informed by a telegram of the murder of his child. His love for the child was not at that moment in his consciousness, but was suddenly aroused. The telegram was in the usual form, and he does not doubt the information; and the feeling brings to him the sense of reality in what he feels; that is, the murder of his child. But it makes no difference whether the telegram was true or false, the feeling aroused is the same; hence, we see the sense of reality is no proof of reality. But man being born in ignorance and surrounded by error, the chances are in the vast majority of cases, the feelings that give rise to the sense of reality, are founded on error.

We act as we think, and we think as we feel; but not being conscious of the fact, that our feelings give rise to the sense of reality; and taking the consciousness of it for the reality, we accept that sense as reality. We feel the reality, or what we take to be the reality, but conceive the consciousness of it which we accept in its stead.

In this explanation lies the solution of the problem of the antagonism of opinions, and beliefs, and the acceptance of dogmas that will not bear the light of a critical analysis. Among these is the dogma of "Free moral agency;" and the idea of responsibility as a necessary consequence of it.

In the book, The Great Psychological Crime, there is a formula based on this dogma, as follows: "Volition independent, self-conscious, knowingly and intentionally; rational anticipation the result. Responsibility. This simple diagram carries its own explanation. Whether we admit it or not, the elements therein suggested, are those upon which we must depend in determining the question of individual responsibility." (Page 322.)

It will be seen that this question of volition and responsibility deals only with the satisfaction of desire, utterly ignoring the cause that gives rise to volition. Volition is an act of the will, or, an act determining the choice of means which has its rise in the motive, and the motive must precede the will, having its rise in desire. The author is dealing with the consideration of means which he calls independent. How can there be independent volition when it has its rise in motive, and motive in desire? It is evident that means are dependent on the desire that calls them into requisition. This is a kind of reasoning without a premise on which to found it, and the conclusion is nil.

It is evident that no one can be responsible only for what he is able to respond to. The law of bankruptcy is founded on this principle which no one questions. The ability to perform limits the responsibility; therefore, personal responsibility is measured by personal ability; but free moral agency (so-called,) presupposes equal and unlimited ability in all voluntary and rational acts. No one is under obligation to respond only to what he has agreed to perform, or assumes conditions that require its performance; otherwise, he is under compulsion and cannot be a free agent. The philosophers have avoided this problem, and the scientists have dropped it, but its solution is the pressing demand of this age.

Under a wrong impression in regard to responsibility, those who fail in their assumed responsibility, are blamed and punished. The statute law holds to this assumption. The ignorant and vicious cannot plead ignorance and moral weakness. The morally strong are esteemed and given credit for what they do and refrain from doing—the doing they desire and the not doing they despise; and the ignorant and morally weak are blamed and despised for what they do when temptation overrides all consideration of consequences, or what necessity compels them to do. This is palpably unjust, and makes great injury to the community; but the prevalent feeling is that way, and gives rise to the sense of reality in what is felt; and will so continue until the feeling is changed.

This false sense of reality reaches out in another direction, and is the cause of serious mischief. It gives rise to hate, sectarian animosity; to scandal, slander and libel; to hypocrisy and deceit and the innumerable evils consequent thereon. And another evil still more serious; that is criminal jurisprudence, giving rise to a species of civil warfare whose belligerent forces are an army of prosecutors and court officials on the one side, and an army of offenders of the law on the other. This warfare is carried on at an expense of over $600,000,000 annually; besides the degradation, disgrace and suffering of the innocent, as well as guilty.

Each one acts within his own sphere, limited by his consciousness. He can not get out of it, but may enlarge and ennoble it ad infinitum. No one can get into it and realize what is therein. It is his world—the content of his life—his own; no one has a right to dictate or judge for another. Were this principle faithfully applied good will, peace, and harmony would prevail.

Let no one feel alarmed at the result of this condition of affairs. The concern for self-well-being and of that for those we love, is a sufficient guarantee for self preservation and the welfare of society. In fact it is the only guarantee we have—the only possible one. The solution of this problem of responsibility is of incalculable importance, considering that all our institutions are founded on the dogma of free moral agency, and all social relations have their basis on it.

The universal feeling in regard to it is the means of its perpetuation; and moreover, the dominant interests are adjusted to it—interests that are special and inimical to the general interests. Let no one feel confident that he could have escaped the prevailing feelings of the age in which he lived, however unjust and absurd they might have been. Human nature has not changed, nor need it change to eradicate this dogma. When the cause of our ill-being and well-being is understood, it will arcuse the right incentive, to the well-being. E. J. SCHELLHOUS.

WHAT IS THE USE OF YOUR SLAVING LONGER FOR SOME ONE ELSE.

Why not start a business for yourself, reap all the profits and get a standing in your locality.

If you are in some one's employ, remember he will not continue to pay you a salary only so long as he can make profit out of your labor.

In this era every bright man and woman is looking to own a business, to employ help, and to make money.

It is just as easy to make money for yourself as it is to coin money for some grasping employer, who pays you a small salary each week.

If you are making less than $30 weekly it will pay you to read this announcement, for it will not appear again in this paper.

If you read it and take advantage of the opportunity offered, you will never regret it. To own a business yourself is certainly your ambition.

We start you in a profitable business. Teach you absolutely free how to conduct it.

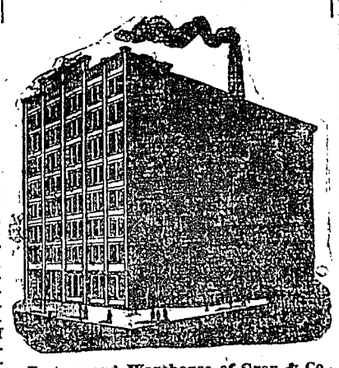
$20 to $35 weekly can be made at home or traveling, taking orders, using, selling and appointing agents for PROFESSOR GRAY'S Latest improved, Guaranteed Plating Machines and Outfits. NO FAKE OR TOYS, but genuine, practical, complete, scientific outfits for doing the finest of plating on WATCHES, JEWELRY, KNIVES, FORKS, SPOONS, CASTORS, TABLEWARE OF ALL KINDS, BICYCLES, SEWING MACHINES, SWORDS, REVOLVERS, HARNESS AND BUGGY TRIMMINGS, metal specialties; in fact all kinds of metal goods. HEAVY THICK PLATE. GUARANTEED TO WEAR FOR YEARS. No experience necessary.

There is really a wonderful demand for replating. You can do business at nearly every house, store, office or factory. Almost every family has from $2 to $10 worth of tableware to be plated, besides watches, jewelry, bicycles, etc.

Every boarding house, hotel, restaurant, college or public institution has from $5 to $75 worth of work to be plated. Every jewelry, repair or bicycle shop, every dentist, doctor and surgeon, every man, woman and child you meet has either a watch, some jewelry, bicycles, instruments, or some articles needing plating.

Besides the above there are hundreds of patentees and manufacturers of metal goods, bicycles, sewing machines and typewriter repair shops who want their goods plated, or to whom you can sell a plating outfit, furnishing them supplies for doing their own plating.

Retail Stores which handle hardware, harness, tableware and plated or metal goods all need a plating and polishing outfit for refinishing goods that become worn, soiled, rusty or tarnished.



Every Undertaker requires a plating outfit for repairing and finishing coffin and hearse trimmings which are soiled, tarnished or worn.

Manufacturers are making and selling tons of new tableware, jewelry, bicycles and various kinds of metal goods every month which has only a very thin plate, which, in a few weeks, wears off, making the goods unsightly, unfit for future use unless plated.

Manufacturers of new goods do no replating on old goods whatever, but try to force the public to throw away the old and buy new at high prices, but this only makes the plating business better.

The more new thinly plated goods sold the greater will be the demand for plating. Plate some articles for your friends and neighbors by Professor Gray's Process, and it quickly proves to them its genuineness and merit and that your plating is much thicker, will wear better and longer than a large percentage of the new goods. Your trade is then established, and within a short time you will have all the goods you can plate.

Plate a few articles for your friends, call a few weeks, a few months, or five years later, and you will find the plate satisfactory, and they will give you every article they have needing to be plated.

Factory and Warehouse of Gray & Co., Cincinnati, Ohio. Capital $100,000. Employ 200 to 300 people daily.

When you deliver the goods plated to customers they will be well pleased, in fact, delighted with the work, will pay for it promptly, and you will be given on an average twice as much work to be plated as they gave you the first time you called.

YOU CAN DO PLATING SO CHEAP

that every person can afford to have their goods plated

No tidy housekeeper will allow worn and rusty tableware to go before a guest when it can be restored and made equal to new.

No person will wear jewelry or a watch, or ride a bicycle, or use a typewriter, sewing machine, or any machine made of metal from which the plate is worn off when they see samples of your work and hear your prices. People in this day and generation are too sensible and economical to throw away their old goods and buy new when they can have their old goods replated for so small a cost, making them, in many cases, better than when new.

The best part of the plating business is that it increases fast and is permanent.

Put out your sign, secure your outfit, do a little work, and quickly you will be favored with orders. If you do not wish to do the plating yourself you can hire boys for $3 to $4 a week to do the work the same as we do, and solicitors to gather up goods to be plated on commission.

It is not hard work, but is pleasant, and especially so when your business is netting you $20 to $35 a week for 5 or 6 hours' work a day.

TREMENDOUS PROFITS.

The profits realized from plating are tremendous.

To plate a set of teaspoons requires only about 3c. worth of metal and chemicals; a set of knives, forks or tablespoons about 5c. worth. The balance of the price received for the work is for the agent's time and profit.

Agents usually charge from 25c. to 50c. per set for plating teaspoons, from 50c. to 75c. for tablespoons and forks, and from 60c. to $1.00 for knives.

We allow you to set your own price for plating. Get as much as you can. You will have no competition. You know what it costs to plate the goods, and all you get over cost is profit. Some agents charge much more than the above prices, while others do the work for half and still make money.

Let us start you in business for yourself at once, don't delay a single day. Be your own boss. Be a money maker. We do all kinds of plating ourselves, have had years of experience, and are headquarters for plating supplies. We manufacture our own dynamos and outfits, all sizes, and send them out complete, with all tools, lathes, wheels and materials; everything ready for use.

We teach you everything, furnish all receipts, formulas and trade secrets free, so that failure should be impossible, and any one who follows our directions and teachings can do fine plating with a little practice, and become a money maker.

You will not need to canvas. Agents write they have all the goods they can plate. People bring it for miles around. THE GREAT MYSTERY OF SPIRIT FORMS NUMBER THREE.

Some of the nerve conditions by which mediums may see spirits were explained in the first two articles.

The sensation of sight is the only form of sensational knowledge which we can have of sight.

Through this sensation the medium is therefore capable of seeing spirits.

Deprive the medium of this sensation and the medium's capacity for seeing spirits would be destroyed.

The old psychology is based upon a too narrow basis respecting sensation. It assumed that the medium's sight could only be awakened by the retina being acted upon from without, i. e., through the action of outside light. And, that only in this way—from nerve action from the outside—could the medium see a spirit.

The metaphor, comparison, or simile of the telephone-central-key-board, as representing the relation which one's own spirit—as interpreter—bears to the nerve-signal-signs of one's own brain, must be persistently borne in mind.

A sensation of sight of a spirit is therefore an electric-picture transmitted to the retina; because a signal-sign has been sent (through the medium's optic nerve) demanding that a mental-picture of something (in a flash of light) is required outside to be seen.

The person who creates this mental picture is one's own spirit.

The person seen in the room, by means of the mental-picture (created in answer to the nerve-signal-sign) is the spirit seen by the medium's own spirit.

The mental-picture in the medium's brain is subjective.

The spirit seen outside by the medium is objective.

Unless the medium bears these distinctions in mind, there is apt to be more or less of delusion, illusion, or faith in hallucination, rather than fact.

Science implies teachableness.

A medium (destitute of the scientific spirit) is only a wonder-loving fanatic, and a harm to the cause of Spiritualism.

It is just as holy and lofty and pure, and exalted a Spiritualistic work, for me to study the laws of the wonderful nervous telephone-central-key-board, of a great intelligent medium's brain, and personal spirit, as it is for me to sit in religious awe, listening to the independent vocabulary of an assumedly well-meaning Apache spirit; but, who on earth preferred scalps to books.

In the old Bible way of putting it, the medium's body—and his nervous system as a part of that medium's body—is the temple of the Holy Spirit; and it is my spiritual and moral, as well as scientific duty to treat that medium's body, with religious and philosophical respect.

And, if his body is worthy of such profound dignity and study, how much more is his or her own great Spirit? Hence, I repeat, the fascination which the loftier, scientific study of the psychology of Spiritualism has for me; when compared with the study of the lower planes of phenomena.

But, let us return to our metaphor of the central-telephone-key-board, as expressing the relation which the personal spirit of the medium—as interpreter of the nerve-signal-signs of sensation and creator of electric-pictures—bears to his own brain with its 600,000,000 separate cells, or keys.

For, electric-pictures of actual spirits in a room, are never created by the medium's own spirit unless a certain number of these 600,000,000 nerve-signal-signs or cells are first touched by forces which exist either within or without his own skull.

When a spirit is actually seen by three or four persons in a room, there can be no chance for delusion, illusion or hallucination.

That is, of course, providing that it is a spirit; and not an imposture.

Every brain key-board receives—from outside—the same nerve-signal-signs; and here we have the brains of four persons, all testifying to the same common fact, viz., the existence of the spirit. The light in the room acted in a uniform way on the optic nerves of all four of the witnesses and awakened the same nerve-signal-signs as to the presence of the spirit in all four of the persons present.

Therefore, it was a genuine sensation; scientific in every particular, testifying to an incontrovertible fact.

The liability to deception is increased in the ratio that the experience is purely personal; and is not known to two or three others.

This does not mean that our own personal experiences—with no one else present—are not as good as if fifty other persons saw the spirit, or felt it.

But it does mean this, viz., that four persons are less likely to be mistaken than one.

Mistakes in personal Spiritualistic experiences (that is, in those experiences which no one else shares with us) are due to the following cause, viz., that the 600,000,000 nerve-signal-signs, or brain cells, can be operated upon by forces creating changes within the body.

With ordinary experiences, as where several see the same spirit at once, the signal-signs are created by the force outside of us, i. e., the rays of outside light. That is, by forces creating changes outside of the body; and acting on the nervous system from the outside.

But the nervous system can be acted on from the inside.

Accidental nerve-signal-signs may be given from within. And suppose quite a number of these accidental nerve-signal-signs of sensation to occur from within the body. Owing to some injury or fever, or altered condition of the blood. What then?

Well, our own spirit, ever true and and faithful in answering every-nerve-signal-sign, with a sensation (whether there is anything outside of our bodies to correspond with the sensations or not) nevertheless keeps on giving us a series of the pictures or sensations of things—which we think exist outside of us—but which simply exist within the horizon of our own knowledge.

The really scientific Spiritualist never mistakes therefore, the existence of a real spirit for an hallucination, or, a series of hallucinations.

When we stop to consider that every nerve-cell when it is excited, awakens the signal-sign of its own special and appropriate sensation; and, that there are 600,000,000 of these signal-signs of sensation; is it any wonder that the unintelligent sometimes mistake the accidental awakening of an hallucination, for the presence of a spirit guide?

Suppose, for instance, that a foreign substance in the brain of a medium (who has never had time to study the nerve-signal-signs of his own brain) should accidentally come into constant, irritating contact with his auditory nerve; keeping it vibrating like a door-bell that will not stop ringing. The consequence would be that he would be hearing voices all the time.

If a similar foreign substance in his brain irritates his optic nerve, he would see flashes of light; and, if the medium knew nothing of the functions of the nerve-signal-signs of his own nervous system, he would be likely to attribute the voices and the lights to the operations of his spirit guides.

So with sensations of touch in various parts of the body.

Thus, every conscientious Spiritualist owes it to himself, his friends, and humanity, that he be capable of exactly defining the difference between the evidences of actual spirit presence, and hallucination.

It certainly does no harm, if it does no good.

Our memories are filled with real, organized pictures, of hundreds and thousands of forms; the most of which we have no recollection of ever having seen.

When, owing to some sudden nervous change within us, we suddenly have a perception of one of these human forms (which we do not recollect ever having seen before) it is not impossible but that we are suffering from hallucinations.

The way to settle the question is to ascertain if someone else also sees the form.

But, concerning the foregoing, my brother Spiritualist may ask me justly, what proof he may have, that I am writing of these things from personal experiences.

Owing to the violent scorn and probably cruel contempt, which some of my Spiritualist brethren may feel towards the work of such men as Frederic W. H. Meyers, and students of his school, it is not impossible that my proof—as connected with this Myers school of Spiritualist—may not be considered of much value; particularly when I say that I never gave a public or private seance in my hire.

Concerning my general intellectual honesty, however, my friends Lombroso, Professor William James and Professors Small and Triggs of the University of Chicago, have borne abundant witness.

Not desirous of being at all intrusive, immodest, or unwisely aggressive, in my own opinions of my Spiritualistic experiences, I adopted the nom-de-plume of "Le Baron."

The New York Herald gave a half-page to the matter. Among other things the reviewer said: "The strange experiences of Mr. Leo Baron submitted to the Society for Psychical Research by Professor James, of Harvard College, afford one of the most interesting and truly marvelous cases of supernatural endowments which have ever been investigated by that learned society. The remarkable personal powers possessed by Mr. Le Baron, as the gentleman is called by Professor James, might easily be regarded as a miracle."

The fact that I never should have made these facts public (facts referred to in the New York Herald) save through the urgent solicitation of my friend Prof. William James, is sufficient proof—in addition to the fact that I never gave (in my life) either a private or public seance—that I am neither actuated by the love of fame or gain, in any matter of Spiritualism.

With exception of The Progressive Thinker coming to my desk (the subscription price of which is one dollar) I am writing this series of articles wholly for the benefit of humanity, without any hope for return.

This may or may not be sufficient proof of my entirely unselfish and disinterested attitude.

But, in any event, it proves that I am entitled to a respectful hearing.

By turning to page 307 of the second volume of Frederic W. H. Myers' work, "Human Personality," the reader may glean an additional paragraph concerning the "Le Baron" matter referred to in the New York Herald, and the language used on the planet Mars.

The greatest hope I have in the ultimate triumph of truth, concerning all such matters, is couched in the two words—scientific evolution.

A Spiritualist who is a scientific evolutionist, manfully admits that he does not know everything.

He could not progress or evolve if he did.

He would be ready to intellectually rot with the a priori dogmatists if he knew it all.

One great trouble in our attempts to solve the Great Mystery of Spirit Forms has been our haste at jumping at conclusions.

Our belief that it is a simple problem and very easy of solution.

In my humble judgment, it is the most complex and profound problem of the age.

It implies, for instance, some sort of intelligent comprehension of the relation of the medium's spirit guide to the 600,000,000 cells of the medium's own brain; for, every cell in the six hundred millions is the nerve-signal-sign of some sensation, distinct from others.

The teaching on this subject should be scientific and exact.

It is not only cruel, but silly to be taught things which we not only have to unlearn, but have to also waste time to both learn and unlearn.

This thing of intellectual retrogression is the greatest stumbling-block in the path of Spiritualistic—scientific—evolution, because it is always trying to chain us in dungeons of slimy and effete and ignorant explanation, and old dogmatic interpretation.

No laws, either of the spirit world or this, can be discovered without hard, patient, humble study. And the only progress possible to be made in the scientific evolution of Spiritualism is in the discovery of its unvarying laws.

Of these laws we are at present in ignorance.

Anyway, two spirits are always before me for study whenever I visit a brother or sister medium.

The first spirit is the spirit guide of the medium which I am visiting.

The second spirit is the medium's own spirit.

And, I trust, that I may not be considered as being worthy of being immediately lynched, or burnt with coal oil at the stake of Modern Spiritualism, if I heretically affirm as my honest conviction, the fact that I consider the medium's own spirit as worthy of as much study, esteem and reverence, as that of the medium's spirit guide.

The Light Among the Hills.

A Charming Narrative.

Most Beautifully Suggestive is "The Light Among the Hills," by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt. It is a narrative founded on facts alone, and every Spiritualist should read it.

The next morning as Mrs. Grey and Martha stood at the front gate waiting for Mr. Weston to come with the horse and buggy, Mrs. Weston came hurrying along, wiping her wet hands upon her apron, and said: "There's one thing more, Marthy, I wanter say to ye. Yer Aunt Laury has owned up to me that there's lots of Spiritualists up where yer goin'. Now I want ye to remember, Marthy, that their works are all of the devil. It all comes of b'lievin' in the immortality of the soul, and that's the devil's lie. I want ye to remember now, and hang on to the faith ye've been brought up in."

Martha looked straight into her mother's anxious face and said quietly: "You were brought up to believe that the soul is immortal, and at death goes straight to either heaven or hell, were you not?"

"Certainly, but when I got old enough to reason I knew better," said Mrs. Weston, with an air of pride and putting a strong emphasis on the word reason.

"If you departed from the faith you were brought up in when you got old enough to reason, why may I not do the same thing?" demanded Martha.

"Because," said her mother, sternly, "you have been taught the truth."

"Wouldn't your mother have said the same thing?"

Mrs. Weston flushed and looked confused, and Martha continued: "You have always done just what you thought was right, haven't you, mother?"

"I—I've tried to," faltered Mrs. Weston.

"Well, I'm going to do just what I think is right, so don't worry about me, mother."

Just then Mr. Weston's voice was heard calling, "All aboard!" and a few minutes later Martha and her aunt were being whirled along through cool green forests and flower-decked, sunlit fields, towards the little railroad station miles away.

It was evening, and in a cozy sitting room where easy chairs, rugs, neat muslin curtains, pictures and various feminine knick-knacks lent an air of comfort, three women were resting after their day's work. At a table strewn with papers and magazines, Martha Weston was folding the letter she had just finished. The lamplight turned her wavy hair to shining gold, and lighted her pure earnest face and dark, wistful eyes. In an easy chair a few feet from Martha sat Laura Grey, who held in her hands an open book. But she was not looking at it, for her eyes were fastened upon a slender figure sitting at a desk at the other side of the room.

"Elsie, dear," said Mrs. Grey, softly. The figure at the desk turned and faced the speaker. She was a woman a little past middle age, with a slight, girlish figure and a refined, sensitive face. Her features were irregular and she could not have been called beautiful, but she had a sweet, womanly face, full of strength and tenderness. Her face showed unmistakable traces of care and suffering, but it showed also the calmness of a soul that has risen above the storms of life and found peace and rest. Her eyes were large and dark, changing from sad to gay, from tender and wistful to keen and searching according to the mood of their possessor. The two women looked at each other affectionately, and Mrs. Grey said: "You promised me, Elsie, that you would tell my niece how you got converted to Spiritualism, and I feel anxious to have her hear."

Mrs. Austin arose and took a chair between Aunt and niece.

"You are right, Laura," she said; "there is no time but now and I have observed that whoever lets an opportunity slip by unimproved is likely to repent later on. That you may the better understand I will go back to my childhood. When my sister Lucy was two years old and I was seven, my mother died, and a year from then father married again. I think my father loved his children with a strong, deep love, but he was a grave, quiet man, and it was not till I was a woman that I knew of his affection for us. As to my stepmother I do not know to this day whether she loved us or not, but she had stern ideas regarding her duty to us, which she fulfilled to the best of her ability. I had a poetic and affectionate nature, and an inborn tendency to what is now labeled 'mysticism.'

"Mother was one of the most practical of practical women, and woe to me if I ever breathed a word to her of poetry or mysticism. Several times during my childhood, strange things happened in our home, but mother always accounted for them promptly, if she had to accuse Lucy or me in a most unjust manner. Several times I heard voices from those unseen speak words of warning or of counsel to me, but I dared tell no one, and several times both Lucy and I saw spirit forms appear and disappear to our great amazement.

"Once Lucy told what she had seen and persisted that she told the truth and received a severe whipping in consequence, which had the effect of closing her mouth, if it didn't her eyes. We were kept in almost nun-like seclusion until I was twenty years old, and then mother said I must go and earn my living. Father objected very strongly, but his wife carried the day, as she always did, for he was a man who loved peace and quiet.

"Wholly ignorant of the world and its ways, and longing for a kind word and an approving look, it was no wonder that I made a mistake when I married. I was not long in finding out my mistake. My married life was crowded with disappointments, misery and privations. He to whom I committed my pure young life seemed bound to destroy all my beautiful ideals—all my most fondly cherished hopes and to drag down and defile my highest, noblest instincts. However, he did not, could not do it.

"I had not been long in my new home before I discovered that there was something about the house which I could not explain. It was an old rambling farm house, far away among the hills. Look where I would, hills rose towering beyond other hills, and beyond these nothing was visible but the blue of the sky. The nearer hills were covered with a growth of sugar maples, paper birch and dark spruces, and they were very beautiful. There was not a house in sight, and I was very lonely. It was a large farm, and there was much heavy work I was compelled to do, and my strength soon began to fail me. I was very unhappy, and not without sufficient cause.

"I doubt if any person who is really unhappy can keep in good health for any length of time. Happiness is like sunlight; with it we grow strong and beautiful; without it we grow weak and sickly. As I before remarked, I had not been in the house long before I knew there was something about it quite out of the ordinary. Doors would open and shut without any visible means at all hours of night and day. The doors closed with the old-fashioned latch and catch, and it gives a person unaccustomed to such phenomena a queer feeling to see a latch lifted without visible hands, but I have seen it done many times. At first I was nervous about being left alone, but I soon became convinced that no harm was intended me. After a few months my cousin Kate came to live with me, and to assist about the work. After her arrival things got more lively. In an empty chamber over the living-room we often heard what sounded like two men struggling with each other, followed by a heavy thud as of a body thrown upon the floor, and then would come a sound as of some one being dragged across the floor. The most careful investigation failed to afford any explanation.

"Kate complained of footsteps following her about, and of articles being snatched out of her hands. She was a young girl, with a happy, lively nature and being strong and healthy, she soon ceased to be disturbed by the strange occurrences. One night I sent her to the front room for something, and she returned in great haste, pale and trembling. She said that upon entering the room she had glanced into a large mirror, hanging upon the opposite wall, and had seen the face of an old woman with white hair and closed eyes, but it was the face of a dead women. Kate soon recovered from her fright, but it was months before she would enter the room alone after dark.

"One day after an unusual number of disturbances, I questioned my husband about the matter, and learned that he had lived in the house from his boyhood, and that things had always been happening, as he expressed it. He said that his mother had always called the house 'haunted,' but 'that is just like a woman,' he added with lofty superiority, 'Ghosts don't trouble me,' but I noticed there were some rooms that he would never enter alone after dark.

"One night I yielded to Kate's entreaty to share her bed for the night. Early in the morning I was awakened by the sound of voices. Although the voices were plainly audible, I could not distinguish the words, and had the impression that the conversation was being carried on in a foreign language, and I was greatly puzzled. After listening for several minutes I whispered softly, 'Kate, are you awake?'

"'Then you do hear it?' she asked excitedly.

"'I hear talking,' I answered, 'but I can't understand a word. What does it mean?'

"'Oh, I am so glad that you hear it,' was the answer. 'I have heard it every morning for a long time, and I was beginning to think that either my brain or my ears were going wrong.'

"'Can you understand what is said?' I asked.

"'Never a word. I think it is French.'

"I got up and looked out of the window which commanded an unobstructed view of the whole of that side of the house. The conversation which was being held, seemingly very near the window, still continued, but no one was visible. The glistening dew lay undisturbed upon the grass about the house, and save that mysterious conversation, and the singing of birds, all was silent.

"For days afterward Kate and I discussed this matter. We knew very little about Spiritualism, and strange as it may seem we made no connection between it and the phenomena transpiring around us. I had lost all faith talk, she would tell about a beautiful lady and in her baby way talk to her and carry her playthings. Kate had for a good while maintained that there were two classes of the unseen beings, one evil and the other good, but I would not accept her idea, because it did not agree with the theory I had formed, but what Kate had failed to do, baby Agnes succeeded in, and it was a great comfort to me to think that beings kind and helpful were watching over my child. Agnes talked to the lady a great deal and often insisted that I should talk to her, and once when I was weeping she insisted that 'the yady kied, too'; and with the knowledge of her love which I now possess, I can easily believe that she did.

"But there came a day when I laid my baby away in the desolate snow-drifted graveyard—laid her away without one hope of ever seeing her again. I went from that lonely little grave back to my desolate home and folded my empty arms across my aching heart and longed to feel the cold hand of death upon my own. I felt that I could no longer bear what I had been bearing. I shrank within myself and cried out in anguish against my daily life. My friends, there are some things that are harder to bear than death. To this day I cannot hear the winter winds go wailing about the house without thinking of that lonely farm-house upon that wind-swept hill, that little grave under the drifting snow, and those dark eyes when I thought that I was utterly forsaken.

"One night a few weeks after my baby's death, as I lay upon my bed unconscious of everything but my own misery, I was startled by a clear, ringing voice dropping, apparently from the ceiling. Never shall I forget the solemn majesty of that voice. Strength, purity, wisdom and love were all suggested by it. Only one sentence was spoken and I recognized it as prophetic—I understood the words but not their meaning. Looking back I can now see the wisdom displayed for not understanding the meaning of the words. I pondered over them and thus my mind was kept from brooding over my troubles.

"About this time I received a long letter from my sister Lucy, telling me of her experience. Shadowy forms had stood beside her and talked to her in audible voices, and one of these visitors had written upon the wall in letters of light. 'I am firmly convinced,' she wrote, 'that the dead are not dead, but alive, and I know they can and do come back and speak to certain ones when conditions are right for them.'

"With the sound of that majestic voice still ringing in my ears, I drank in Lucy's experience eagerly, for I knew very well that she would tell me nothing but the truth.

in the Bible and the religion I had been brought up in. I tried to believe that death was the end of human existence, but there was always an inner consciousness which gave that belief the lie. I was now forced to acknowledge the existence of unseen beings of whom I had no previous knowledge, but that they had once been human beings I would not allow.

"About this time the crowning joy of womanhood was accorded me; I became a mother. The soft pink cheek that nestled against my own proved a solace for my sorrows, those dimpled little fingers clinging about my own thrilled me with strength and hope. My precious baby, my beautiful dark-eyed Agnes—I wonder sometimes if, in that bright world where she is being reared and educated, she knows how much her mother loved her."

Mrs. Austin faltered for a moment and Mrs. Grey took her friend's hand in a sympathetic grasp. In a moment she went bravely on:

"As my baby grew older and began to

PERFECT MEDIUMSHIP.

It May Be Constructive, Not Destructive.

The urchin gets happiness from the thought that he will one day proudly pace the classic university halls. Meanwhile he attends strictly to the business in hand, knowing that present application to present things is the only passport to the coveted goal. How does this compare with the Spiritualist medium, that springs, Minerva like, from the brain of Jupiter?

The medium toils not, neither does he spin."

For him there are no long years of laborious study. He graduates first, last and all the time. The spirits educate him while he sleeps. The Great Psychological Crime to the contrary notwithstanding.

This is all very nice for the favored medium. In mortal occupations generally there is very little perfection. The great oratorios are the only exceptions, and these took eons for accomplishment. The savage has perfected eyesight, but loses it in civilization. Forward steps nevertheless develop suggestions. From these theories are ground out. Experiment next follows. At last truth is ascertained.

Perfection is something advanced to greatest usefulness, fullness, security, absoluteness, elegance, finish, and due exercise void of fatigue and reaction.

Where is the standard mediumship perfection?

There is one instance recently demonstrated that comes near to it. It was in a lady Spiritualist lecturer and platform test medium. She will be heard from later. The words of the wise controling spirit were simply touched on the brain of this medium. She herself, while passive for the hour, remained as one of the audience. The education to the large assembly of people was hers as well. At the closing she was no more fatigued than if engaged in high-class conversation with mortals for the same period of time. When not passive for special occasions she is left as free from spirit interference as any other mortal. Indeed, she is more free for she has a strong, wise protection that prevents injurious, promiscuous tampering. In her own right she is an accomplished conversationalist. Her health has been improved. Her self control, individuality, general culture, wisdom and will, have all been strengthened and benefited in every way.

All along it has been the tendency of mediumship to advance from the unconscious to the conscious trance. That the advance will continue is far from being impossible. To condemn the early phases of mediumship would be as wicked and wanton as to decry Robert Fulton for not making the first little steam vessel he launched upon the Hudson the elegant palace she is to-day. What the whole mortal family may become in the distant future, is yet only a speculative theory. All may yet become so highly unfolded that each can see and talk with spirits. Even so; if then, an audience of ten thousand people desired to be entertained and instructed by some one very great and wise spirit, a medium would be demanded for the purpose.

That mediumship, per se, is constructive and not destructive, Almighty Nature herself will declare. That there are perverted instances was inevitable. That spirits as well as mortals are responsible for it, is sadly true. Neither they nor we are blamable. All alike were ignorant. Happily the right knowledge is increasing. Should the perfecting of mediumship be left wholly to the spirits it would be greatly unfortunate. The spirits need our thought and insight along with their own.

It is fashionable to laugh at and ridicule Christian Science. There is plenty of good reason for it. It is built on the false premise that "all is mind—there is no matter; all is health, there is no disease." Interblended with the absurdity it has elevated mind into such a curative agent as to make the old school doctors stagger with amazement. The Psychological Crime has builded on the equally absurd premise that mediumship is a destructive principle in natural science. Interblended with this it has made suggestions that will arouse a new and healthful impetus to the best growth of mediumship. "Christian Science" and "The Great Psychological Crime" are fit companion pieces.

W. W. ABER.

Account of Materializations at His Home.

To the Editor:—In your issue of Dec. 26, I have just read an experience of H. B., with Farmer Riley, at Riley's own house. I wish I knew the H. B's. other name, for those are my own initials; but the readers of The Progressive Thinker need not be confused, for they will readily distinguish the difference between my uncultured pen and his able article giving his experience at and with Farmer Riley.

My experience was at Kansas City, with W. W. Aber at his own house. I called on Mrs. Connoley, a very fine medium I had met in Kansas City a year ago last October, and learned from her that Mr. Aber resided only a few blocks from there, so I telephoned him and asked when he would have a materializing circle, and his reply was, "To-night." Being an old acquaintance, I was anxious to see him and his work, so engaged four seats, and eight o'clock that evening found us all there, Mr. and Mrs. Connoley and Mrs. Connoley's mother, all ardent Spiritualists, and neither of them had seen a materialization.

Mr. Aber has an upper room fitted up for the purpose, a room with two outside windows and one door which we came in it. His cabinet consisted of a black cambric curtain across one corner of the room, the curtain being about eight feet long and reached from the ceiling to the floor, and there was another curtain fastened to the wall to make everything dark within. When everything was ready he asked us to examine the cabinet, and we did so thoroughly and found there was nothing in there but a chair. We examined him and found he had nothing white about him. Then he took his seat and asked Mrs Connoley to come in and sew his pant legs to the carpet, and sew his coat sleeves to the knees of his pants, and his coat collar together at the neck, all then he called on me to fill his hands with oatmeal, and I did so; then there was a light in the opposite corner of the room with a thin red tissue paper around it and then the electric light was turned out and we could distinguish everybody in the room who sat in a circle facing the cabinet about ten feet from same. Then the music box was started and in about five minutes a white form came out through the curtain and the one on the extreme right of the circle was called for, and he went up and recognized his wife who had been dead many years. He introduced her to the circle, and then a little boy, his son, came out, who was about three feet tall; then the wife went back into the cabinet and the boy went down into the floor. Then two other men, members of the circle, went through the same routine, their spirit friends were plainly seen by all of us.

Then Mrs. Connoley's mother was called up and a very affecting scene occurred. When her mother died she left an infant girl whom she had raised as her own and very tenderly, and the spirit mother wished to thank her. The Connoley friends, some five or six, came out and we all saw them plainly. All ladies came out in pure white. Mr. Connoley recognized an old comrade of his who had lost an eye and the lid was even closed.

Then my wife called me, and I went up and she put her hand on me and talked. Then my mother, who passed into the higher life in 1855 came up to me and I said, "Mother, is this really you? Put your hand on me." And she did, and patted me on the shoulder so that all in the room heard it. Then I said, "Mother, do please come near me if you can," and she came up and put her arm across my shoulders and then backed up a little and there stood. Some little old lady in appearance came out, and I said "Who can that be?" and my mother said, "It is mother." "Why, yes," I said, "it is Grandmother Russell;" and she bowed her head three or four times, stepped around the other side of mother and bowed to the rest of the circle and all went back into the cabinet, and my brothers came out, and I said: "Charley, you know my heart's desire is to do good and enlighten the people." And he said: "Homer, don't cast your pearls before swine."

Then my sisters came out and patted me on the shoulder and stroked my whiskers. All this was seen by the whole circle; then my father came with his red hair and heavy whiskers and put his hand on my shoulder and talked so loud and plain that all heard him. There was more, but this enough.

When we were through we examined the cabinet and found Mr. Aber just as we left him sewed up and down to the floor and the meal still in his hands, tired and weak from two hours' sitting.

THE STATION DESPAIR.

We must trust the conductor, most surely;
Why millions of millions before
Have made this same journey securely
And come to that ultimate shore.
And we, we will reach it in season;
And ah, what a welcome is there!
Reflect, then, how out of all reason
To stop at the station Despair.

Ay, midnights and many a potion
Of trouble and sorrow have we,
As we journey from ocean to ocean,
From sea unto ultimate sea,
To that deep sea of seas, and all silence
Of passion, concern, and of care,
That vast sea of Eden-set islands;
Don't stop at the station Despair!

Go forward, whatever may follow,
Go forward, friend, led or alone;
Ah, me, to leap off in some hollow
Or fen, in the night and unknown,
Leap off like a thief; try to hide you
From angels, all waiting you there
Go forward, whatever betide you,
Don't stop at the station Despair!

This Will Set You Thinking.

We take Pleasure in Introducing to our Readers Nora Batchelor, whose views are the result of actual experience in connection with obsession, and which will make a deep impression on every thinking mind. The question of obsession or demoniac control has been ignored by the great mass of Spiritualists, fearing it would injure the cause if forced to the front. It is now to the front, however, and will become, as it should be, a leading factor in Spiritualism. From Miss Batchelor's standpoint she lucidly demonstrates the existence in obsession of a Great Psychological Crime, and positively states, "There is Danger in Mediumship." She explodes, from her standpoint, the idea that an evil spirit can not approach a pure-minded person. Her communication will be read with deep interest.

NOTES AND COMMENTS ON THE SYMPOSIUM.

Not having been able to respond to the editor's invitation anent the Symposium, I may be pardoned for offering a few observations on the same.

Is the "fundamental principle in mediumship" destructive of individuality, or is it not? On the two sides of this question we have the writers in this symposium drawn up in battle array, each positive that his own view is correct. Which side is right? Which has the truth?

Here is a significant fact. Those writers, like Hudson Tuttle, Mrs. Richmond and others, whose psychic experiences have been of a helpful, inspiring and beautiful nature, unqualifiedly endorse mediumship and condemn the teachings of the Storm Center book. On the other hand, those who have had the misfortune TO FALL INTO THE HANDS OF UNPRINCIPLED OR VICIOUS SPIRITS, AND WHO HAVE SUFFERED IN CONSEQUENCE, OR WHO HAVE BECOME ACQUAINTED WITH CASES OF SUCH SUFFERING, UNQUALIFIEDLY CONDEMN MEDIUMSHIP AND ENDORSE THE BOOK.

Here is another fact which attracts attention. Those writers who condemn mediumship are without exception acquainted, apparently, with only one phase of mediumship, i. e., obsession. Their whole argument is based upon facts drawn from this one lamentable phase. Their entire investigation has been directed to CASES OF OBSESSION AND TO NOTHING ELSE. For example, take the article written by W. E. Morgan, a Chicago physician. This gentleman says he has investigated about twenty cases of mediumship, "each and every one of which was under the complete control or partial domination of a spirit or spirits." "The one thing above everything else to attract my attention," he continues, "is the fact that in every case the control or influence, however induced, has been of the most degraded character and action." From the twenty cases, every one of which is a case of demoniacal possession, the gentleman draws his conclusions. And what are they? "I cannot make it too plain or too strong that there is danger, great danger, danger to body, mind and soul, in giving or in attempting to give yourself into the keeping or to the control of man, devil, angel or god, incarnate or decarnate."

Now, look at this argument. To give yourself into the control of a devil is dangerous; an angel is not a devil, therefore to give yourself into the control of an angel is likewise dangerous. This writer has not investigated a single case in which the controlling influence was of an exalted or angelic nature, yet these sweeping conclusions. This is the sum and substance of the argument, put forth in favor of the Storm Center book. The simple fact is, every writer who thus upholds the book and condemns mediumship, has based his argument upon INSUFFICIENT DATA, and DRAWN CONCLUSIONS NOT WARRANTED BY HIS PREMISES.

Let these mistaken friends turn their attention one moment from cases of obsession to a study of the lives and work of the truly great mediums in the ranks of Spiritualism. Let them interview our inspirational speakers and writers, or our high grade phenomenal mediums, and secure their testimony concerning "the great danger to body, mind and soul" in submitting themselves to the control of their spirit guides, before rushing into print with hastily drawn conclusions.

The trouble is, good friends, you have decided this case before hearing all the evidence. When the testimony is all taken, that of the highest and most exalted mediumship, no less than that of the lowest and most debased, you will be compelled, if I am not greatly mistaken, to render a change of verdict.

No, when all is said and done, when all facts are gathered in, all experiences made known, this truth will, I believe, shine forth as the result of all this discussion and argumentation: MEDIUMSHIP, TO THE INDIVIDUAL, IS A BLESSING OR A CURSE ACCORDING TO THE NATURE OF THE INFLUENCES WHICH SURROUND HIM. That is, if the influences are of a lofty, pure and noble nature, the individual is lifted up, strengthened and immeasurably benefitted by them. If of a low, vile and vicious nature, the individual unless possessed of extraordinary will power and nobility of character, will be dragged down, weakened and hopelessly injured. Whether the results be good or ill depends entirely upon the character of the medium and the nature of the surrounding influences. The control of a pure and lofty intelligence is never injurious. The control of a vile and vicious spirit is never anything else.

It may be said that the breaking down of the individual's power of self-control is the same in either case. It is not the same. An exalted spirit will never seek to control against the wishes of the medium, nor to undermine the medium's power of resistance. He rather seeks to build up, to strengthen, to fortify the character in every possible way, and to inspire the mind and soul with the highest ideals and noblest aims and purposes. An evil influence, on the contrary, does seek to UNDERMINE THE MEDIUM'S POWER OF RESISTANCE AND OF SELF-CONTROL.

He labors incessantly to that end.

His purpose is complete domination.

He seeks to weaken, to destroy the individuality, to dethrone the rightful sovereign of the mind and seize the reigns of government himself. To what end? To the end of gratifying through the organism of his unfortunate victim his own low propensities, his own physical appetites and passions.

The influence of these unseen powers of darkness is harmful in the extreme, and it is little wonder that those who have suffered from it, take a pessimistic view of mediumship. It is little wonder that they rush to the other extreme and denounce the whole system. Yet this is entirely unnecessary, and a very foolish thing to do. Because we have been struck by a thunderbolt and almost killed, shall we thereupon mount the rostrum and denounce in stentorian tones the use of electricity? Or rush into print with a sensational book warning all good people against the telegraph, the telephone and the electric car? Good friends, let us exercise a little common sense. Let us study this subject of mediumship in calmness and in candor, neither refusing to acknowledge its blessings on the one hand, NOR IGNORING ITS DANGERS ON THE OTHER.

There is danger in mediumship.

Obsession is an awful fact in human nature. I was especially interested in the articles written by Chas. R. Hamsley and wife; also in that of "J. L. C.," of Brooklyn, N. Y., because their experiences SO NEARLY PARALLEL MY OWN.

I know what it is to do battle with these unseen powers of darkness.

I know what it is to fight to the utmost limit of endurance for the control of my own organism.

I KNOW WHAT IT IS TO SPEND NIGHTS OF HORROR AND DAYS OF UNSPEAKABLE TORMENT.

I know what insanity is.

I know what desire impels the suicide, for I have been to the very verge of the precipice; and yet do I renounce mediumship, and the help, the inspiration, the exalted states of mind which it brings? NO! I will not throw away a shell which contains a priceless pearl, because a little poisonous viper lies coiled therein. I will dispatch the intruder with all possible speed, and retain the pearl for my everlasting joy and satisfaction.

This is what every medium must do, throttle the obsessing influences at their first inception, and keep his face ever turned TO THE PURE AND BEAUTIFUL, the exalted influences from the higher realms of spirit life.

There is a great work which Spiritualism has to do, a work not yet begun, the work of enlightening ignorant humanity upon the subject of UNSEEN AND UNSUSPECTED SPIRIT INFLUENCES, and the part they play in human life and human society.

On this subject of obsession many Spiritualists are as yet woefully ignorant. Those who understand are for the most part afraid to speak. For a theory has been advanced (by those unacquainted with the facts) and has gained much credence, that evil influences will not trouble a person whose motives are pure and noble, and whose character is above reproach; that it is only the evilly disposed, those of impure lives, low motives, vile passions, who bring around them the powers of darkness. "Like attracts like," it is said. "If you are annoyed by depraved and vicious spirits, it is because there is something wrong in your own life and character. You may be thought a pure and lovely soul by most intimate friends, but in reality, hidden down deep from view, you possess some very wicked traits, or you would never attract such evil influences!"

WHAT AN INSULT IS THIS! How utterly CRUEL AND HEARTLESS to tell a refined, sensitive, tormented and persecuted medium that she has "attracted" the vile fiends into whose clutches she has had the misfortune, through ignorance, to fall! It is little wonder that dense ignorance and darkness on this subject exist, when such idiotic ideas prevail. It is little wonder that mediums whisper their experiences only to one another, and then with the utmost secrecy and many admonitions, fearing lest others may hear and condemn. Away with this opinion. IT IS UTTERLY FALSE.

In the last issue of The Progressive Thinker there is a statement something like this: An evil spirit cannot endure the psychic atmosphere of a good and pure person; cannot approach or do him harm. Now, this is a bald assumption, a mere theory, without a SINGLE FACT TO SUPPORT IT. I could name, if I chose, no less than nine of my personal acquaintances, as good and pure women as ever walked this green earth, WHO HAVE BEEN ANNOYED AND TORMENTED BY THESE UNSEEN POWERS.

The sooner we explode this fallacy the better. It bars the progress of investigation; it keeps the facts from view; it is the cause of withholding knowledge which young and undeveloped mediums imperatively need, FOR THERE IS DANGER IN MEDIUMSHIP. There is untold and incalculable danger in ignorant mediumship. INNOCENCE AND PURITY ARE NO BAR TO THE APPROACH OF FIENDS INCARNATE; neither are they a bar to the approach of fiends decarnate. A sensitive instrument can be played upon by an angel or a demon, and until the instrument is sufficiently developed psychically to distinguish between the two, he or she is as liable to fall into the hands of one as of the other.

Herein lies the danger. An undeveloped medium, in whom the psychic powers are just beginning to manifest, may be deceived for weeks and even months by a wily unprincipled wretch in the unseen, who poses as an unknown friend who has come to aid development, and who is ostensibly acting as instructor in the art of control to the nearer friends and relatives. THE SLYNESS, THE SUBTLETY, THE CUNNING OF THESE IMPS OF DARKNESS is almost incredible. Their game is invariably well played. The medium, conscious of the purity of her own motives, secure in the belief that "like attracts like," happy in the hope of soon reciving loving messages, instruction, knowledge, inspiration from the higher realms, yields herself a willing instrument to the unknown power, which day by day gains greater and greater control of his unsuspecting victim.

BUT SOME DAY THE REVELATION COMES. The discovery is made, but, alas! too late. The unhappy medium wakes from her dream of bliss to find herself in the clutch of a merciless fiend who has gained almost complete control of her organism, and who will not yield an inch. Prayer, entreaty, supplication is of no avail. Moral suasian is of no avail. Nothing remains but to summon one's powers and begin the fight to regain what is lost. THEN THE TORMENT AND THE PERSECUTION BEGIN. NO PEN HAS EVER DESCRIBED THE HORROR AND AGONY OF SUCH A STRUGGLE. NO PEN EVER WILL DESCRIBE IT. ONLY THOSE WHO HAVE PASSED THROUGH IT CAN KNOW OF ITS TERROR, ITS DESPAIR, ITS EXCRUCIATING AGONY, WHEN TO LAY DOWN CONSCIOUS EXISTENCE, WHEN COMPLETE CESSATION OF THE POWER TO THINK OR TO FEEL, SEEMS THE GREATEST BOON THE TORTURED SOUL COULD ASK.

"Evil spirits have no power to harm the good and pure?" It is not true—it is the most damnable falsehood that ever afflicted Spiritualism.

It is true that no medium need accept the evil suggestions of an unseen power. It is true that he is at all times responsible for his own acts But it is not true that a diabolical influence cannot approach him, cannot annoy, torment and persecute him unless there is evil in his own life and character. This is a point I want understood. Reiterated falsehoods on this subject have done and are doing much harm. Goodness and purity are no bar to the approach of such influences when the medium is unsuspecting. They ARE a bar to the carrying out of the evil intentions of such influences. They stand like a granite wall between the desires of the unseen villain and his intended victim. The victim may writhe in the grasp of the evil power, but cannot be made to do its bidding. Over his defenceless head may break the insane fury of a foiled demon, but that wall of character will stand intact. No medium need be drawn down to sin and degradation unless he so chooses. He may suffer unspeakable torture, mental and physical, but he will win in the end and come out of the struggle with all the purity of soul with which he entered it, IF HE SO WILLS.

There will be suffering, but suffering will have an end. The physical health may and doubtless will be undermined, but this can be regained. The moral nature will come out of the conflict untouched and unscathed, for there is no power in this world nor any other that can corrupt an incorruptible soul. To the strong in character and the pure in heart there is no danger whatever, from the moral standpoint, in such an experience. But to the weak-willed and those whose ideals are not of the highest, there is incalculable danger.

The world little knows of the wickedness, the depravity, the countless crimes that are directly attributable to the unseen powers of the air. Many a weak willed, ignorant, unsuspecting wretch is dragged down to infamy and shame because the possession of psychic powers renders him an easy tool in the hands of vicious and criminal spirits on the other side of the grave.

Is Spiritualism responsible for this condition of things? NO! It has merely discovered the fact that such conditions exist. Is the practice of mediumship responsible? NOT AT ALL. These conditions exist where mediumship never was practiced, and its very name is a thing unknown. The simple truth is, that the practice of conscious, voluntary mediumship HAS BROUGHT TO LIGHT THE FACT OF OBSESSION, a condition which exists everywhere in human society, irrespective of religious belief, or of a knowledge of the spirit world, or of the fact that its inhabitants can and do communicate with the inhabitants of this.

Spiritualism is not responsible for the existence of evil beings in this world. It is not responsible for their existence in the other. It is not responsible for the fact that evil spirits, no less than the pure and good, can and do make their influence felt in mortal lives.

It is a fact in nature that one human mind, incarnate or decarnate, can influence and oftentimes control another, when that other makes no resistance, through ignorance or otherwise, to such control. The practice of mediumship, together with the practice of hypnotism, has brought this fact to startled man's attention. In these two manifestations of psychic power, we find, developed and intensified, a power and a susceptibility in the human mind, of which we little dreamed, the power to give and receive suggestions.

Until recent years man has lived in utter ignorance of the mighty power of the thought currents surging and circling round him. Because unseen, they were imagined to be without force, without effect. But the world is learning better. To hypnotism we owe many thanks for discovering to us the power of incarnate man. To mediumship we owe still greater thanks for discovering to us the power of decarnate man. Where ignorance prevails there danger lurks. Where knowledge reigns, there safety abides.

It is well that this subject has been brought up for discussion. It is well that the Great Psychological Crime has been written. Though wrong in its conclusions, it is a work that will do good. It has brought to light a condition which many Spiritualists, very foolishly and very wrongly, have sought to hide. It will be a danger signal to young and inexperienced mediums, a signal which Spiritualists themselves have been loath to hoist.

OUT OF THIS DISCUSSION MUCH GOOD WILL RESULT, NOT ONLY TO THE CAUSE OF SPIRITUALISM, BUT TO HUMANITY AS WELL, AND THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER DESERVES GREAT CREDIT FOR THE PART IT HAS PLAYED IN THUS GIVING PUBLICITY TO AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT HITHERTO TABOOED.

Mr. and Mrs. Anonymous Considered.

Dr. Phelon Stands at the Head of the Hermetic Brotherhood in America. He is an author, a lecturer and an unconscious Trance Medium, and his views will be read by Spiritualists with deep interest, as presenting one of many kaleidoscopic opinions. We take pleasure in again introducing him to our many readers.

Is the latest departure on the line of adverse criticism upon spiritual power and activity. The book is a fine specimen of the art typographical. Its page make-up is just enough out of the beaten track to be novel, without annoying incongruity. Its binding is neat, nice and of good quality. All promise well from this point, for a reader seeking entertainment or instruction.

We open the introductory pages to ascertain the author's name. After a careful search we find that most important feature of every book has not been given. There is no guarantee that the writer's brain is of sufficient calibre to handle the subjects of which the table of contents talks. We always like to hear our friends talk—our enemies, sometimes. But it is rarely that either Mr. and Mrs. Anonymous carries much weight with his readers, either first or last. To compensate in part for this handicap, the publishers have put forward the name and reputation of a brilliant and interesting writer as the editor. They thus concede the anomaly of an author claiming to be able to grapple truthfully and understandingly with one of the mightiest problems of the universe, who cannot edit his own book. Is that a trick of the trade, or like statement of facts, definitions, and sophistical assertions of the plan on which the book is written, and the honesty of the author, in seeking to answer the question, always pertinent, but seldom answered at the start: "Why is this book written?"

The writer's definition of hypnotism is: "The slavery of the human soul." If we only knew what was meant in this definition, by the term, "human soul," we could better judge of its truth. But of all metaphysical phrases, "the human soul" is the most obscurely, contradictory defined, and the least understood of any that belongs to the "New Thought." To me it seems that such slavery amounts to very little in the economy of the Ego.

The thing with which we deal is the body or manifestation of the thought of the spirit. We know so little of the work, power or appearance of the spiritual conditions or accomplishment of this, our real self, few are not able to say: "I know and can fully demonstrate on the material plane. If believers in the truth and reality of spirit existence beyond the limitation of the body are satisfied with the proofs offered to themselves, it really would seem they have as much right to rest quietly in their proofs, as any other person who may deny the possibility of spirit activity after the transition period. In the common parlance, one man's word is as good as another's until the facts are proved." Thus I offer my assertions, against the assertions of the author, with equal confidence of their truth and correct statement.

When we have completed the elaborate and dogmatic exposition of hypnotism, occupying 128 pages of the book, it can be summed up in this: "Hypnotism is the influence of spirit upon spirit, and is a constant activity, either voluntary or involuntary. We are thus moved and influenced from our birth to our death, by the projected thought of others. Like everything else diffusive and intense in its ordinary manifestation, it may become disastrous under the working of concentration."

Man receives his supplies of water from the heavens and the earth, and it must be constant for his best good. Occasionally, he receives from natural causes a concentration in a flood or storm of some sort, and he is a great sufferer thereby. Or he builds an immense reservoir and it breaks away, and he suffers from the sudden letting out of waters. So nearly as a material thing can represent a spiritual condition, the state we name hypnotism, represents accruing spirit power which has no lasting effect beyond the body. As the text states, no person can be hypnotized, unless he wills the surrender of his body, not himself, to the concentrated spirit potency of the hypnotizer. In reviewing commercial hypnotism we must give due weight to the "fakism" that has prevailed. When that is eliminated the remaining evil dwindles down to a much smaller magnitude than this writer would have us believe. So long as man remains twofold, spirit and body, so long will hypnotism manifest itself. But we are masters of our bodies, to receive or reject any inward effect of a concentrating or focussing force upon ourselves. It is never wise to play with fire, nor are we forced to do it, at any time nor place.

The teachings of the masters of Spiritual Science, whether in the body or out, is always that we shall strive to understand the laws by which movements take place on all planes. When our knowledge by experience has crystallized into wisdom, we are prepared to handle the potencies which in the seen, produce effects. We are also told these effects concern only the physical conditions, which are like the foam churned up by the tireless rocks, and nearly as evanescent. Let us understand, too, that in all cases, whatever is used as a setting for any display, by its disappearance destroys that phase of activity, but does not destroy the potency that produces the display. Consequently, all physical changes, resulting from spirit influence, can last only until the body dssolves. At the worst then, hypnotism is of the earth only.

In the division in which mediumship is treated, the allegations adduced against hypnotism are wielded with all the force possible to overthrow its reliability. The method by which a psychic is "developed" by departed spirits is described with great attention to detail. The whole process is similar to the methods used for obtaining like results on the earth plane. For a person who declares he has no gift, belonging to the psychic realm, to penetrate its mysteries, it is, to say the least, very peculiar. Is it possible that a spirit still in the human form, can thus fully and accurately discern the minutiae of any spirit action, even if it did concern the mortal form?

The author in no way hints that the change of worlds has changed the outgoing entity in any fashion. On the contrary, the statement is confidently made as a matter of knowledge, that the disembodied work constantly for the detriment of those in the earth-life, without any restraining power from the All-Good, to prevent the anarchistic horror that would ever brood over the spirit realm. Finally, there is no "Retributive Justice," for something that does not exist. Thus I join issue with anonymous' statement and declare it is not so. More than that, I do not believe that God the Father of Spirits would for an instant permit such a condition of affairs. The whole motive of the book savors too much of the swampy muck of earth.

I believe fully and partially know, they who are gifted to come in contact with the invisibles, have only to agree with those with whom they choose to work, for the self-action and action by proxy to be distinct and not mixed, to be able to do away with all the matters complained of. As we do for those we love while upon earth, so mediums represent the invisible side of life. All living, to a greater or less degree, feel the spirit force of the invisible entities. Those who are SPECIALLY sensitive are very few. May the spirit world forgive this attempt to bring an infamous obloquy upon the workers in the unfolding of that which is really the all of us.

Two Thoughtful Persons Present Their Views.

A Personal Experience—Condemning the Subjective Control.

Dear Mr. Editor:—Seeing that it is your intention to issue a special edition of The Progressive Thinker for the discussion of "The Great Psychological Crime," I shall be glad to contribute to the same a little of my own personal experience with regard to mediumship and the definite conclusion arrived at. Being of an exceedingly sensitive, impressional temperament, I came very considerably under psychic influence during my earlier years, and at one time came very near the TRANCE CONDITION through spiritual control, but my soul gradually awakened to the fact that mental domination, either from those in or out of the body, would be disastrous to the freedom which intuition taught was my spiritual birthright. As that fact became emphasized upon my mind I realized more clearly that a positive mental attitude was necessary to build up an arena around myself, which would keep out intruders during my passive hours, and for that purpose I must conserve the animal magnetism generated in the physical organism, and to the extent that it was drawn from me so long, would clear, self-consciousness be delayed, noting from experience that after each sitting in a passive condition I was more or less physically depleted.

As the author of The Great Psychological Crime clearly states, SELF-CONTROL is the first great law which every human soul must obey or reap the disastrous consequences; so while the battle often raged fiercely, I am today, through that recognition, stronger PHYSICALLY, MENTALLY and PSYCHICALLY, and while I have the greatest respect for Spiritualists as a body, I cannot but state from experience that I believe subjective control to be an insidious process which robs the soul of the power of concentration which is necessary to individual upbuilding.

ELSIE J. LOLE.

He Commends the Book.

My professional work here leaves me no time to write a review of such a book as The Great Psychological Crime. I will say but a word concerning my interest in this work. I ENDORSE THE BOOK FROM BEGINNING TO END. I know both the author and the editor of this second volume of the Harmonic Series. It was through this personal acquaintance that I learned the nature and the danger of certain psychic experiences of my own. By the author of The Great Psychological Crime I was taught the lesson of self-preservation and of self-development, under the higher laws of Independent Development. Though I am but a student, and with little opportunity for the technical work of the School of Natural Science, I have gone far enough to satisfy myself that it is founded on the eternal principles of equity, justice and right. My three years of instruction and my own experiences satisfy me that I am on the right road. Reason and conscience have approved every step of the way. The author of The Great Psychological Crime has come to do a great work, and I recommend this book to every man and woman interested in Spiritual laws and moral philosophy.

More especially do I commend it to the closest, most careful study by those who are known as Sensitives. To these I would say, Do not delude yourselves that your experiences are either safe or reliable, merely because they come from an invisible source. This is indeed the very reason you should know the laws governing these things.

The author of this book knows these laws; but knowledge is best proved by the daily lives of those he calls his students, those who are living their lives, making his philosophy their own.

I sign myself a student in the School of Natural Science.

Making people grow tall has been a hobby with Mr. Minges for years, and the results he has accomplished are startling to a high degree. By his method every man or woman not over fifty years of age can be made to grow from two to eight inches in height, and any one older than that may increase his height perceptibly. His method has the indorsement of leading physicians, and several prominent educational institutions have adopted it for the better physical development of their pupils. If you would like to increase your height you should read the book which tells how this remarkable discovery was made and reveals to you the secrets of how to grow tall. It is free. ECHOES OF THE SYMPOSIUM

LYMAN C. HOWE. MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY.

The Great Psychological Crime

A Comparison of Views and the Reasons Therefor.

Lyman C. Howe, the veteran Spiritualist Lecturer and Medium, a man well and favorably known as one of the foremost thinkers and writers in our ranks, will Champion the Cause of Truth as reflected in Spiritualism, while Mrs Florence Huntley, the well-known Author and Journalist, will defend all the statements in The Great Psychological Crime, which Mr. Howe will dare to assail, making a series of articles instructive, suggestive and inspiring, and which every Spiritualist should most carefully read.

MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY REPLIES TO LYMAN C. HOWE.

My Dear Mr. Howe:—Along with proof sheets of your delayed No. 4 comes a courteous suggestion from the editor that we hereafter confine our letters to a single column. I shall be glad to comply with the suggestion, but since you have the initiative in the discussion, I shall have to crave some indulgence until I have replied to your last four-column letter. I will do so as briefly as the subject will permit, and will then follow you in an effort to shorten our letters

To clear the field of controversy as far as possible, I am quite willing to submit to our judges without further argument, the following points of difference.

1 Whether the kind of "Independence" you have been discussing is not entirely foreign to the subject matter of the book, as well as to the purpose and intent of the author, and therefore irrelevant matter

2. Whether Mrs. Richmond or any other person who is used as an automatic mouthpiece by spiritual intelligences who are unknown to and unidentified by the public, is consistent in attacking the book on the ground that its author is unknown.

3. Whether spiritual intelligences who for many years have been preaching the doctrines of Spiritualism to the world from "behind a woman," are consistent in offering such a criticism of the book, when every utterance to which they have given expression through the lips or the hands of a medium under control, is open to the same criticism.

4. Whether you or any other person who calls himself a Spiritualist, can maintain such an objection to the book, without at the same time and with equal force attacking the verities of Spiritualism itself.

One of the most interesting statements contained in your last letter is this: "In the 50 years that I have been associated with mediums in a large variety of phases and under many varying conditions, I have NEVER MET WITH ONE SUCH CASE." You are here referring to cases which illustrate the destructive effects of the subjective process.

What I have to say in reply is not meant to question your integrity nor your sincerity, but your words do not in the least alter my own convictions on the results of subjective mediumship such as the author defines. Let me explain why this is so.

1. Nearly all my life—and I have been out of my "teens" for some years—I have been in touch with Spiritualists and in position to study the question carefully, for I have many warm personal friends who are not only Spiritualists but mediums also.

Among all the mediums I have ever personally known there is not one but has sustained either physical, mental or moral injury as a result of the subjective process. In a number of instances the injury has been marked in all three directions.

2. Among the contributors to the symposium are a number of such persons who have given to our readers brief, voluntary statements of some of their subjective experiences as mediums and the disastrous results, although not one has given the worst side of his or her experience. These are not fictitious characters, "manufactured for the occasion," as some of the critics of the book have insinuated concerning the cases therein cited.

All of these have signified their willingness to reassert what appeared in the Symposium, or to answer any courteous communications, concerning these personal experiences.

Estelle Metzger-Hamsley, Lafayette Hotel, 12 Harrison street, Chicago. Mrs. Hamsley was at one time a subjective medium, pastor of a large Spiritualist church, where she spoke under control, and a prominent worker in the N. S. A.

Mrs. Hamsley speaks not only from personal experience and a personal sacrifice, but her position as an ordained Spiritualistic minister, and as a "psychic reader" and as a developer of other mediums, gave her for several years the best opportunity for knowing the destructive effect upon other people.

Chas. R. Hamsley, same address. Mr. Hamsley was developed as a subjective medium under the instruction of Miss Metzger, who afterwards became his wife.

Anna Rose McIntyre can be reached with a letter addressed in my care, or in care of the Indo-American Book Co. Address Henry W. Schimpf, 815 Walnut street, Chicago.

Without specific authority, I believe I am not violating a personal confidence when I add the name of Mrs. L. Meyer (Moreau), 133 Pacific street, Brooklyn, N. Y., and Mrs. Meyer's sister may be reached through her.

Dr. E. W. Morgan, who can be reached by letter, addressed in care of Editor Francis, is the one and only regular physician who has gone far enough under "the Author's" independent method to be able to intelligently and safely diagnose and treat these cases of obsession and pernicious control. The history of these cases, as the sufferers come for relief, makes a hideous background for the mediumistic process.

It does not matter how the victim fell into the hands of his invisible tormentors, the results are, generally speaking, the same. The subject may have been a "professional" or a "home circle" medium or a solitary experimentor, or a religious devotee, or the unseen enemy may have merely taken advantage of a physically depleted state, or of what we know as a negative mentality.

When Dr. Morgan adds his treatise on the great psychological crime to the science of medicine, one more step will have been accomplished toward the abolition of human slavery. It is to be hoped that the regular school will appreciate his labors and profit by his great courage, for the acquirement of this independent power in the midst of an enormous daily practise, is a gigantic physical, mental and moral task.

I could refer you to a long list of others, except for the zeal of a personal confidence which honor forbids me to break.

3. Since the book was published I have received letters from all sections of this country and Canada, and some from England and Australia, from MEDIUMS who write to tell me the book is TRUE and that they have demonstrated the destructive nature of the subjective process.

Many of them write asking for help to free them from the torturing and ruinous conditions into which they have fallen as a result of subjective mediumship. Others write asking help for relatives and friends who have gone down under the paralyzing effects of the same process. A number here in Chicago have come to me personally in search of help to release them from their "Controls."

If I had ever entertained a doubt as to the destructive nature of the subjective psychic process (as the author of the book has stated it) these letters and experiences alone are enough to convince me that he has declared a great truth which all the world will be compelled to admit, sooner or later.

4. Among the most prominent mediums who have recently come to me for help, at least three know you personally and tell me that THEY ARE WELL KNOWN TO YOU.

With these FACTS before me, however much I respect your integrity and sincerity, your statement only serves to convince me:

1. That you have not made a careful study of the subjective psychic process for the specific purpose and with the definite thought in mind of determining its effects upon mediums themselves.

2. That possibly you have been so preoccupied with the PHILOSOPHY of Spiritualism as to have given little or no attention to the PROCESS involved in subjective mediumship.

3. That mediums evidently have not made you a confidant in matters which pertain to the nameless tortures they have endured as a result of the subjective process

This last suggestion comes to me with added force, since I have come to know the nature of the suffering which many mediums endure. They suffer in silence and humiliation for years rather than disclose, even to relatives or friends, the nature or cause of their affliction. This I know is true of a number of cases that have come to me very recently, in the hope of obtaining relief. And I can understand how any WOMAN (at least, of normal refinement and moral sensibility would suffer death a thousand times over rather than disclose the facts to any man, unless she knew him to be a specialist and consulted him as her physician in the hope of obtaining release.

The mediums among your acquaintances, to whom I have referred, have not taken you into their confidence, and after having heard a recital of their unhappy experiences I do not wonder that you remain in blissful ignorance of their real condition or of the battle they are making for self-control. But the publication of the book gave them hope, and they have come to me and asked me for help. And they say to me from the depths of their humiliation that "The book is true from beginning to end," and that they have proven it.

With these facts before me, though your statement be honest and sincere, it does not in the least alter my conviction, because I can see and understand why the facts have not come to your attention. I hope you will believe me when I assure you that this is not intended to reflect upon your intelligence or your honesty in the least.

In my last letter I stated in effect that the author has not been considering ultimates in his work. You take issue with me and select a quotation from page 286 to prove your point. This very quotation, had you been searching for the author's meaning, proves your error. The phrase, "so far as science knows," is a very common one used by scientists to indicate that the subject under consideration is beyond the known facts of science.

At page 308, referring to the same subject, the author says:

"The exact scientific significance or meaning of this spiritual or second death IS NOT YET KNOWN WITH ABSOLUTE CERTAINTY."

At page 312, in outlining the position of science, he closes the second paragraph with these words: "But it (science) dares not dogmatize CONCERNING ULTIMATES."

At page 331, he again says: "It is not the province of science to speculate nor dogmatize concerning ultimates. NATURAL SCIENCE DOES NOT CLAIM NOR ASSUME TO HAVE SOLVED THE GREAT PROBLEM OF THE SOUL'S ULTIMATE DESTINY."

At page 334, he emphasizes his position as follows: "What the scientific significance of this second or spiritual death may be is, as yet, THE GREAT UNSOLVED PROBLEM OF NATURE. SO FAR AS SCIENCE KNOWS, this means the death of the soul."

Here again we have the same phrase, "so far as science knows," upon which you rely to make your point. You seem to interpret this as a declaration that science does actually claim to KNOW, when, as a matter of fact, the plain intent is to indicate that the subject matter is beyond the limits of scientific knowledge. In a recent letter Prof. Edgar L. Larkin, director of the Lowe Observatory, California, makes use of this identical phrase, and in exactly the sense the author has employed it.

At page 393, referring to the disappearance of animals from the spiritual plane, the author says: "The natural inquiry of every intelligent mind is, what becomes of them? The inquiry thus far remains unanswered, so far as science is concerned The Wise Men of both the physical and spiritual planes of life have brought to bear upon the problem all the knowledge and intelligence they possess. Thus far, however, the scientific demonstration LIES BEYOND THE LIMITS OF THEIR UNDERSTANDING."

He then says: "With a view to its possible solution, however, the following widely different HYPOTHESES have been made the basis of their study and investigation. FIRST HYPOTHESIS. It is assumed that the disappearance is but a transition in the upward movement of the individual ego, or entity, in its evolutionary progress toward a higher state of individualized intelligence and being."

(And just here let me call attention to the fact that it is upon a similar HYPOTHESIS that you base your conclusion that there is no such thing as a "Destructive Principle of Nature in Individual Life.")

At page 397, under the head of THIRD HYPOTHESIS, referring to the disappearance of man from the lowest plane, the author again says: "Under the opposite principle and process of destruction or devolution he also disappears in a manner which corresponds in every essential particular with the disappearance of the animal

"The question of his destiny as an individual intelligence, in this case, is a matter of even more absorbing and vital interest to those who have undertaken its solution, than is the destiny of the animal.

"But here again Nature seems to hold a secret which defies the detective powers of the wisest intelligences of both planes of life. NO SATISFACTORY SOLUTION OF THE GREAT PROBLEM HAS YET BEEN WROUGHT OUT."

With these words of the author before our readers, I am willing to submit to them whether you have not endeavored to fix in their minds a meaning wholy unwarranted by the context of the book.

And now once more, as to the Destructive Principle of Nature in Individual life. For the first time, I think I grasp your meaning. If so, then there is no room for any dispute between you and the author on this point.

You admit that there are destructive agencies and processes, but hold that they do not apply to nor affect INDIVIDUAL LIFE. You base this conclusion upon the HYPOTHESIS or theory that there is no such thing as ULTIMATE destruction of individual life.

The author admits that he does not know whether this theory is correct or not. But he does not admit it as a demonstrated FACT. Without the least thought of reflecting upon your knowledge, I do not believe you KNOW any more about it than the author. You have advanced a THEORY upon the subject. The theory is an old one. The author recognizes it as such. But until that theory has been proven by you or some one else to be a fact, it is still an "open question," just as the author says. And so it appears by your own statements that it has not yet so "turned out." You have advanced a THEORY, and with that theory as a basis have made a magnificent argument; but until it "turns out" that your theory is a FACT, your splendid argument is without scientific value.

The very fact that the author admits his ignorance of the ultimate destiny of the soul, and does so in almost every conceivable form of expression all through the book, ought to convince any unprejudiced reader that the ultra meaning you attach to the term, "Destructice Principle of Nature in Individual Life," is not that which the author had in mind and intended to convey.

There is that in nature and in individual life which, if permitted to operate unhindered by man's better nature, will lead him in this life backward and downward to physical, mental and moral ruin. We all recognize it and we all understand what the author means when he calls it the "Destructive Principle."

He tells us that the same principle operates in the spiritual life. We all understand what he means. He says that if it is permitted to operate unchecked by man's better nature in that life, it leads him backward and downward both spiritually and morally until he disappears from the spiritual plane in a manner which is analogous to the disappearance of the animal. We all know what he means. He does not attempt to say what is the meaning of this disappearance, except to indicate that the process is undesirable and destructive in its nature.

We all recognize this backward and downward tendency of man as most undesirable in this life. We know what he means when he tells us that it is equally undesirable in the spiritual life.

It appears to me, therefore, but a hair-splitting discussion for us to engage in a dispute which is only calculated to confuse our readers. I do not believe that either of us is up to our best level as central figures in such a performance. Let us get to some phase of the subject which has at least the merit of being a material issue.

In your former letter you narrated an experiment by which you tested the power of your controls to hold you prostrate upon the floor. They succeeded. You admit that the reason was because "I could not try."

I said in my last letter, and I repeat it, that in that simple sentence you have stated the case simply and plainly. You COULD not. If this means anything, it means that your POWER was gone. It is quite a different thing from saying you have no "desire" to rise. Had it been a mere matter of "desire," you would have said, "I did not wish to rise," or "I did not want to rise," or "I had no desire to rise." But you stated the simple fact when you said you COULD not. This, therefore, by your own words was clearly a case of control of your "voluntary powers."

And in this connection I should like to know, for my own satisfaction, what is your own idea or judgment as to the desirability of such a relation or state of being as that which existed during the period while your voluntary powers were subject to the will of your controls? Do you regard it as a "normal" relation or state of being? Do you regard it as a desirable relation or state of being to cultivate or encourage? Do you look upon it as a morally healthy and proper relation or state of being which you could recommend to others for their improvement? Do you believe that any person while in a state of such complete subjection to the will of another is himself personally responsible or morally accountable for what he does during the period of such subjection? Is that the kind of "DEPENDENCE" to which you refer when you say, "Without qualification or reserve I believe in the ABSOLUTE RESPONSIBILITY OF EVERY HUMAN SOUL, and this not because man is free and independent, but because he is NOT FREE AND IS ALWAYS DEPENDENT?"

Is this the kind of DEPENDENCE that, in your judgment, makes a man personally responsible, or morally accountable? If so, then there is indeed a vital issue between you and the author.

In this connection your illustration of the watch seems to me to have its most fitting application. The one central power which starts the machinery and keeps it moving in such manner that the hands accurately indicate the time, is the mainspring, just as you have said. So long as the machinery is in good repair and properly adjusted, the watch will do its work with integrity and reliability, provided the central motive power, the mainspring, is not disturbed nor interfered with. But let anything whatsoever deprive this mainspring of its power or interfere with its normal action, and what is the result? The watch is no longer a reliable time-piece. Its integrity is gone. Its value as a watch is destroyed.

JUST SO WITH THE CENTRAL MOTIVE POWER BY WHICH EVERY HUMAN BEING EXERCISES HIS RIGHT OF SELF-CONTROL. DESTROY THIS AND YOU DESTROY HIS INDIVIDUAL VALUE AS A MAN. HE IS NO LONGER INDIVIDUALLY RESPONSIBLE FOR HIS ACTS.

You say, "There are many ways in which one may be 'influenced' by his fellow men to a degree that may absorb the independent processes of the mind without any direct HYPNOTIC CONTROL."

If you mean by this that there are other psychic processes than hypnotism or mediumship which are sufficiently potent to lead men to the commission of crimes, I quite agree with you. The author also acknowledges this fact, for at page 330, he says:

"Hypnotism and mediumship are not the only psychological crimes possible to individual intelligence. Indeed, they exemplify but two of the many methods or processes by and through which man may subject his fellow man or be subjected to the operation of Nature's Destructive Principle in such manner as to invoke the penalties which Nature prescribes therefor.

"The scope and purpose of this volume, however, are such as to preclude the consideration of other subjects and limit us to an examination of Nature's Destructive Principle in individual life, AS IT EXEMPLIFIES ITSELF IN THESE PARTICULAR PROCESSES OF PSYCHIC SUBJECTIVITY AND PSYCHIC CONTROL.

If I have caught your meaning, it would appear to me that there is one important element of the author's definition of hypnotism that you have overlooked. By reference to it again you will observe that he holds that it is a specific process which enables the hypnotist to obtain, hold and exercise control of (1), the will; (2), the VOLUNTARY POWERS; (3), the SENSORY ORGANISM of the subject. This third elment is the one you seem to have overlooked.

All you say of the force of environment, or even of the action of one mind upon another, might be granted without disturbing the author's position under this definition. To grant all you claim would only mean that there are other processes by which one mind may influence another to a point which you term "control."

It seems to me that your chief misinterpretation of the author's position from the outset arises from the fact that you have unintentionally and indeed unconsciously substituted your own ideas concerning hypnotism and mediumship for his definitions, and have as a result read into his words meanings of your own which are wholly at variance with the author's intentions

I verily believe that if you will take his definitions of these terms and carefully note their specific limitations, and then remember that wherever he uses these words he does so in the LIMITED sense of the definitions, you will obtain a wholly different idea of his position.

I am convinced of this, not only from your own letters, but from the manner in which other writers among the contributors to the Symposium have expressed themselves. For instance, Mr. Tuttle speaks of the fact that he recognizes the advantages of that kind of mediumship in which there IS NOTHING BUT "CO-OPERATION" BETWEEN THE MEDIUM AND THE SPIRITUAL INTELLIGENCES. This is exactly what the author is contending for. But under his definition this IS NOT "Mediumship" at all. Moses Hull also speaks of the "Higher Mediumship," as he terms it, and says that it DOES NOT INVOLVE CONTROL AT ALL. This sort of "Higher Mediumship" to which many of the critics of the book have referred, is not Mediumship at all under the author's definition.

I believe if you will go back over the careful ground work of the book, get the author's definitions carefully in mind, and then read the book through from that viewpoint, you will find that many, if not all, of your most vital objections will disappear from your own mind.

Your remarkable subtlety in the use of words, and your interesting but indirect method of treatment are calculated to confuse your correspondent as to your real meanings and to mislead our audience as to the actual contents of the book.

It is a fact well known to all authors and lovers of literature, that the easiest thing in the world is to so "review" a book as to entirely obscure its real purpose, garble its meanings, and give to it an entirely different tone and quality than its author intended. The Great Psychological Crime, which is the record of a personal instruction, a personal experience and a knowledge of the facts stated, was intended as a text book for students. It was, therefore, written in the simplest and most explicit and least technical style possible to so difficult a subject. To my mind it seems impossible that any reader could tangle its clear statements or misunderstand the limitations of its definitions. I of course realize that you have been forced, as it were, into the position of a critic and opponent which naturally stimulates the impulse to condemn the book, which fear me little to do except to see that interpretations and meanings not intended by the author are not read into it.

If The Great Psychological Crime has a real value it lies in the fact that its author received a most unusual instruction and under a definite method has been able to personally and individually make a study of the related lives and related moral conditions of men both in the physical body and out of it.

It is a simply stated body of fact, a clearly described world of conditions, and its hold upon thinkers, scholars and investigators must lie in its coherence and sanity, its consistency with known science, and its reflection of and coincidence with the spiritual intuitions and personal experiences of its individual readers, and with the observations of trained students of psychology.

This is the kind of book that demands a careful personal reading and study before any radical opinion should be entertained as to either its merit or demerit.

Your graceful but entirely vague treatment of the nature of evil doing and of remedial efforts, and your incomprehensible philosophy of personal responsibility, as far as you have given me the benefit of it, leave you in a position to deny any inference I might draw from your mere words.

For that reason I am going to ask you to give me a definite and specific answer to the following questions:

1. What is your own exact definition of "Personal Responsibility?"
2. On what does it depend?
3. Is crime a necessary factor in or aid to the evolution of man as an intelligent soul?
4. If so, in what manner, and to what extent?

With best wishes for your health and happiness during the New Year,

Cordially and sincerely,

FLORENCE HUNTLEY.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

Hudson Tuttle.

Address him at Berlin, Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

Augustus F. Stockwell: Q. Did people in the days of the Apostles when they spoke of God as Infinite, Omniscient, Omnipresent, understand these terms as we understand them to-day?

A. It would be difficult for those who say they believe God endowed with these attributes, to-day, to define the meaning they attach to these words. As infinitude is beyond human understanding, to say God is infinite, is equivalent to saying that he is beyond our knowledge. The savage comprehends the infinite, as well as the philosopher, for although the latter has vastly greater reach of thought, the difference, compared with the infinite, is as nothing.

There is no doubt the ancients had a very different train of thought awakened by these names of the attributes of God, than is entertained at present. Every one has ideas peculiar to himself or herself. Everyone has a god especially his own, the projection and personification of his own personality.

C. L. Waffle: Q. Was the loss of the ten tribes spoken of in the Bible a reality?

A. These "ten tribes" have been a source of perplexity to Bible students, and learned commentaries, too ponderously profound to be read, have been written thereon. The early settlers of this country were sure they had found the descendants of these tribes in the Indians. Poor Lo has much to answer for, but not the sin of having descended from the "lost sheep of the house of Israel." Beyond the meager statements of the Bible, there is not the least evidence of the existence of these tribes. History is absolutely silent. In no nook or corner of the world, has any tribe or race been found which by any stretch of imagination can be said to belong or ever to have belonged to the Jewish race. If such tribes existed they were almost identical to the roving bands of bedouins, as their customs and methods of thought as expressed in the Bible narrative shows, and their absorption into other nations, a blotting out by their enemies, would have no influence on the history of the world. From that day they have been unheard of, as though the earth had swallowed them and their flocks.

Robert McHenry: Q. A Harvard professor makes some startling prophecies about the draining of Lake Erie, and submergence of Chicago by the rising of Lake Michigan. On what foundation does this forecast rest?

A. It is the supposition that scientific men are above the vulgar eagerness for notoriety, and rather shun than court publicity. The real student of science is so overshadowed by the unknown; so overwhelmed with a consciousness of the narrow limits of his knowledge, that he shrinks from being heralded as having made extraordinary advances. Of late, however, there has been a strife for cheap notoriety which can be gained with far more ease through the press than by investigation and study. So insatiable is the press for news, that it makes no difference how bizarre and unsupported the crass theories may be, reporters are ready to publish with startling headlines, and the public are amused until another aspirant claims attention. All that is required to gain notoriety, and be "featured" in the newspapers, is a reporter capable of writing up "hot stuff."

There has been a series of these "wonderful scientists," "German professors," and "French savans," who have discovered certain disease germs, and anti-toxins. Several have been heralded as having solved the air-ship problem. Airships to carry thousands and thousands of tons of freightage, that cannot raise themselves off the ground!

Every now and then Edison descends to this charlatanry and fills a greedy reporter with "hot air," about some miracled invention he has nearly completed, which being published is never heard of afterwards.

Now comes this Harvard professor, with his conclusions from geological research, and it may be said in passing if such be a specimen of the knowledge taught in the oldest and most distinguished university in this country, it is most pitiable.

It is as plain as geological evidences can make it, that when all the Great Lakes were practically one, and the waters extended far beyond its present limits, the outlet was by way of the Mississippi River. The bluff deposit of the valley of that great stream is secondary evidence of the vast flood which poured to the Gulf.

At that time the land between the Lakes and the river must have been lower, and that at the present outlet at Niagara higher. It is the change of these levels which has wrought the change. These are well-known facts, and the inferences therefrom are old. The Harvard professor would not, probably, claim them, yet he allows the reporter to make him the wonderful genius who alone has solved the problem of the Great Lakes, and like a Jeremiah, wails a doleful prophecy of disaster. There has been great anxiety about the depth of the Lakes, and Chicago had a narrow escape with her drainage canal, because it would lower the level. If the prophet professor's words are true, the government should assist in broadening this channel against the time of need. The professor has it that if the land on which Chicago is built, has been raised up, it can be let down, and that it will be. As for Niagara, that may be jigged up or down, it will not change things for the falls in eating their way back and will soon drain Lake Erie, and the cities along its border will be left far inland, a river flowing through the deepest channel.

For all these assertions prophetic there is not one fact in support. There has been no measurement of the rise or fall of the land at Chicago or Niagara. While it is presumable that the land at the west of Lake Michigan has been slightly elevated, there is every assurance that it has been stationary at least, and apparently there has been a slight elevation, but this has not been measured.

One thing can be determined as accurately as most great world changes, which extend over millions of years, and in which a year or a thousand are as a day.

When the change came, and the outlet set the current to the Atlantic instead of the Gulf, the great torrent, flowing down Niagara river poured directly over the precipice into Lake Ontario. This appears to have happened before the Drift Age, for the first channel worn by the river is filled with drift formation, which by obstructing the flow directed the river into its present course. Plunging over the precipice, it wore its channel from Lake Ontario to the present site of the falls. The present rate of wear has been stated as one foot in a year, but more careful observations, of the rock through which the channel is cut place the wear at one inch in a year, or eight and a half feet in a century, which would make the time of wearing out this channel at 380,000 years. There are eighteen miles more to cut before Lake Erie is reached! And then there is no assurance of the drainage predicted. Chicago real estate will not decline in value, and there will be continued building of vessels. A million years after this Harvard professor has gone to his reward, and his Jeremiad has been forgotten, the Great Lakes will wash their present shores, unchanged.

AN ECHO.

"The Great Psychological Crime."

Heydey! gentle loving spirit
Who comes rapping on my chair,
Will you lead me to the mad-house?
Sink my soul in wild despair,
Lower, lower, bit by bit,
Down through sheol's darkened pit
Till I'm wasted every whit?

Oh, thou shade of my dear mother
Who so lovingly did care
For my feeble, helpless childhood,
With your love so pure and rare,
Will you lead me quite astray,
From the just and virtuous way
Where you taught my feet to stay?

Has your purpose so much altered
That from guiding toward the light
You would plunge my soul in darkness,
Cast it into utter night,
Where on waves of folly tossed—
By the blight of freedom crossed,
Waste and weaken it till lost?

Ah, thou messengers returning
From the realms of life and light,
Seek ye sensitives and media
But to strike them with a blight—
Wayward, like some cruel elf,
Quite disrobing them of self
Hurl them to destruction's shelf?

No! I can't accept such teaching
Though bolstered mountains high
With statistics that are gathered
From the school that's in (his) eye.
When we cross "the great divide,"
There—unless my guides have lied—
We'll try and do some better
Than when anchored on this side.

The School Question.

It is decidedly interesting to note that not all Catholics are of the same mind with Archbishop Quigley concerning the public schools. For instance, as voiced by the Chicago Citizen, the organ of fthe Ancient Order of Hibernians and the United Irish societies of Chicago, there is strong dissent from the position taken by the Archbishop.

It must be remembered, however, that the Romish church has peculiar potent methods of lashing balky churchmen back into the traces as docile bearers of burdens for the church.

After expressing admiration for the Archbishop's frankness in voicing "what many of the sacerdotal cloth feel, no doubt, but do not utter," the Chicago Citizen expresses the trust that this ever will remain a non-sectarian country. It continues:

"We believe in the American nonsectarian public school, and we believe in educating the youth of all races side by side, so that they may grow up as friends, trusting each other, not as enemies suspicious of one another. We believe it would be a fatal mistake to have the American public schools run, or controlled, by ecclesiastics of any creed.

"The supremacy of the state, with all due respect to the able archbishop, is not denial of God. The power of the state comes from the people and the voice of the people has been recognized from classic times as the voice of God. The deity makes the people his oracle, and woe to the people who place any church above the state. The glory of America is that there is no state church—that abomination of true religion—within its borders—no sectarian college of any kind maintained at the expense of the national government

"Why should the state be expected to divide up the school tax fund between fifty or more denominations? Where would this thing end? It may be argued that Roman Catholics pay a large proportion of the general tax, which is true, but so do Protestants, Jews, and others. None of the denominations is asked to double tax itself for purposes of education. All such action is purely voluntary, and if state aid is to be extended to sectarian schools the demand would not rest there, but would extend also to all other sectarian institutions.

"The Roman Catholics, although the largest individual denomination in the United States are hopelessly in the minority in proportion to the non-Roman Catholic population. In a close vote they might hold 'the balance of power,' but such conditions do not often arise. Any bill formulated on the ideas advanced by Archbishop Quigley would be overwhelmingly defeated in the state legislature, and, even if passed, would raise such a feeling of bitterness in the non-Roman Catholic mind as to utterly neutralize any sectarian good it might accomplish. The American Protective Association, which has perished of its own venom, would be stirred to life again and flourish much more vigorously than before.

"'The little red schoolhouse' would be flaunted in the faces of Roman Catholics, who would be accused of being under the temporal as well as the spiritual sway of the pope, and, we are compelled to admit, not without some show of reason. Bigotry always is developed by aggressive sectarianism, no matter from what quarter the aggression may come."

In conclusion the organ of the Irish organization states its belief that the state cannot constitutionally support Roman Catholic, Protestant, or other sectarian schools, and adds:

"We wish to see the Roman Catholic church flourish, but not at the expense of American institutions."

"The Present Age and Inner Life; Ancient and Modern Mysteries Classified and explained." By Andrew Jackson Davis. We have a few copies of this work by the celebrated seer. Cloth, $1.10.

A New Year's Greeting to The Progressive Thinker.

"The model paper of the cause,"
That everywhere doth win applause,
Deserves a tribute high and grand,
Of better words than I command.

But I will do my "LEVEL BEST"—
And let a better do the rest—
Our worthy standard high to raise,
And give it due and fitting praise.

It is a large, a double sheet.
Whose columns stretch an hundred feet,
With print so clear and large in size
'Tis easy read by weakest eyes.

Its contents are of varied kinds,
To fill the needs of many minds,
Though not of bigots, nor of fools,
Who blindly bow to olden schools.

"PROGRESSIVE" is its given name
That well befits its growing fame;
It never lags, nor is it late,
But wide-awake and "up-to-date."

"The Thinker," too, doth well befit
A paper that in truth is "IT."
'Tis full of thought as it can hold,
Which sets to thinking young and old.

Free thinking also it demands,
As one of Heaven's high commands,
And every week it goes the rounds
To help destroy thought's metes and bounds.

For moss-grown creeds it sees no use,
And tears them up without excuse,
For all will truth more quickly see,
Who are from creeds and dogmas free.

Of wily priests it is the foe—
Their tricks and frauds 'tis bold to show;
It knows they are the foes of truth
So it pursues them like a sleuth.

Of truth it is a champion bold,
No matter whether new or old;
It takes it in where'er 'tis found,
"On heathen or on christian ground."

But most it heralds truths new-born,
The truth that gilds the glorious morn
Of this New Era, great and grand,
Whose light now beams o'er every land.

Its columns swell with "Newest Thought."
From spheres above by spirits brought,
And far and wide its teeming press
Dispenses it, mankind to bless.

Symposiums are its special forte,
With columns then an Open Court
It asks of all ere they decide
That they shall hear the Other Side.

The reputation thus it earned
Of being fair to all concerned—
Its friendships, therefore, wide extend
For every reader is its friend.

The plan, its maker calls "Divine,"
Of giving books to all who sign,
Has proved to be a great success,
For 'tis a gift that twice doth bless.

Had I the time, and it the space,
Its other virtues I would trace,
But what I've writ must now suffice,
Lest too prolix should be my vice.

BENEDICTION:

May our great THINKER live and thrive
Till Error's reign it shall survive;
Truth's kingdom may it help extend
Till of its reign There Be No End.

DEAN CLARKE.

What Is the Matter With Spain?

Mr. Wm. E. Curtis contributes a graphic and highly instructive account of the condition of the country and people of Spain, as published in the Chicago Record-Herald. A study of his facts, figures and conclusions will repay the student of economic and religious affairs, as well as the statesman and the common people. Says Mr. Curtis:

"If you will compare the area of Spain under Charles V. with that under Alfonso XIII., the present king, you will see the consequences of religious intolerance, and the fate of a government which has endeavored to control its subjects' consciences and compel them to accept creeds in which they did not believe. It has often been said that no nation with only one religion can survive, and history seems to prove the proposition. It is not a question of faith, however, so much as practice. When the Spaniards began to murder people and burn them at the stake and rob them of their money and lands and expel them from the country because of differences of opinion as to the proper way to worship God the decay of Spain began.

"Nearly one-half of the 19,000,000 population in Spain, or, to be exact, 8,727,519 persons, according to the last census, declare that they have no occupation, and they are proud of the fact. Probably many of them lied about it, and claimed to be idlers when they are actually working for wages. That is enough to explain the poverty of the country, and why the streets are filled with idle young men, who receive small allowances from their fathers and spend their time in dissipation and vice. According to the same census, there are 97,257 persons in the employ of the government, 64,002 retired military and naval officers, 91,600 lawyers, 68,916 doctors, 43,258 priests and only 41,654 school-teachers. A little calculation will show you that there is one priest to every 400 people, and if you will include the 50,933 monks and nuns, which is a very low estimate, you will find that there is one to every 200, while there is only one teacher for every 460 of the population and a schoolhouse for every 2,200. No one believes more sincerely in religion than I, but, as the old yankee lady said, it is not a good thing unless it is lived up to, and empty churches are a very bad sign, particularly if they are large and splendid and cost a lot of money to maintain. Throughout Spain there are too many priests and too few worshipers. In Toledo the other day I counted fifty-eight priests and attendants engaged in the service and only four worshipers. At the same moment in a chapel of the same cathedral eleven priests were chanting another form of service with only two worshipers, and they appeared to be tourists. At Cordova nineteen priests were present, and two old women knelt near by the choir.

"Schoolhouses are very scarce in Spain. More money is paid to support bull rings than the schools. It is estimated that more than $5,000,000 is expended on bull fights during each year, while in 1901 only $1,617,314 was expended for public education. There were more students in the University of Salamanca alone 400 years ago, during the reign of Ferdinand and Isabella, than are enrolled in all of the nine universities of Spain to-day, and, by the census of 1896, more than 68 per cent of the population is illiterate. The exact figures show that 6,104,470 can neither read nor write, 8,417,855 can read a little, while 2,686,615 can read and write a little.

"The act of July, 1902, requires a school for every 500 population, and the minister of education is required to examine teachers to see that they are qualified, and to inspect the schools for sanitary reasons and for discipline, but the law is not enforced, and a few days ago Senor Silvela, recently prime minister, in explaining his retirement from political life, declared that he had reached the melancholy conclusion that his country was not interested in agriculture, industry, trade, public works or public instruction."

THE GREAT PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME

It has created an agitation in the ranks of Spiritualism that will result in great good. The discussion has awakened new thought along new lines, and it has stirred up a veritable Storm Center. In England and Australia an interest has also been awakened that will not subside for a long time. The fact that spirits can and do communicate with mortals, has received no set back; on the contrary the same has RECEIVED AN IMPETUS that will keep it advancing continuously, and great good will result. The Independent Method of seeing and talking with spirits has been demonstrated in the case of a leading physician on the South Side, and his experience has been most wonderful.

Now the discussion will be closed for a time, with the exception of the one carried on by Lyman C. Howe and Mrs. Florence Huntley. Mr. Howe has exhibited remarkable talent in his attack on the book, while Mrs. Huntley's vigorous manner in defending her side of the question shows that she is a lady of brilliant intellect. The interest in the discussion remains unabated.

Only a Matter of Time.

The churches may continue their hostility to the teachings of Spiritualism; they may band against it, denounce it, influence legislation to its prejudice, and even persecute and possibly imprison its votaries; but the fact of spirit communion with mortality will remain unshaken. The thunderbolt has not been forged that can singe a hair of Truth. The glorious development will go on; churchmen one after another, will embrace it; the clergy will universally proclaim it, as many of them now do in their funeral discourses; and, ere the world is aware, the belief will become a part of the Christian creed. Then its present opponents will maintain it was always a cardinal feature in their faith, and that the modern movement was a cruel attempt to steal their thunder.

"Healing, Causes and Effects." By E. P. Phelon, M. D. Price 50 cents.

Science of Religion.

The late lamented Joseph Mazzini Wheeler, of England, wrote the following, which we commend to the consideration of the thoughtful:

"There has grown and is growing a science of religion; a science which treats no faith as infallible and divine, but compares and considers all in relation to their environment and to one another.

"The past century has done much to make possible a science of religion. It has opened up the faiths of the East. Egyptian, Babylonian, and Assyrian inscriptions have been deciphered. The sacred books of the Buddhists, Brahmans, Taoists, Parses, Sikhs, and Confucians have been translated, with the result of showing that Christianity is but one religion among many more.

"Much is gained when a person is induced to recognize this, and to inquire into the grounds and reasons of his own faith in the same calm spirit in which he would investigate another religion; for then already is dispelled that blind worship of inherited beliefs which is really but a form of idolatry. 'Whoever,' said Bishop Watson, 'is afraid of submitting any question, civil or religious, to the test of free discussion seems to me to be more in love with his own opinions than with truth.'"

As science is only demonstrated knowledge, what other system of faith in a future life can furnish the test required to class it with a Scientific Religion equal to the Spiritualists'? All other systems are built on faith in traditions. Ours is built on positive knowledge; therefore it is in fact a scientific religion.

A Little Off.

That man, Robert Blatchford, who wrote the following, must have been a little off in his orthodoxy. We quote:

"Miracles are gone. As Matthew Arnold says, 'they do not happen now.' The modern spirit of science prevents their occurrence. The very atmosphere we live in kills such a belief. The question of evidence does not arise. If I thought I saw a cow jump over the moon, or a man rise from the dead, and float away in the air without artificial aid, I should not hold a solemn inquiry. I should take physic."

That idea agrees very well with the diagnosis and advice of a revivalist, given in a neighboring city some forty years ago, at the conclusion of his evangelical labors at that place, to his new converts. Said he:

"If you get discouraged, feel God has deserted you, and has given you over to the devil, while everything goes wrong, and you think even your friends are deserting you, and that you are destined to endless woe, don't despond. Cheer up. Your liver has become clogged It is inactive. You need a cathartic at once. Be sure to take one, and you will be astonished to see how quickly the black clouds will roll away, while hope will be in the ascendant again."

"Why I Am a Vegetarian." By J. Howard Moore. An address before the Chicago Vegetarian Society. Price, 25 cents.

"Koradine." By Alice B. Stockham and Lida Holt Talbot." In the form of an entertaining story, it contains lessons which every girl should know. Price, cloth, $1.

OUTSPOKEN WORDS OF A PROMINENT SPIRITUALIST, ON "THE GREAT PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME."

THE DISCUSSION HAS BEEN HOT.

The writer of the following, an exceptionally prominent Spiritualist, reprimands in unmistakable language those who have been—from his standpoint—a little too severe on the author of The Great Psychological Crime. While we would have greatly preferred to have the discussion conducted with Chesterfield politeness and mutual forbearance, the same that characterizes the discussion between Mr. Howe and Mrs. Huntley, we must remember that one of the superstructures of Spiritualism, "subjective mediumship," has been severely arraigned before the public, and in such a manner that could not help, figuratively speaking, stirring up a veritable "hornet's nest." Gradually, however, the great excitement that followed the introduction of the book to the ranks of Spiritualism, has somewhat subsided, and the general opinion now among leading Spiritualists is, that the book and discussion will in no way injure Spiritualism, but that the Independent Method of conversing with spirits, having been fully established in Chicago, cannot fail to do good, and eventually greatly promote spirit intercourse over the entire world.—Editor.

THE VIEWS OF A FAIR, TRUTH-SEEKING SPIRITUALIST.

Seldom do I trouble you, Mr. Editor, with communications for your ably-conducted journal, and the only one independent enough to give all sides to the public, relating to the stirring BURNING QUESTIONS OF THE AGE. For this magnanimity of soul, coupled with your sublime confidence in the truth, thousands thank you. Long may the progressive thinkers' flag float.

Carefully reading the conflicting views of Spiritualists relative to this epoch-producing book, "The Great Psychological Crime," I could but exclaim, WHAT A MUX, WHAT A MEDLEY, WHAT A SEA-SURGING CHAOS OF OPINIONS, theories and differentiating dogmas characterize this body of people known as Spiritualists, their Spiritualism coming, so they state, straight from the spirit world through its recognized mediums.

Somebody a while ago wrote a pamphlet entitled, "The Contradictions of the Bible."

The contents were thrillingly telling!

Now, supposing someone should write a book upon "the contradictions of Spiritualism." What rich nuggets, what rare pickings and pasture lands of conflict would they not find? The volume might be named "The Curiosities, Erudities, and Conspicuosities of Spiritualism," or "Spirit Teachings Through Mediumistic Tunnels, Trumpets and Tripods During the Past Fifty Years." The sale of such a book would be a bonanza.

Mrs. Richmond's guides teach that there are no "evil spirits," while A. J. Davis wrote of tricky deceiving diakka, and the Hulls and Tuttles, and Peebles tell of evil-minded spirits exerting deleterious influences upon mortals, and especially some mediums. They also teach the prevalence of obsessions.

With churchmen belief in the Lord Jesus and the dripping, atoning blood does the soul-saving work, while some Spiritualists substitute death as a saving, transforming power. If this be true, the quickest way to get a wicked wretch into the summer-land of heavenly bliss, would be to shoot him or knock his brains out—blessed death!

Some Spiritualists, and among them Mrs. Richmond, teach and insist that there are a fixed number of souls in the moral universe as absolutely fixed as was the number of Calvin's "elect" saints; while Mr. Tuttle's guides teach that souls are being created or evolved now as they were in the past through the mighty, all-energizing law of evolution.

WHICH OF THESE TWO EMINENT LEADERS IS RIGHT?

Whose spirit guides are the most reliable?

Columns of The Progressive Thinker might be filled with similar contradictions, direct and pointed.

And while Spiritualists so differ, and often wrangle among themselves, showing at times "bad blood," a majority of them, just now, unite like Herod and Pilate, and the chief priests of old in crying, "CRUCIFY HIM," misrepresent him, belittle him.

Belittle who?

Why, the substantial author, the literary gentleman honoring the legal profession, the devoted believer in spirit communion, the writer of The Great Psychological Crime.

If a man can commit a crime with his overcoat on, why may he not instigate or commit a crime with his overcoat off? The physical body is only a fleshly overcoat, a maternal wrapping thrown off at death. Hypnotism being a mental act pertains to the invisible as well as the visible world. Now dispute this fact.

But why THIS GALL AND BITTERNESS towards this author as unknown to the great body of Spiritualists as the clear-headed and critical Sar'gis, or as unknown as the unidentified spirits that reel off wildernesses of words and columns of oracular teachings, that need filtering before chemically analyzing and disinfecting before assimilating.

What terrible thing has the author of this book done?

SIMPLY THIS: HE HAS SO STUDIED, SO OBEYED, AND SO PRACTICALLY ADAPTED HIMSELF TO THE LAWS OF THE SPIRIT, SO GROWN UP INTO THE REALM OF THE CALM, THE SERENE AND THE SPIRITUAL, THAT HE CAN GET HIS TEACHINGS DIRECT FROM THE BEAUTIFUL GARDEN-LANDS OF IMMORTALITY INSTEAD OF HYPNOTIC-CONTROLLED MEDIUMS OF VARIOUS MORAL GRADES.

What a criminal this man is!

Is it not desirable for each mortal to grow and reach up into the spiritual?

Is it not ennobling to grasp and glow in the fervor of divine illumination?

If so, why condemn this man?

Why should this book arouse the ire of so many virtue-intoxicated Spiritualists?

Criticisms have gone from the Atlantic to the far-away Pacific coast. In the Philosophical Journal, Dec. 12, a leading eloquent Spiritualist lecturer, who has appeared everywhere on the rostrum, reputed to be something of an occultist, something of a Spiritualist, something of a Theosophist, of a metaphysicalist, of a mental scientist, etc., writes of the "oracular impudence" of this author. He continues thus: "The above bumptious unfounded assertions (referring to the author of the book that has caused the 'Storm Center'), can only excite the scorn and the pity of intelligent investigators," etc.

What a sweet, tolerant spirit!

Really is this an exhibition of the moral influence of Spiritualism? With all the persistence of an attorney and the independence of a free-thinker, I would suggest that this speaker take lessons of modesty from J. J. Morse, and lessons of fraternity from Lyman C. Howe, and others.

It must have been observed that all through the discussions and interchanging of opinions upon The Great Psychological Crime," those writing against it have shown the most nervous irritability, the most acrimonious spirit. THIS IS AN ILL OMEN. It would seriously count against the complainant in a case at law on trial. TRUTH IS TRUSTFUL AND FORBEARING. IT KNOWS NO FEAR. IT COURTS BOTH INVESTIGATION AND ELUCIDATION.

A FAIR, TRUTH-SEEKING SPIRITUALIST.

Worthy of Emulation.

When the great Protestant Reformation, led by Martin Luther, had gained considerable prominence, and multitudes were leaving the Roman hierarchy, and were identifying themselves with the new movement, each accession brought with him some favorite feature of the old faith which he wished engrafted on the new. The result: a bitter feud seemed imminent. Zwingli, a Swiss reformer, one of the noblest and bravest of the leaders, at the close of a speech in which he labored to reconcile antagonistic parties, said:

"Let us confess our union in all things in which we agree, and for the rest let us remember we are brothers."

Noble words! We commend them to Spiritualists everywhere.

MISSIONARIES' MONTHLY REPORT.

During the month of December, 1903, we held 30 meetings, visited 8 towns, organized 5 new societies and served 2 old ones, leaving 7 societies in working order. The eighth town is now organizing, and we will soon return to complete it.

The work of preparation for the state convention is progressing nicely. The convention will be held at Anderson, Ind., in the beautiful Madison avenue Spiritualist Temple. It will probably be called for the latter part of February. The date will be announced soon. Every society in the state is requested to send a representation of delegates to that convention.

Each local society will be represented on the basis of one delegate for its charter and one more for each ten members of the society.

Everything looks bright and encouraging for the success of this convention.

We want to hear from every society in the state that we have not yet visited, or are not in correspondence with, and from every locality where there is a prospect of organizing one. Address me at Rochester, Ind.

PLATFORM WORK.

To the Editor:—Kindly permit me to announce to the Spiritualists of America that I am now free to accept platform engagements for week evenings and Sundays, upon reasonable terms. I shall be pleased to correspond with local societies, or write individuals desiring special work in communities where no local societies exist, with regard to dates. Special care will be taken by me to arrange my route with a view of reducing the expenses of travel to the lowest possible figure. By writing Mrs. Mary T. Longley, secretary N. S. A., Washington, D. C., arrangements can be made for my services as missionary of the N. S. A.

The transition of my noble-hearted, whole-souled friend, Frederic G. Tuttle, and my subsequent forced retirement from the Banner of Light caused a complete change in my plans, and makes it possible for me to make the above announcement with regard to platform work. My health is improving, and so long as I am as well as I am at present writing, I shall have to brave the rigors of a northern winter. Write me at once for dates, in care of my father, Levi P. Barrett, Canaan, Maine.

President N. S. A.

A Hopeful Outlook.

The Protestant Episcopal Almanac for 1904, tells its readers that there has been a falling off in the number of infants baptized during the last fourteen years, of 50 per cent.

Does this fact indicate that in another fourteen years the old-time habit of making Christians of babies before they have brains to think, will be a subject of "innocuous desuetude"? It hath that look.

Another View of the Golden (?) Rule.

To the Editor:—I have read with much interest the comments of Messrs, Baldwin, Wimpey, and Prof. Loveland on the so-called Golden Rule. It embodies the most inherently vicious statement of a so-called moral truth that has come down the ages from a bookless, ignorant barbarism, that has ever challenged the attention of a thinker, and how its obvious crudeness could have escaped the searching scrutiny of the N. S. A. and its president I am unable to understand. As a statement of "infallible" divine truth it is a grotesque humbug; and more perspicuously to show it, Mr. Editor, permit me to quote the "Rule" hec verba, and then analyze it accurately as judges and lawyers analyze language and its meaning in construing the law. Here is the "Rule" (Luke vi:31): "And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."

If Mr. Wimpey were a juror in the box, SWORN to do his duty, both to the state and to the defendant, "and a true verdict render according to the law and the evidence," and the defendant were one of these western outlaws who for years had killed sheriffs, robbed trains, etc., and in the particular case before the jury the crime of the defendant was shown to be one of exceptionally bloody cruelty and beastly heartlessness, the "Rule" as above stated would require Mr Wimpey to vote to acquit the defendant. The word "would," as language was then, and as it is now used means wish and cannot be given any other meaning; so, the "Rule" would require Mr. Wimpey and the other jurors to acquit the defendant murderer. Why? Because if Mr. Wimpey were the defendant he "would" (wish) that the jury would acquit him—without any regard to the question of guilt or innocence. If the Rule read, All things whatsoever that men ought to do to you, do ye also to them likewise, it would them embody a moral truth; as it is, it is much like the rest of the purblind "infallible wisdom" of the "blessed book." As given, it is the embodiment of stupid criminal selfishness; and if it were embodied into the law of the land, under the instructions of the courts, given to jurors in criminal cases, to construe the law according to the plain meaning of the language, and its common and obvious import, it would compel the acquittal of every criminal placed on trial.

Prof. Alexander Wilder Steps to the Front.

The Discussion of The Great Psychological Crime by the leading lights of our cause, has proved an Object Lesson of great importance to Spiritualism. It has brought to the front the trusty defenders of the cause, and great good has been accomplished. Spiritualists are beginning to think along new lines, Prof. Wilder is well known in the East as an author and magazine writer, and his views will attract great attention.

The Great Psychological Crime.

The treatise bearing the title of "The Great Psychological Crime," is described by Mrs. Florence Huntley, its editor, as one of a series of publications intended as a bridge between the definite, demonstrated and recorded data of the historical Spiritual School of Science and the definite, discovered and published data of the modern physical school. The author himself, whose name is not given, explains further that "The central purpose of this volume is merely to erect guide-posts at the crossings and the partings of the ways which lead, upon the one hand, to Life, Liberty and Immortality, and upon the other to Bondage, Darkness, Disintegration and Death."

The first impression which the book makes is that it is chiefly a syllabus of postulates issued ex cathedra. This method would repel rather than attract the thoughtful, truth-seeking inquirer. We are in an arena, not in a kindergarten. Further examination, however, shows that the propositions which the author has laid down as axioms, are rather themes to be considered and passed upon according to their merits. Many of them, indeed, I have verified in my own observation and experience. When mesmerism was first introduced to notice in this country, I witnessed and took part in the experiments. I was not long in finding that the ENERGIES OF THE SOUL WERE IMPAIRED, and that a preternatural, and actually a morbid sensitiveness to the peculiar emanations and spiritual influences of others was produced.

Perceiving this, and the slavish subserviency which was likely to result, I broke my way out, incurring severe calumny and estranging many whom I had esteemed as friends. Yet I have been glad to be able to profit by what I had learned. When the public was startled at the appearing of "Nature's Divine Revelations," the book seemed to me easy to understand, and I thought that I was able to descry many of the sources of the various statements which it contains.

Bulwer-Lytton's two wonderful romances, "Zanoni," and "The Strange Story," also aid an intelligent reader in such investigation, and I regard them as classics. A very fair presentation of the subjects of which the book before us treats, is made by Mr. George MacDonald in "David Elginbrod." It is a work of fiction, but a fiction that is over-true. A person desiring to become well informed in this field of investigation will get from it a conception of "black magic," set forth in a simpler way than that of Bulwer. The mastery which Von Funkelstein exercised over Euphrasia Cameron, illustrates fairly the "psychological crime" which our author is describing. The charlatan by concentrating the energy of his will was able to make her go to and fro at his pleasure, and to compel her by suggestion and command to open a casket and purloin certain of the contents. Finally she is made able to free herself from the execrable bondage. But her case is similar to that depicted by Holmes in his story of the girl participating of the snake-nature. The life-forces had become so interblended with the occult evil influences that the separation was soon followed by death.

The present volume is an explanation upon scientific lines of treatment.

The book is divided into three parts: I. Modern Hypnotism. II. Spiritual Mediumship. III. Retributive Justice. There is also a supplement containing "Theories of 'the Wise Men,'" and an Editor's Postcript, defining her purposes and views.

The first part opens the subject with three propositions:

"1. A Psychological Crime is a crime against the intelligent Soul or essential Entity of Man.

"2. A Great Psychological Crime is such a crime against the intelligent Soul of Man as deprives it of any of the inalienable rights, privileges, benefits, powers or possibilities with which God or Nature has invested it.

"3. The Great Psychological Crime is that crime against the intelligent Soul or essential Entity of Man which constitutes the central theme of this volume, wherein it is defined, analyzed, illustrated and elucidated."

Hypnotism is described as a special branch of Mesmerism, and is defined as the process by and through which one person obtains, holds and exercises control of the will of another; also the psychic relation existing between the two persons during the hypnotic process.

The late Thomson Jay Hudson, in his work on "The Law of Psychic Phenomena," insisted upon the "utter impossibility of victimizing virtue and innocence by means of hypnotism." This, to say the least, is a surprising statement. Professor Quackenbos, in his treatise on Hypnotism, also declares that "will-power has nothing to do with hypnotic suggestion," and that the hypnotic subject "is in no degree subject to another will." Yet in the same book, before making these assertions he had already laid down dogmatically the proposition: "Hypnotism, or hypnotic sleep, implies a mind-condition in which the mental action and the will-power of a sensitive subject are under the control of an operator who has induced the state."

THE GREAT DANGER OF HYPNOTISM.

Other writers of equal authority are cited who abundantly confirm this proposition. They set forth that "hypnotism may be induced by impressing profoundly the mentality through all the senses"; that the operator shall concentrate his energies and earnestly Will"; that he should act with a cool, collected mind, and a firm Will, while the patient is perfectly passive; that "the simple will can profoundly overthrow the physical, intellectual and moral organization of another man;" that "the hypnotized subject will become physically blind at the operator's will"; that he can be made to "sign a promise, draw up a bill of exchange, or any kind of agreement, write a pelographic will (which would be legal in France) and fulfill minutest legal formalities with a manner which would deceive the most expert law officers."

More than this. Many can be hypnotized against their will who had never been operated upon before; and it is added, that a person so affected "will ever afterward be your subject."

TOTAL RUIN OF THE SUBJECT.

Examples are given to verify these statements, in which the results were the total ruin of the subjects morally and mentally, insanity and suicide.'

The author gives a theory of the process, by setting forth the "two organisms" of man, the physical and spiritual, and quoting the mistranslated passage: "There is a natural [Greek, psuchikon, psychic] body, and there is a spiritual [pneumatikon] body." In the Bible it may be remarked, the soul or psychic entity is considered as the individual selfhood, and the spirit as the diviner intellect—the "mind" with which men "serve the law of God." Romans vii:22 ,25.

In the chapter on "Physiology and Pathology of Hypnotism" the author explains that the hypnotic process is directly the reverse of the evolutionary process as the latter takes place during the pre-natal period. "Its first effects," he declares, "are registered upon the third or intellectual brain [the cerebrum], its deeper effects upon the secondary brain [the cerebellum], and its final effects upon the primary brain, or medulla oblongata."

This final result, he remarks, is seldom produced by western operators, but is more frequently effected in the East. It is characterized by a complete suspending of physical animation. "Every function of the physical organism is totally arrested. Even respiration ceases. Circulation stops. The body, in some instances, becomes cold and rigid. To every outward appearance physical death has actually occurred * * * Notwithstanding this complete suspension of all functional activity of the physical organism, the subject is even more intently conscious of every thought, intention, and mental impulse of the hypnotist than he is during any of the less profound states of hypnosis which precede the condition."

He insists accordingly that hypnotism is a relation which Nature does not contemplate; that the hypnotic relation is abnormal, a violation of natural law. Yet if there is a physiology for it, there must be a natural law according to which it is carried on and its manifestations take place. The facts which he adduces, that the hypnotist cannot hypnotize everybody, and that generally he is unable to hypnotize anybody at the first trial, are by no means conclusive evidence in rebuttal to this.

They are simply analagous to the facts in everybody's experience, that we do not always attract the favorable regard of other persons at the first time of meeting, and that there are those whom we cannot placate at all.

CURES BY THE HYPNOTIC PROCESS.

The denial of our author that cures are ever affected by the agency of hypnotism, I think, is going too far. In regard to the peculiar effects produced by suggestion, I am not able to judge. I do not doubt, however, the statement that mental aberration and insanity are sometimes the sequences of hypnotism. It is in accordance with the nature of things. Yet our author seems to overlook the fact that such results do not logically constitute an argument with medical men against its employment. When any poison or other agency has been discovered, which is capable of doing deadly harm, it is their practice to set immediately about employing it as a remedy. The word "pharmacy" originally meant the art of concocting poisons. Certainly it is as rational, as moral and philosophic to attempt cures by hypnotism, dire as its evils may be, as is the current practice of administering poisons for disease, and of injecting the human body with viruses and putrid products from the bodies of animals.

IN ACCORD WITH THE BOOK.

When, however, the author denounces the practice now flagrant and frequent, of offering instruction promiscuously for money which is described as enabling the learner to gain control over others for his own personal pleasure and advantage, I am in perfect accord with him. If such control can be thus obtained, then the offer is itself criminal; if it cannot, then the individuals making it are guilty of fraud..

The moral principle in the matter is the simple one, and of universal application: "Love worketh no ill to the neighbor." "Charity seeketh not one's own as its supreme aim, but rather the best good of others." In short, perhaps, it may be

—"excellent
To have a giant's strength, but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant."

MEDIUMSHIP CONSIDERED.

In the Second Part, Spiritual Mediumship is the subject. The author has trained his guns upon it as being the most important point for attack. He frankly admits that mediumship is a fact; that the essential part of our being, the soul, continues after the death of the body, and may, under certain conditions, come into contact with those who are still in the physical body, and may even control the will, voluntary powers and sensory organism of susceptible persons, using them as mediums.

Although orthodox scientists and many others dispute these admitted facts here stated, they have been recognized all over the world for thousands of years. Our psychic being is as real as our corporeal existence, and indeed more so. It gives form to the body, imparts life to it, and manifests itself by sensibility, desire and activity. There is the further belief among human beings deeply impressed upon their consciousness, that when the body is laid aside at death, this psychic entity, being an essence antecedent to the body, continues to subsist after this separation as a distinct personality. Having the essential qualities of essence and moral character, it is certain to be more or less capable of making itself manifest to others, and even to individuals still living in the earth. Thus we may adduce the example of Johann Friedrich Oberlin, the celebrated pastor of the Ban de la Roche in Alsace, who had interviews with his deceased wife, and recorded the fact. He had before declared his utter disbelief of such occurrences, but tangible evidence in his own case and that of others convinced him of their truth.

MEDIUMSHIP AS SPIRITUAL HYPNOTISM.

Our author defines mediumship as the process by and through which a spiritual intelligence obtains, holds and exercises control of the will, voluntary powers and sensory organism of a medium; and hence it is "nothing more and nothing less than spiritual hypnotism." Before proceeding further he classifies its various forms as follows:

I. Impressional Mediumship. This may be conscious or unconscious. In the latter division he places the inspirational speaking and emotional insanity.

II. Muscular Mediumship. Under this he specifies the Ouija board and automatic writing.

III. Neurotic Mediumship. This embraces clairvoyance, clairaudience, impressions of touch, taste and smell, and other delusional insanity.

IV. Trance Mediumship. Under this head are enumerated speaking mediumship, materializing mediumship, and likewise obsession, which, he remarks, is generally recognized as insanity.

V. Independent Slate-Writing.

VI. Trumpet-Speaking.

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES IN NATURE.

The principle which underlies these distinct forms of mediumship, it is remarked, cover the entire field of mediumistic control. There are two fundamental principles in Nature, the constructive or "normal," and the destructive or "abnormal." The author, speaking for "Natural Science," affirms that mediumship is hypnotic, involving the same character of subjection as hypnotism, and therefore the process is destructive. He argues the identity of the two on several grounds, such as both involving control of the will and voluntary powers, the phenomena being identical, and likewise the physiology of both processes.

THE DESTRUCTIVE PRINCIPLE.

The predominance of the "destructive principle in mediumship, is set forth with great plausibility and tenacious insistence. THIS HAS LIKEWISE BEEN ACKNOWLEDGED BY INTELLIGENT SPIRITUALISTS. The late Cyrus O. Poole used to remark that mediums were apt to "peter out." Jacolliot mentions a similar result which he observed in India. A fakir whose performances indicated powers far exceeding sleight-of-hand and were indeed extraordinary, was seen by him some years afterward in a public institution broken down and almost an idiot. Our author explains the reason of this decay: "IT IS NECESSARY FOR THE SPIRITUAL CONTROLS TO APPROPRIATE AND EXPEND THE MEDIUM'S ANIMAL MAGNETISM AND VITAL ENERGY AS RAPIDLY AS THE SAME ARE GENERATED BY HIS PHYSICAL ORGANISM."

Perhaps another fact in physiology may be here pertinent. An organ of the body which is long unused, becomes atrophied and weakened. MAY IT NOT BE THE FACT THAT THE BRAIN OF THE MEDIUM, OR OF A HYPNOTIZED PERSON, WHEN NOT DULY EXERCISED BY THE INDIVIDUAL HIMSELF, IS LIABLE TO SUCH DEGENERATION AND DECAY?

Among the ill consequences imputed to the mediumistic process are simple nervousness, insomnia and nervous prostration. The medium loses independent control of the voluntary organs of the body, and there ensues loss of memory, with inability to hold the mind intently on a subject, or to think consecutively. The moral stamina also becomes deteriorated, and so restraint is correspondingly removed from the appetites, passions, emotions, desires and propensities.

MEDIUMS ENTRAPPED INTO DARKNESS.

The explanation is made that the individual at death enters upon the life beyond, just the same as when he leaves this life, neither better nor worse for the change. Having the same impulses as before, and unable to gratify them on the spiritual plane, he learns through the hypnotic art how to gain control over the physical organism of some person yet in the body, and thereby to procure some partial gratification. Those who operate in this way are described by the author as being "in the first spiritual sphere," and closely bound for the time to the plane of physical nature. They find it possible by the hypnotic process to attach themselves to those who are yet in the flesh, and so they adopt the profession of "spiritual controls." They find mediums whom they can control, and through them they educate others. In order to divert criticism and to prevent themselves from being detected, they adopt the cunning pretense of unselfish devotion to the cause of Spiritualism. In this way, it is asserted that mediums have been entrapped into drunkenness and other gross indulgence, of which they would not otherwise be guilty.

This specific imputation, however, is not directed by the author against Spiritualism alone. Emotional religion is included by him in the same category. Intense emotion, he remarks, produces paralysis of the will, and this involves a negative condition of the intelligence, which opens the door to mediumistic control. It must be confessed that there is much truth in this statement. Revivals of religion, as they are popularly termed, are frequently produced by agencies of a purely hypnotic character. The conductors of the religious exercises on these occasions may very generally be observed to be individuals with large back head, capacious abdomen, great force of will, aptness in making mesmeric gestures, peculiar fascination of voice, and skill in devices to impress and entrance the senses. "The magnetic conditions," the author affirms, "closely resemble those of the Spiritualistic seances." It is not necessary, however, to pursue the parallelisms further. Raptures similar to those religious revivals were peculiar to the Bacchic rites of former times, and indeed are still common in modern religions, Oriental and Occidental, Hindu, Muslim, or in the various Christian communions. The laws of manifestation are the same, and the phenomena are analogous.

LASHED WITHOUT SHOW OF LENIENCY.

The author duly classifies the individuals known as mediums, and criticises them accordingly. Those whose motives are good receive some scant praise, and those who have no special good or bad motive are passed over without praise or blame. But the "business mediums," the "ambitious mediums," the vicious mediums," and the "fakir mediums," who practice the art for selfish or mercenary motives, are lashed without show of leniency, and their modes of procedure in abnormal and illegitimate ways, set forth in plain terms.

MEDIUMSHIP AND INSANITY.

In the chapter on "Mediumship and Insanity," it is declared to be "reasonably certain that more than fifty per cent of all the insanity in the United States is the direct result of the mediumistic process." The same rate is also believed to exist in Europe. But "mediums" are not held solely accountable. MEN AND WOMEN WHO ARE TOTALLY ALOOF, FALL INTO NEGATIVE CONDITION OF MIND AND BODY FROM A GREAT VARIETY OF CAUSES.

The various forms of hysterical insanity, religious insanity, religious mania, emotional insanity, and so-called "delusional insanity" of all kinds and degrees, the author asserts, "might all be included in one general class, and properly designated as 'Mediumistic Insanity,' or 'Subjective Insanity.'"

RETRIBUTIVE JUSTICE.

Part III. is entitled "Retributive Justice." In it the author arraigns hypnotism and mediumship, each as a subjective, psychic process, which paralyzes the will and voluntary powers of the subject, and deprives him of his own free and independent control and exercise of those attributes of the soul upon which he must depend for the achieving of individual immortality, self-completion, and happiness here and hereafter. They are therefore manifestations of the destructive principle in Nature, and their outcome "so far as science knows, is ultimate dissolution, disintegration, total individual extinction, and a resolution of the individual entity, physically, spiritually, and psychically, back into the original elements from which it came." "This," he adds, "is the 'second death,' 'spiritual death,' 'the death of the soul,' and in fine, 'THE GREAT PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME.'"

INDEPENDENT SPIRITUAL SELF-DEVELOPMENT.

The purpose apparent in the volume is to present an issue between Spiritualism as founded upon the testimonies obtained through mediumship, and "the fundamental principle of independent, spiritual self-development. The author claims to have developed in this way the ability to exercise his spiritual sensory organism independently, self-consciously and voluntarily at any time. He protests that he is not a medium, never has been a medium, never has been hypnotized, never has been mesmerized, never has been a subject of psychic control in any form, degree or manner whatsoever.

MEDIUMSHIP AND HYPNOTISM.

It appears hardly possible that a person should write intelligently upon mediumship and hypnotism, except from his own individual experience, or by intimacy with those who have had such experience. Our author disclaims any subjection to "psychic control." Nevertheless it seems evident that some such control or inspiration so derived was the cause of the writing of this book. He is doubtless sincere in his denials, but the authors whom he has quoted make it plain that individuals may sometimes be "hypnotized against their will," and even without their own conscious knowledge. If this may be done by professional operators it may also be effected by disbodied spiritual beings. We are doubtless all of us influenced by individual spirits or groups of spirits. There may be a close rapport with them, an intimate interblending, in which there is no external consciousness. Bunyan has described an evil spirit so instilling his suggestions into the mind of his Pilgrim that poor Christian for a time conjectured them to be his own thoughts. In specific instances there is a consciousness more or less vivid, and then the mind of the individual becomes the medium for manifestation. The normality or abnormality of the occurrence depends upon the moral character of the spiritual being as well as upon the peculiar moral condition of the intermediary himself or herself.

BIBLE MEDIUMSHIP.

The Bible gives numerous examples of such mediumship, induced by agencies similar to those which abound at the present period. Balaam the prophet was said to make use of enchantments [nahashim] (Numbers xxiv:4). Elisha became inspired when a minstrel played (II. Kings iii:15.) The book of Daniel abounds with accounts of manifestations in which the prophet, as is usual on such occasions, exhibited great disturbance of mind and body. In the eleventh chapter there is an outline of the history of Egypt and Syria during the rule of the Macedonian kings, the Ptolemies and Seleukids, down to the rise of the Hasmonean priest-rulers in Judea. The prophet describes this account in the preceding chapter as having been given to him by a spiritual being after he had undergone a peculiar course of preparation. He had been "mourning" for three full weeks, eating no pleasant food, and taking neither flesh nor wine. Standing with others by the river Tigris, the vision appeared. He alone saw it; those with him saw nothing remarkable. He beheld a radiant personage, and immediately he had no strength left, but lay in a trance with his face to the earth.

He was evidently enabled to see and hear his visitor by the preparation which he had undergone. The prophets of Palestine, the nablim or mantic persons, appear to have been "developed" as such by special teaching and discipline. We read of King Saul that he was obsessed by an evil spirit, and that David repeatedly exorcised it by playing on a musical instrument. There was also said to be a school or company of prophets at the naioth or colleges in Ramah, over which Samuel presided. When Saul sent messengers there twice to arrest David, they were seized with the afflatus and "prophesied." Then Saul himself went and likewise became ecstatic. "He stripped off his clothes also and prophesied before Samuel in like manner, and lay down naked all that day and night." (I. Samuel xix:18-24).

It may be pleaded that these accounts from the Bible are not historic. It is certain, nevertheless, that they would never have been written except that there had been actual occurrences and manifestations of the kind described. They show that spiritual mediumship as it is now termed, was recognized at that ancient period, and also that the "schools of the prophets" were for the purpose of "developing" as well as instructing.

TRANCE AND ECSTASY.

Trance and ecstasy were recognized in those days as akin to madness. When Elisha sent the young prophet to anoint Jehu as king of Israel, the officers at Ramoth Gilead called him a "mad fellow (II. Kings ix:11). When the high priest Jehoiada established the house of David on the throne of Jerusalem, he enacted a penalty against "every man that is mad and maketh himself a prophet" (Jeremiah xxix:26).

An important historic fact is too often overlooked. To every religion, both ancient and modern, there has always been a twofold aspect. On the nobler side may be seen the higher aspirations of the soul, sublime experiences, the lofty conceptions of divinity and spiritual life. At the other hand are found the concessions to human infirmity, such as cruel customs, barbarous superstitions and even gross sensuality. Hence every religion has been described according to the view which has been taken. Every one sees what he has the eyes to see and disposition for noting. It may be a sublime theism, a celestial harmony, or a gross, cruel sensualism. Plato in the "Dialogues" has given a glorious concept of the divine life as illustrated by the rites in the Mysteries; yet Alkibiades, also a pupil of Sokrates and an initiate in the Rites, found in the same things abundant material for profane sport.

NOT ALL WHO ARE INSANE IN THE ASYLUMS.

Every enormity and abnormity which is imputed to Spiritualism and spiritual mediumship, had already been charged to other religious bodies. Upon such charges of implety, disloyalty and loose morality Christians in the earlier centuries were proscribed in the Roman empire. Even now the imputations are by no means unfrequent. It would be no easy task to show more general immorality in the Spiritualist ranks than in other social or religious circles. And if facts could be shown in regard to insanity, the ranks of business exhibit mental aberration fully as general. FOR EVERY INSANE SPIRITUALIST, there may be found several in other departments of life. Not all the insane are in asylums, and not all in the asylums are insane.

NO SERIOUS DANGER ANTICIPATED.

The "Storm Center" which is now present can hardly be indicative of serious danger. The only things in peril are those that are always liable to be shaken. Our author has shown many of these, and we can afford to acknowledge what is just and true, and that what is evil and destructive shall be eliminated.

A VERY NECESSARY PURIFYING.

The separating of the tares, the poisonous darnel from the wheat, is a necessary purifying, and makes what is left of greater value. It is the proper work of the men of the household; it is a confession of weakness to appeal to others, lawyers, physicians, clergymen, or masons to engage in the work. When the winnowing-fan passes over the threshing-floor, only the chaff is disturbed.

SPIRITUALISM HAS ITS MISSION.

Modern Spiritualism has its mission. Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote of it in 1858 in words which still are true:

"While some are crying out against it as a delusion of the devil, and some are laughing at it as an hysteric folly, and some are getting angry with it as a mere trick of interested or mischievous persons, Spiritualism is greatly undermining the traditional ideas of the future state which have been, and are still accepted—not merely in those who believe in it, but in the general sentiment of the community, to a larger extent than most good people seem to be aware of. * * * You cannot have people of cultivation, of pure character, sensible enough in common things, large-hearted women, grave judges, shrewd business men, men of science, professing to be in communication with the spiritual world and keeping up constant intercourse with it, without its gradual reacting on the whole conception of that other life. It is the folly of the world, constantly, which confounds its wisdom."

DR LYMAN ABBOTT AND SPIRITUALISM.

Dr. Lyman Abbott also, somewhat reluctantly, has acknowledged the same thing. He finds fault with mediums, the spirits themselves, the methods of communication and the little which has been accomplished, and adds:

"But Spiritualism would never have had the power which it once had and is now losing, had it not borne witness to the truth which the church of Christ has often ignored, and sometimes denied: that death is not a cessation of life, but transition; and that the dead are not dead, but living—are not even departed, but living near at hand, having only stepped over the threshold into the other room."

Thus the leaven is leavening the whole mass. Spiritual mediumship has indeed "brought life and immortality to light." It has made vivid the conviction that we all are brothers and sisters, because we do not part company at the grave, but live on permanently in communion with one another. WE CAN AFFORD TO OVERLOOK THE SHORTCOMINGS OF THE INDIVIDUALS WHEN WE CONTEMPLATE THE SUBLIME TRUTH which they have made known.

In the dissemination of this truth all may help, as having a common vital interest in the matter. Even those who criticise its promulgators obtained their weapons and ammunition from the same sources. While, therefore, I may differ even diametrically with many others, I can recognize them fraternally as fellow-laborers in the same field, and esteem them accordingly.

THE FOUNDATION IS SURE; AND NOW LET THE SUPERSTRUCTURE BE SUCH AS CAN ABIDE THE FIRE.

THE MINISTRATIONS OF PAIN.

What has Pain to do with living?
What has it to do with giving
Us a higher birth?
But to bring within subjection
Every power, and every section
Of our life of earth.

But to place the standard higher,
To which man should e'er aspire
On his earthly way;
Never thinking of repining,
When we know the soul's refining
In the shadows lie.

When we know what Pain is reaping
When he holds us in his keeping,
We should never say:
"I would never had this trouble,
Oh! could I break it like a bubble—
Throw it all away!"

Don't you know that every moment
You take from life a power potent
All your life to sway?
Take from it a power golden,
And to which you are beholden
For rich gems along your way.

You are sowing to the ashes
A magic power, e'en tho' it clashes
With the heart's desire;
Oh! its wondrous power is moulding—
Your whole being it is unfolding
By its magic fire!

And your soul will break asunder
From the darkness—and you'll wonder
Why you never lived before
Quite so close to Nature's keeping,
And the higher truths were reaping—
Blossomed at your very door!

But you needed just this sorrow
Ere you could the sunshine borrow,
Or see the flowers bloom!
Nature has within her keeping,
Sunshine—that is for our reaping—
Oft we find it through the gloom.

Trees must needs be watered ever,
Ere the sunshine and the weather
Will bring forth the flower.
So is Nature with us dealing,
Justice, in all things revealing,
In Life's sunshine and its shower.

And we'll learn that Pain and Sorrow
Never came to us to borrow
Or to trespass on our life;
But to bring to us redemption,
And the richness of possession—
The just chattels of a life.

SOMEWHAT ON THE FENCE.

He Is Not Convinced Either Way.

The Great Psychological Crime, as proclaimed in that book, is no crime at all.

If so, whose?

It is with considerable hesitation I write this article for your valuable paper, after having read the arguments for and against the book called The Great Psychological Crime." I am somewhat like the Irishman who listened very attentively to the arguments of the attorneys in a criminal case against one of his friends. He was heard to say as the attorney for the plaintiff closed his argument, "Begob, I belave me friend is guilty;" but after listening carefully to the attorney for the defense for nearly a whole day, he thought his friend was innocent, and after the attorney for the plaintiff had closed his final argument, he did not know about it. So, it is with me after carefully reading the several excellent articles on The Great Psychological Crime, I AM NOT CONVINCED EITHER WAY.

I have been an investigator for nearly fifty years; and have had considerable experience with mediums of all phases. I have helped to develop quite a number of good mediums, both physical and inspirational, only one of whom is working as a public medium at present, the others being private, and do not make any charge for their gifts when prevailed upon to give something to friends, and while neither of these have gone wrong in any way, I know of a number of so-called mediums, who have deviated from the "straight and narrow path;" yet the percentage of the genuine spiritual mediums" that do go wrong or are ruined in any way, caused by being a medium, is very much less than that given in the book. (I believe that in one place the author states that 95 per cent was in some way affected for the worse.) Now, if these figures were transposed, and say 5 per cent bad and 95 per cent good, we would allow the figures to go unchallenged. However, it may be the author of the book had in mind only public mediums, including all those fakirs who pass themselves off as Spiritualists. Chicago, and all large places like it, ARE FULL OF THEM; they claim mediumship in order that they may gull the public, but more especially the honest old Spiritualist, who can see nothing wrong, if it bear the label "Spiritualism."

Now, I would not care to discuss the question if the author of the book has taken in everything that he runs against in Chicago or any other city, but if he will confine himself to the genuine article, I will be able to prove that not over 5 per cent of the genuine mediums are traveling, and really doing public work for money, and the other 95 per cent are working in their own homes. THEY ARE HONEST, highly cultured, loving wives and husbands who love home and family above all else, and are doing a quiet work that is surely eating its way into the hearts of all classes of people, and honeycombing all churches and societies.

Then, again, among those who are working in public places and who are entitled to pay for their honest services, including lecturers and physical mediums, I am certain not 20 per cent go wrong. But suppose for argument's sake that even 25 per cent went wrong at some place in their career, would that be any reason why we should stop developing mediums? Not at all.

"The greatest good to the greatest number" is our motto. If you object to this saying, then you oppose all things that Spiritualism teaches, viz., PROGRESSION. If we were to stop everything where human lives were sacrificed, there would be no education, no railroads, no buildings, no coal to keep us warm, nothing to eat, and we would all go back to barbarism. Then we would kill one another in our savage and ignorant life.

In our opinion, there has never been a religion so firmly established in fifty-five years, in any age of the world, with as little friction and loss of life as Spiritualism. Then, why worry about THE SMALL PER CENT who become daft or loose in character in some way, when there are so many good, honest, whole-souled mediums working out their "Karma" in this life for the great cause that makes us all happy in the fact that we live at all, and when we become fully acquainted with Spiritualism and its philosophy, we are made happy by learning that we are here to work out our own lives as best we may, and the only one who can become so spiritual that he can govern his own material body, is the one who is living the life of the spirit in the highest, and when such a person passes from his earthly body the transition is hardly perceptible to the spirit.

Such a life is what we should live here on earth now, not waiting until after the passing on. We have nearly all started to investigate this beautiful philosophy through some medium. We never would know for sure of the life hereafter until we passed over, if it were not for our experiences with some one who was so sensitive they could span the boundaries of earth and the home of our dear ones gone before. Then why trouble about the martyrs who fall by the way? Have they not fulfilled their duties as the spirit world would have it? The soul has earned its reward—EXPERIENCE, which it was placed on earth to get, and to your humble servant it seems that if a crime has been committed, it was in sending out such a book as The Great Psychological Crime, as it may be the means of keeping a large number of persons from developing into mediumship, and thus keep thousands of souls in ignorance of the beauties of our spiritual knowledge.

Will Add Thousands to Spiritualism.

To the Editor:—The Great Psychological Crime will be the instrument in adding thousands to the ranks of Spiritualism.

Why?

Because those who do not want the Subjective method of mediumship whereby to carry on a conversation with their spirit friends, will seek the Independent Method, which has proved a great success. The author of The Great Psychological Crime has done Spiritualism a great favor in presenting a new and natural way to converse with spirits.

Prof. Alexander Wilder Steps to the Front.

The Discussion of The Great Psychological Crime by the leading lights of our cause, has proved an Object Lesson of great importance to Spiritualism. It has brought to the front the trusty defenders of the cause, and great good has been accomplished. Spiritualists are beginning to think along new lines, Prof. Wilder is well known in the East as an author and magazine writer, and his views will attract great attention.

The Great Psychological Crime.

The treatise bearing the title of "The Great Psychological Crime," is described by Mrs. Florence Huntley, its editor, as one of a series of publications intended as a bridge between the definite, demonstrated and recorded data of the historical Spiritual School of Science and the definite, discovered and published data of the modern physical school. The author himself, whose name is not given, explains further that "The central purpose of this volume is merely to erect guide-posts at the crossings and the partings of the ways which lead, upon the one hand, to Life, Liberty and Immortality, and upon the other to Bondage, Darkness, Disintegration and Death."

The first impression which the book makes is that it is chiefly a syllabus of postulates issued ex cathedra. This method would repel rather than attract the thoughtful, truth-seeking inquirer. We are in an arena, not in a kindergarten. Further examination, however, shows that the propositions which the author has laid down as axioms, are rather themes to be considered and passed upon according to their merits. Many of them, indeed, I have verified in my own observation and experience. When mesmerism was first introduced to notice in this country, I witnessed and took part in the experiments. I was not long in finding that the ENERGIES OF THE SOUL WERE IMPAIRED, and that a preternatural, and actually a morbid sensitiveness to the peculiar emanati and spiritual influences of others w produced.

Perceiving this, and the slavish subserviency which was likely to result, I broke my way out, incurring severe calumny and estranging many whom I had esteemed as friends. Yet I have been glad to be able to profit by what I had learned. When the public was startled at the appearing of "Nature's Divine Revelations," the book seemed to me easy to understand, and I thought that I was able to descry many of the sources of the various statements which it contains.

Bulwer-Lytton's two wonderful romances, "Zanoni," and "The Strange Story," also aid an intelligent reader in such investigation, and I regard them as classics. A very fair presentation of the subjects of which the book before us treats, is made by Mr. George MacDonald in "David Elginbrod." It is a work of fiction, but a fiction that is over-true. A person desiring to become well informed in this field of investigation will get from it a conception of "black magic," set forth in a simpler way than that of Bulwer. The mastery which Von Funkelstein exercised over Euphrasia Cameron, illustrates fairly the "psychological crime" which our author is describing. The charlatan by concentrating the energy of his will was able to make her go to and fro at his pleasure, and to compel her by suggestion and command to open a casket and purloin certain of the contents. Finally she is made able to free herself from the execrable bondage. But her case is similar to that depicted by Holmes in his story of the girl participating of the snake-nature. The life-forces had become so interblended with the occult evil influences that the separation was soon followed by death.

The present volume is an explanation upon scientific lines of treatment.

The book is divided into three parts: I. Modern Hypnotism. II. Spiritual Mediumship. III. Retributive Justice. There is also a supplement containing "Theories of 'the Wise Men,'" and an Editor's Postcript, defining her purposes and views.

The first part opens the subject with three propositions:

"I. A Psychological Crime is a crime against the intelligent Soul or essential Entity of Man.

"2. A Great Psychological Crime is such a crime against the intelligent Soul of Man as deprives it of any of the inalienable rights, privileges, benefits, powers or possibilities with which God or Nature has invested it.

"3. The Great Psychological Crime is that crime against the intelligent Soul or essential Entity of Man which constitutes the central theme of this volume, wherein it is defined, analyzed, illustrated and elucidated."

Hypnotism is described as a special branch of Mesmerism, and is defined as the process by and through which one person obtains, holds and exercises control of the will of another; also the psychic relation existing between the two persons during the hypnotic process.

The late Thomson Jay Hudson, in his work on "The Law of Psychic Phenomena," insisted upon the "utter impossibility of victimizing virtue and innocence by means of hypnotism. This, to say the least, is a surprising statement. Professor Quackenbos, in his treatise on Hypnotism, also declares that "will-power has nothing to do with hypnotic suggestion," and that the hypnotic subject "is in no degree subject to another will." Yet in the same book, before making these assertions he had already laid down dogmatically the proposition: "Hypnotism, or hypnotic sleep, implies a mind-condition in which the mental action and the will-power of a sensitive subject are under the control of an operator who has induced the state."

THE GREAT DANGER OF HYPNOTISM.

Other writers of equal authority are cited who abundantly confirm this proposition. They set forth that "hypnotism may be induced by impressing profoundly the mentality through all the senses"; that the operator shall concentrate his energies and earnestly Will"; that he should act with a cool, collected mind, and a firm Will, while the patient is perfectly passive; that "the simple will can profoundly overthrow the physical, intellectual and moral organization of another man;" that "the hypnotized subject will become physically blind at the operator's will"; that he can be made to "sign a promise, draw up a bill of exchange, or any kind of agreement, write a pelographic will (which would be legal in France) and fulfill minutest legal formalities with a manner which would deceive the most expert law officers."

More than this. Many can be hypnotized against their will who had never been operated upon before; and it is added, that a person so affected "will ever afterward be your subject."

TOTAL RUIN OF THE SUBJECT.

Examples are given to verify these statements, in which the results were the total ruin of the subjects morally and mentally, insanity and suicide.

The author gives a theory of the process, by setting forth the "two organisms" of man, the physical and spiritual, and quoting the mistranslated passage: "There is a natural [Greek, psuchikon, psychic] body, and there is a spiritual [pneumatikon] body." In the Bible it may be remarked, the soul or psychic entity is considered as the individual selfhood, and the spirit as the diviner intellect—the "mind" with which men "serve the law of God." Romans vii:22 ,25.

In the chapter on "Physiology and Pathology of Hypnotism" the author explains that the hypnotic process is directly the reverse of the evolutionary process as the latter takes place during the pre-natal period. "Its first effects," he declares, "are registered upon the third or intellectual brain [the cerebrum], its deeper effects upon the secondary brain [the cerebellum], and its final effects upon the primary brain, or medulla oblongata."

This final result, he remarks, is seldom produced by western operators, but is more frequently effected in the East. It is characterized by a complete suspending of physical animation. "Every function of the physical organism is totally arrested. Even respiration ceases. Circulation stops. The body, in some instances, becomes cold and rigid. To every outward appearance physical death has actually occurred * * * Notwithstanding this complete suspension of all functional activity of the physical organism, the subject is even more intently conscious of every thought, intention, and mental impulse of the hypnotist than he is during any of the less profound states of hypnosis which precede the condition."

He insists accordingly that hypnotism is a relation which Nature does not contemplate; that the hypnotic relation is abnormal, a violation of natural law. Yet if there is a physiology for it, there must be a natural law according to which it is carried on and its manifestations take place. The facts which he adduces, that the hypnotist cannot hypnotize everybody, and that generally he is unable to hypnotize anybody at the first trial, are by no means conclusive evidence in rebuttal to this.

They are simply analagous to the facts in everybody's experience, that we do not always attract the favorable regard of other persons at the first time of meeting, and that there are those whom we cannot placate at all.

CURES BY THE HYPNOTIC PROCESS.

The denial of our author that cures are ever affected by the agency of hypnotism, I think, is going too far. In regard to the peculiar effects produced by suggestion, I am not able to judge. I do not doubt, however, the statement that mental aberration and insanity are sometimes the sequences of hypnotism. It is in accordance with the nature of things. Yet our author seems to overlook the fact that such results do not logically constitute an argument with medical men against its employment. When any poison or other agency has been discovered, which is capable of doing deadly harm, it is their practice to set immediately about employing it as a remedy. The word "pharmacy" originally meant the art of concocting poisons. Certainly it is as rational, as moral and philosophic to attempt cures by hypnotism, dire as its evils may be, as is the current practice of administering poisons for disease, and of injecting the human body with viruses and putrid products from the bodies of animals.

IN ACCORD WITH THE BOOK.

When, however, the author denounces the practice now flagrant and frequent, of offering instruction promiscuously for money which is described as enabling the learner to gain control over others for his own personal pleasure and advantage, I am in perfect accord with him. If such control can be thus obtained, then the offer is itself criminal; if it cannot, then the individuals making it are guilty of fraud.

The moral principle in the matter is the simple one, and of universal application: "Love worketh no ill to the neighbor." "Charity seeketh not one's own as its supreme aim, but rather the best good of others." In short, perhaps, it may be

—"excellent
To have a giant's strength, but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant."

MEDIUMSHIP CONSIDERED.

In the Second Part, Spiritual Mediumship is the subject. The author has trained his guns upon it as being the most important point for attack. He frankly admits that mediumship is a fact; that the essential part of our being, the soul, continues after the death of the body, and may, under certain conditions, come into contact with those who are still in the physical body, and may even control the will, voluntary powers and sensory organism of susceptible persons, using them as mediums.

Although orthodox scientists and many others dispute these admitted facts here stated, they have been recognized all over the world for thousands of years. Our psychic being is as real as our corporeal existence, and indeed more so. It gives form to the body, imparts life to it, and manifests itself by sensibility, desire and activity. There is the further belief among human beings deeply impressed upon their consciousness, that when the body is laid aside at death, this psychic entity, being an essence antecedent to the body, continues to subsist after this separation as a distinct personality. Having the essential qualities of essence and moral character, it is certain to be more or less capable of making itself manifest to others, and even to individuals still living in the earth. Thus we may adduce the example of Johann Friedrich Oberlin, the celebrated pastor of the Ban de la Roche in Alsace, who had interviews with his deceased wife, and recorded the fact. He had before declared his utter disbelief of such occurrences, but tangible evidence in his own case and that of others convinced him of their truth.

MEDIUMSHIP AS SPIRITUAL HYPNOTISM.

Our author defines mediumship as the process by and through which a spiritual intelligence obtains, holds and exercises control of the will, voluntary powers and sensory organism of a medium; and hence it is "nothing more and nothing less than spiritual hypnotism." Before proceeding further he classifies its various forms as follows:

I. Impressional Mediumship. This may be conscious or unconscious. In the latter division he places the inspirational speaking and emotional insanity.

II. Muscular Mediumship. Under this he specifies the Ouija board and automatic writing.

III. Neurotic Mediumship. This embraces clairvoyance, clairaudience, impressions of touch, taste and smell, and other delusional insanity.

IV. Trance Mediumship. Under this head are enumerated speaking mediumship, materializing mediumship, and likewise obsession, which, he remarks, is generally recognized as insanity.

V. Independent Slate-Writing.

VI. Trumpet-Speaking.

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES IN NATURE.

The principle which underlies these distinct forms of mediumship, it is remarked, cover the entire field of mediumistic control. There are two fundamental principles in Nature, the constructive or "normal," and the destructive or "abnormal." The author, speaking for "Natural Science," affirms that mediumship is hypnotic, involving the same character of subjection as hypnotism, and therefore the process is destructive. He argues the identity of the two on several grounds, such as both involving control of the will and voluntary powers, the phenomena being identical, and likewise the physiology of both processes.

THE DESTRUCTIVE PRINCIPLE.

The predominance of the "destructive principle in mediumship, is set forth with great plausibility and tenacious insistence. THIS HAS LIKEWISE BEEN ACKNOWLEDGED BY INTELLIGENT SPIRITUALISTS. The late Cyrus O. Poole used to remark that mediums were apt to "peter out." Jacolliot mentions a similar result which he observed in India. A fakir whose performances indicated powers far exceeding sleight-of-hand and were indeed extraordinary, was seen by him some years afterward in a public institution broken down and almost an idiot. Our author explains the reason of this decay: "IT IS NECESSARY FOR THE SPIRITUAL CONTROLS TO APPROPRIATE AND EXPEND THE MEDIUM'S ANIMAL MAGNETISM AND VITAL ENERGY AS RAPIDLY AS THE SAME ARE GENERATED BY HIS PHYSICAL ORGANISM."

Perhaps another fact in physiology may be here pertinent. An organ of the body which is long unused, becomes atrophied and weakened. MAY IT NOT BE THE FACT THAT THE BRAIN OF THE MEDIUM, OR OF A HYPNOTIZED PERSON, WHEN NOT DULY EXERCISED BY THE INDIVIDUAL HIMSELF, IS LIABLE TO SUCH DEGENERATION AND DECAY?

Among the ill consequences imputed to the mediumistic process are simple nervousness, insomnia and nervous prostration. The medium loses independent control of the voluntary organs of the body, and there ensues loss of memory, with inability to hold the mind intently on a subject, or to think consecutively. The moral stamina also becomes deteriorated, and so restraint is correspondingly removed from the appetites, passions, emotions, desires and propensities.

MEDIUMS ENTRAPPED INTO DARKNESS.

The explanation is made that the individual at death enters upon the life beyond, just the same as when he leaves this life, neither better nor worse for the change. Having the same impulses as before, and unable to gratify them on the spiritual plane, he learns through the hypnotic art how to gain control over the physical organism of some person yet in the body, and thereby to procure some partial gratification. Those who operate in this way are described by the author as being "in the first spiritual sphere," and closely bound for the time to the plane of physical nature. They find it possible by the hypnotic process to attach themselves to those who are yet in the flesh, and so they adopt the profession of "spiritual controls." They find mediums whom they can control, and through them they educate others. In order to divert criticism and to prevent themselves from being detected, they adopt the cunning pretense of unselfish devotion to the cause of Spiritualism. In this way, it is asserted that mediums have been entrapped into drunkenness and other gross indulgence, of which they would not otherwise be guilty.

This specific imputation, however, is not directed by the author against Spiritualism alone. Emotional religion is included by him in the same category. Intense emotion, he remarks, produces paralysis of the will, and this involves a negative condition of the intelligence, which opens the door to mediumistic control. It must be confessed that there is much truth in this statement. Revivals of religion, as they are popularly termed, are frequently produced by agencies of a purely hypnotic character. The conductors of the religious exercises on these occasions may very generally be observed to be individuals with large back head, capacious abdomen, great force of will, aptness in making mesmeric gestures, peculiar fascination of voice, and skill in devices to impress and entrance the senses. "The magnetic conditions," the author affirms, "closely resemble those of the Spiritualistic seances." It is not necessary, however, to pursue the parallelisms further. Raptures similar to those religious revivals were peculiar to the Bacchic rites of former times, and indeed are still common in modern religions, Oriental and Occidental, Hindu, Muslim, or in the various Christian communions. The laws of manifestation are the same, and the phenomena are analogous.

LASHED WITHOUT SHOW OF LENIENCY.

The author duly classifies the individuals known as mediums, and criticises them accordingly. Those whose motives are good receive some scant praise, and those who have no special good or bad motive are passed over without praise or blame. But the "business mediums," the "ambitious mediums," the vicious mediums," and the "fakir mediums," who practice the art for selfish or mercenary motives, are lashed without show of leniency, and their modes of procedure in abnormal and illegitimate ways, set forth in plain terms.

MEDIUMSHIP AND INSANITY.

In the chapter on "Mediumship and Insanity," it is declared to be "reasonably certain that more than fifty per cent of all the insanity in the United States is the direct result of the mediumistic process." The same rate is also believed to exist in Europe. But "mediums" are not held solely accountable. MEN AND WOMEN WHO ARE TOTALLY ALOOF, FALL INTO NEGATIVE CONDITION OF MIND AND BODY FROM A GREAT VARIETY OF CAUSES.

The various forms of hysterical insanity, religious insanity, religious mania, emotional insanity, and so-called "delusional insanity" of all kinds and degrees, the author asserts, "might all be included in one general class, and properly designated as 'Mediumistic Insanity,' or 'Subjective Insanity.'"

RETRIBUTIVE JUSTICE.

Part III. is entitled "Retributive Justice." In it the author arraigns hypnotism and mediumship, each as a subjective, psychic process, which paralyzes the will and voluntary powers of the subject, and deprives him of his own free and independent control and exercise of those attributes of the soul upon which he must depend for the achieving of individual immortality, self-completion, and happiness here and hereafter. They are therefore manifestations of the destructive principle in Nature, and their outcome "so far as science knows, is ultimate dissolution, disintegration, total individual extinction, and a resolution of the individual entity, physically, spiritually, and psychically, back into the original elements from which it came." "This," he adds, "is the 'second death,' 'spiritual death,' 'the death of the soul,' and in fine, 'THE GREAT PSYCHOLOGICAL CRIME.'"

INDEPENDENT SPIRITUAL SELF-DEVELOPMENT.

The purpose apparent in the volume is to present an issue between Spiritualism as founded upon the testimonies obtained through mediumship, and "the fundamental principle of independent, spiritual self-development. The author claims to have developed in this way the ability to exercise his spiritual sensory organism independently, self-consciously and voluntarily at any time. He protests that he is not a medium, never has been a medium, never has been hypnotized, never has been mesmerized, never has been a subject of psychic control in any form, degree or manner whatsoever.

MEDIUMSHIP AND HYPNOTISM.

It appears hardly possible that a person should write intelligently upon mediumship and hypnotism, except from his own individual experience, or by intimacy with those who have had such experience. Our author disclaims any subjection to "psychic control." Nevertheless it seems evident that some such control or inspiration so derived was the cause of the writing of this book. He is doubtless sincere in his denials, but the authors whom he has quoted make it plain that individuals may sometimes be "hypnotized against their will," and even without their own conscious knowledge. If this may be done by professional operators it may also be effected by disbodied spiritual beings. We are doubtless all of us influenced by individual spirits or groups of spirits. There may be a close rapport with them, an intimate interblending, in which there is no external consciousness. Bunyan has described an evil spirit so instilling his suggestions into the mind of his Pilgrim that poor Christian for a time conjectured them to be his own thoughts. In specific instances there is a consciousness more or less vivid, and then the mind of the individual becomes the medium for manifestation. The normality or abnormality of the occurrence depends upon the moral character of the spiritual being as well as upon the peculiar moral condition of the intermediary himself or herself.

BIBLE MEDIUMSHIP.

The Bible gives numerous examples of such mediumship, induced by agencies similar to those which abound at the present period. Balaam the prophet was said to make use of enchantments [nahashim] (Numbers xxiv:4). Elisha became inspired when a minstrel played (II. Kings iii:15.) The book of Daniel abounds with accounts of manifestations in which the prophet, as is usual on such occasions, exhibited great disturbance of mind and body. In the eleventh chapter there is an outline of the history of Egypt and Syria during the rule of the Macedonian kings, the Ptolemies and Seleukids, down to the rise of the Hasmonean priest-rulers in Judea. The prophet describes this account in the preceding chapter as having been given to him by a spiritual being after he had undergone a peculiar course of preparation. He had been "mourning" for three full weeks, eating no pleasant food, and taking neither flesh nor wine. Standing with others by the river Tigris, the vision appeared. He alone saw it; those with him saw nothing remarkable. He beheld a radiant personage, and immediately he had no strength left, but lay in a trance with his face to the earth.

He was evidently enabled to see and hear his visitor by the preparation which he had undergone. The prophets of Palestine, the nabiim or mantic persons, appear to have been "developed" as such by special teaching and discipline. We read of King Saul that he was obsessed by an evil spirit, and that David repeatedly exorcised it by playing on a musical instrument. There was also said to be a school or company of prophets at the naioth or colleges in Ramah, over which Samuel presided. When Saul sent messengers there twice to arrest David, they were seized with the afflatus and "prophesied." Then Saul himself went and likewise became ecstatic. "He stripped off his clothes also and prophesied before Samuel in like manner, and lay down naked all that day and night." (I. Samuel xix:18-24).

It may be pleaded that these accounts from the Bible are not historic. It is certain, nevertheless, that they would never have been written except that there had been actual occurrences and manifestations of the kind described. They show that spiritual mediumship as it is now termed, was recognized at that ancient period, and also that the "schools of the prophets" were for the purpose of "developing" as well as instructing.

TRANCE AND ECSTASY.

Trance and ecstasy were recognized in those days as akin to madness. When Elisha sent the young prophet to anoint Jehu as king of Israel, the officers at Ramoth Gilead called him a "mad fellow (II. Kings ix:11). When the high priest Jehoiada established the house of David on the throne of Jerusalem, he enacted a penalty against "every man that is mad and maketh himself a prophet" (Jeremiah xxix:26).

An important historic fact is too often overlooked. To every religion, both ancient and modern, there has always been a twofold aspect. On the nobler side may be seen the higher aspirations of the soul, sublime experiences, the lofty conceptions of divinity and spiritual life. At the other hand are found the concessions to human infirmity, such as cruel customs, barbarous superstitions and even gross sensuality. Hence every religion has been described according to the view which has been taken. Every one sees what he has the eyes to see and disposition for noting. It may be a sublime theism, a celestial harmony, or a gross, cruel sensualism. Plato in the "Dialogues" has given a glorious concept of the divine life as illustrated by the rites in the Mysteries; yet Alkibiades, also a pupil of Sokrates and an initiate in the Rites, found in the same things abundant material for profane sport.

NOT ALL WHO ARE INSANE IN THE ASYLUMS.

Every enormity and abnormity which is imputed to Spiritualism and spiritual mediumship, had already been charged to other religious bodies. Upon such charges of impiety, disloyalty and loose morality Christians in the earlier centuries were proscribed in the Roman empire. Even now the imputations are by no means unfrequent. It would be no easy task to show more general immorality in the Spiritualist ranks than in other social or religious circles. And if facts could be shown in regard to insanity, the ranks of business exhibit mental aberration fully as general. FOR EVERY INSANE SPIRITUALIST, there may be found several in other departments of life. Not all the insane are in asylums, and not all in the asylums are insane.

NO SERIOUS DANGER ANTICIPATED.

The "Storm Center" which is now present can hardly be indicative of serious danger. The only things in peril are those that are always liable to be shaken. Our author has shown many of these, and we can afford to acknowledge what is just and true, and that what is evil and destructive shall be eliminated.

A VERY NECESSARY PURIFYING.

The separating of the tares, the poisonous darnel from the wheat, is a necessary purifying, and makes what is left of greater value. It is the proper work of the men of the household; it is a confession of weakness to appeal to others, lawyers, physicians, clergymen, or masons to engage in the work. When the winnowing-fan passes over the threshing-floor, only the chaff is disturbed.

SPIRITUALISM HAS ITS MISSION.

Modern Spiritualism has its mission. Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote of it in 1858 in words which still are true:

"While some are crying out against it as a delusion of the devil, and some are laughing at it as an hysteric folly, and some are getting angry with it as a mere trick of interested or mischievous persons, Spiritualism is greatly undermining the traditional ideas of the future state which have been, and are still accepted—not merely in those who believe in it, but in the general sentiment of the community, to a larger extent than most good people seem to be aware of. * * * You cannot have people of cultivation, of pure character, sensible enough in common things, large-hearted women, grave judges, shrewd business men, men of science, professing to be in communication with the spiritual world and keeping up constant intercourse with it, without its gradual reacting on the whole conception of that other life. It is the folly of the world, constantly, which confounds its wisdom.'

DR LYMAN ABBOTT AND SPIRITUALISM.

Dr. Lyman Abbott also, somewhat reluctantly, has acknowledged the same thing. He finds fault with mediums, the spirits themselves, the methods of communication and the little which has been accomplished, and adds:

"But Spiritualism would never have had the power which it once had and is now losing, had it not borne witness to the truth which the church of Christ has often ignored, and sometimes denied: that death is not a cessation of life, but transition; and that the dead are not dead, but living—are not even departed, but living near at hand, having only stepped over the threshold into the other room."

Thus the leaven is leavening the whole mass. Spiritual mediumship has indeed "brought life and immortality to light." It has made vivid the conviction that we all are brothers and sisters, because we do not part company at the grave, but live on permanently in communion with one another. WE CAN AFFORD TO OVERLOOK THE SHORTCOMINGS OF THE INDIVIDUALS WHEN WE CONTEMPLATE THE SUBLIME TRUTH which they have made known.

In the dissemination of this truth all may help, as having a common vital interest in the matter. Even those who criticise its promulgators obtained their weapons and ammunition from the same sources. While, therefore, I may differ even diametrically with many others, I can recognize them fraternally as fellow-laborers in the same field, and esteem them accordingly.

THE FOUNDATION IS SURE; AND NOW LET THE SUPERSTRUCTURE BE SUCH AS CAN ABIDE THE FIRE.

ALEXANDER WILDER.

Newark, N. J.

THE MINISTRATIONS OF PAIN.

What has Pain to do with living?
What has it to do with giving
Us a higher birth?
But to bring within subjection
Every power, and every section
Of our life of earth.

But to place the standard higher,
To which man should e'er aspire
On his earthly way;
Never thinking of repining,
When we know the soul's refining
In the shadows lie.

When we know what Pain is reaping
When he holds us in his keeping,
We should never say:
"I would never had this trouble,
Oh! could I break it like a bubble—
Throw it all away!"

Don't you know that every moment
You take from life a power potent
All your life to sway?
Take from it a power golden,
And to which you are beholden
For rich gems along your way.

You are sowing to the ashes
A magic power, e'en tho' it clashes
With the heart's desire;
Oh! its wondrous power is moulding—
Your whole being it is unfolding
By its magic fire!

And your soul will break asunder
From the darkness—and you'll wonder
Why you never lived before
Quite so close to Nature's keeping,
And the higher truths were reaping—
Blossomed at your very door!

But you needed just this sorrow
Ere you could the sunshine borrow,
Or see the flowers bloom!
Nature has within her keeping,
Sunshine—that is for our reaping—
Oft we find it through the gloom.

Trees must needs be watered ever,
Ere the sunshine and the weather
Will bring forth the flower.
So is Nature with us dealing,
Justice, in all things revealing,
In Life's sunshine and its shower.

And we'll learn that Pain and Sorrow
Never came to us to borrow
Or to trespass on our life;
But to bring to us redemption,
And the richness of possession—
The just chattels of a life.

SOMEWHAT ON THE FENCE.

He Is Not Convinced Either Way.

The Great Psychological Crime, as proclaimed in that book, is no crime at all.

If so, whose?

It is with considerable hesitation I write this article for your valuable paper, after having read the arguments for and against the book called The Great Psychological Crime." I am somewhat like the Irishman who listened very attentively to the arguments of the attorneys in a criminal case against one of his friends. He was heard to say as the attorney for the plaintiff closed his argument, "Begob, I belave me friend is guilty;" but after listening carefully to the attorney for the defense for nearly a whole day, he thought his friend was innocent, and after the attorney for the plaintiff had closed his final argument, he did not know about it. So, it is with me after carefully reading the several excellent articles on The Great Psychological Crime, I AM NOT CONVINCED EITHER WAY.

I have been an investigator for nearly fifty years; and have had considerable experience with mediums of all phases. I have helped to develop quite a number of good mediums, both physical and inspirational, only one of whom is working as a public medium at present, the others being private, and do not make any charge for their gifts when prevailed upon to give something to friends, and while neither of these have gone wrong in any way, I know of a number of so-called mediums, who have deviated from the "straight and narrow path;" yet the percentage of the genuine spiritual mediums" that do go wrong or are ruined in any way, caused by being a medium, is very much less than that given in the book. (I believe that in one place the author states that 95 per cent was in some way affected for the worse.) Now, if these figures were transposed, and say 5 per cent bad and 95 per cent good, we would allow the figures to go unchallenged. However, it may be the author of the book had in mind only public mediums, including all those fakirs who pass themselves off as Spiritualists. Chicago, and all large places like it, ARE FULL OF THEM; they claim mediumship in order that they may gull the public, but more especially the honest old Spiritualist, who can see nothing wrong, if it bear the label "Spiritualism."

Now, I would not care to discuss the question if the author of the book has taken in everything that he runs against in Chicago or any other city, if he will confine himself to the genuine article, I will be able to prove that not over 5 per cent of the genuine mediums are traveling, and really doing public work for money, and the other 95 per cent are working in their own homes. THEY ARE HONEST, highly cultured, loving wives and husbands who love home and family above all else, and are doing a quiet work that is surely eating its way into the hearts of all classes of people, and honeycombing all churches and societies.

Then, again, among those who are working in public places and who are entitled to pay for their honest services, including lecturers and physical mediums, I am certain not 20 per cent go wrong. But suppose for argument's sake that even 25 per cent went wrong at some place in their career, would that be any reason why we should stop developing mediums? Not at all.

"The greatest good to the greatest number" is our motto. If you object to this saying, then you oppose all things that Spiritualism teaches, viz., PROGRESSION. If we were to stop everything where human lives were sacrificed, there would be no education, no railroads, no buildings, no coal to keep us warm, nothing to eat, and we would all go back to barbarism. Then we would kill one another in our savage and ignorant life.

In our opinion, there has never been a religion so firmly established in fifty-five years, in any age of the world, with as little friction and loss of life as Spiritualism. Then, why worry about THE SMALL PER CENT who become daft or loose in character in some way, when there are so many good, honest, whole-souled mediums working out their "Karma" in this life for the great cause that makes us all happy in the fact that we live at all, and when we become fully acquainted with Spiritualism and its philosophy, we are made happy by learning that we are here to work out our own lives as best we may, and the only one who can become so spiritual that he can govern his own material body, is the one who is living the life of the spirit in the highest, and when such a person passes from his earthly body the transition is hardly perceptible to the spirit.

Such a life is what we should live here on earth now, not waiting until after the passing on. We have nearly all started to investigate this beautiful philosophy through some medium. We never would know for sure of the life hereafter until we passed over, if it were not for our experiences with some one who was so sensitive they could span the boundaries of earth and the home of our dear ones gone before. Then why trouble about the martyrs who fall by the way? Have they not fulfilled their duties as the spirit world would have it? The soul has earned its reward—EXPERIENCE, which it was placed on earth to get, and to your humble servant it seems that if a crime has been committed, it was in sending out such a book as The Great Psychological Crime, as it may be the means of keeping a large number of persons from developing into mediumship, and thus keep thousands of souls in ignorance of the beauties of our spiritual knowledge.

JOHN D. VAIL.

Will Add Thousands to Spiritualism.

To the Editor:—The Great Psychological Crime will be the instrument in adding thousands to the ranks of Spiritualism.

Why?

Because those who do not want the subjective method of mediumship whereby to carry on a conversation with their spirit friends, will seek the Independent Method, which has proved a great success. The author of The Great Psychological Crime has done Spiritualism a great favor in presenting a new and natural way to converse with spirits.

..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Paris, Jan. 2.—The papers here are commenting gravely on the unanimity of the astrologers, magicians, clairvoyants and trance mediums in predicting a year of horrors for 1904. A leading astrologer named Jacob sizes up the situation as follows, and the others agree more or less as to detail: "Here is the horoscope for 1904, made at the moment the sun entered the sign of Capricorn. It indicates a year of great immorality in London. The viceroy of India abdicates. The United States have grave quarrels with Russia and Germany. Roosevelt falls sick and a conspiracy is hatched against him. Serious financial disasters in America. The emperor of Japan has a grave accident. An attempt on the life of the emperor of China. Volcanic shocks in Constantinople, Chili and Philippines. A fear of unhealthy literature and unlimited materialism. The French cabinet falls between April 7 and 19. A panic in a music hall, grave accidents and popular disturbances in Russia. An attempt to poison the czar. Serious dissensions between Russia and Austria. England loses prestige. The campaign in Thibet falls through. Tremendous failure in Calcutta and the Transvaal. Anarchist troubles in Spain, the government threatened. In China women massacre. Everywhere crimes of passion, mysterious deaths and strange phenomena. Nineteen hundred and four is an anagram of 1409, the date of the birth of Joan of Arc. This year a wonderful child will be born with a high destiny Showing its power in 1924, an anagram of 1429, the date of the apogee of Joan of Arc."

Representative Williams, of Mississippi, the minority leader of the house, is a member of the Yazoo, Miss., lodge of Elks, and at the memorial services of the Washington lodge, he spoke as follows: "In Elkdom we have two laws on which to hang all the laws and the prophets, and these are humor and good fellowship. This rule is a great thing, after all, for we are not all so rich that we can give of this world's goods to our friends, but we can give the smiles, the kind word and the grip of friendship that count for so much in this life, in other words, we can be gentlemen. Elks do not look at death as a passing away, but as a passing over. With us a bad fellow falls asleep, and then wakes up somewhere else, still a bad fellow. The good fellow wakes up in another land, still a good fellow. I have never been able to understand why people should regard death as a thing that is horrible. Elks never do. We are often told that we can carry nothing away with us. What a mistake that is. We can carry away everything that is worth carrying. We take ourselves and our memories with us. And when we go we take the selves of us that are best, for then they are dissolved from the baser ties that bind us to earth. Then, too, we do not think that death means the decay of the body. Rather it is the setting it free."

Mrs. John Lindsey has been laboring untiringly to advance the cause of Spiritualism. She was engaged at Hastings, Mich., for seven weeks. She had the opera house, and was assisted in her work by Mrs. Emma Gibbs, who did efficient work. Mrs. Lindsey is now at 297 Seventh street, Grand Rapids, Mich. She will ever press onward in the good work. She is now open for engagements.

Dr. Beverly writes: "Mrs. Murtha, of Baltimore, who served the Englewood Society for four months, and is engaged for our next state convention, will be at Lakeside Hall for the month of January, afternoon and evening. She is wonderful in her phase and becomes so inspired that the whole audience is swayed by her power. The society was never in so flourishing condition as now. The leap year party and dance will be given Friday evening, January 29. No wall flowers. Every lonely widow and forlorn bachelor maid promised a partner for the enjoyment of the evening. Palmists and mediums will occupy booths, and all will have access to the best psychics in the city. A barrel of fun for 25 cents."

Prof. W. M. Lockwood is now lecturing at Pittsburg, Pa. Letters will reach him addressed to 237 Atwood street.

Mrs. Clara Ferris has been holding successful meetings in Leadville, Col. She pays high praise to Mr. George Newton, the materializing medium, who submits to the strictest test conditions, and the spirits materializing are very plain, and the trumpet work is fine. Mrs. Ferris will go from Leadville to Pueblo, Col. Her address while there will be 114½ West Indiana street.

G. Hamilton Brooks writes: "Dr. Geo. B. Warne, vice-president of the N. S. A., is expected to speak for the Englewood Spiritual Union, at Hopkins' Hall, 528 West 63rd street, Sunday evening, January 17, at 8 o'clock. Brother Warne always has something to say that instructs everybody. Come out and give him your hearty co-operation."

Take due notice that items for this page in order to insure insertion must contain the full name and address of the writer. Otherwise they may be cast into the waste basket.

Gustav Thiese writes: "One number of The Progressive Thinker does me more good than a hundred dollars." He thinks that every one should take a Spiritualist paper.

Dr. Albert Harrison Waitt, the well-known healer, has returned to Chicago. His many friends will find him at his residence, 6600 Normal avenue, Englewood. The Doctor's growing practice bids fair to keep him here for an indefinite length of time.

Dr. Paul Douglas, the Divine Healer, writes: "I was raised a Methodist, and was very zealous in the cause. I went to preaching the doctrine and attracted large crowds. I had such a gift that all sorts of people flocked to hear me. My son Robert, who had been absent for a number of years, returned home to stay with me the balance of our lives, but Providence ruled otherwise, and he passed to the other life. My son, when he returned, was a confirmed Spiritualist. He had mediums come to my house. I would have nothing to do with Spiritualism, and called it the work of the devil. My wife finally persuaded me to go to a seance. While in the circle my oldest son who had been dead a number of years, came and talked to me, telling all about my aversion to Spiritualism, and the things that happened at the old homestead during his life. I was then and there convinced, about fifteen years ago. I have cured all kinds of diseases, and have practiced this Divine Healing about three years. I would not be without The Progressive Thinker if I had to make the money at 10 cents per day, and only one meal a day. I think every Spiritualist should have it. I expect to take it as long as I live. I am clairvoyant. I can see and talk to my spirit friends, which is a great pleasure."

Dr. H. E. Ballard writes: "Probably no prettier wedding has occurred during the izen days than the sliding of Miss Lora Elizabeth from under the parental roof of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hoffman, 3519 Indiana avenue, on the evening of Tuesday, Dec. 29, to Mr. Warren J. Clark. The loving hearts of Lora and Warren were unionized by the Dev. Dr. Rusk, pastor of the Militant Church, assisted by the Hon. Robt. Gilray, pastor of the Universal Occult Church. The best lady was Miss Grace Lanity, while the best man was Mr. E. W. Large. The ceremony was made beautiful and affective by the touching words that fell from the lips of the distinguished gentleman who represented the All Souls Church no mortal ever entered, yet at the open door the guides stand to bid us welcome. The consolidation of the spirit forces of the bride and groom was symbolized by their bands, presenting each with violets, that carries with them refinement, harmony, truth and progress."

Mrs. Emma Hess writes from Peoria, Ill. She had her first experience with Mrs. Pemberton, who is a remarkable medium. There is a society in Peoria, organized by Bro. and Sister Sprague. Mrs. Hess is represented as an excellent healing medium, and is capable of doing good work.

G. A. Wolter writes: "I wish to state, that in my search for truth I find many sparkling gems, which when put to the test of reason lose their intrinsic value." Mr. Wolter comes to the conclusion that all is not right, that all is not truth, that all is not a stepping-stone to a higher truth, in contradiction to Mrs. LaGrange's lecture as printed in No. 734 of The Progressive Thinker. He says: "Wrong will never be right, and what is false cannot be truth, and as vice is no virtue, 'all' cannot be a stepping-stone to higher truth."

L. G. writes: "Bully for The Progressive Thinker! It beats them all for making people think. The greatest of all the phenomena is the inspirational speaker. The tricksters may duplicate much that is claimed as spirit manifestation, but they cannot give us the lectures that we often hear from our speakers. This seems to be a point that Hudson has not explained."

A. W. Keller writes: "An enjoyable evening was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Keller, on Jan. 1, 1904. A large number of people were present and assisted in the literary, musical and test social. It was also the wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Keller and Mr and Mrs. Spaeth, also the birth-day anniversary of Vera Martin and Violet, a guide of Mrs. L. J. Martin. Those that assisted in the entertainment were Miss Caroline Keller, Miss Mabel Spaeth, Miss May Small, Prof. Smith, Mrs. Hurlbert and Mr. Spaeth. Violet, Mrs. L. J. Martin's guide, opened the evening's entertainment with a few remarks which were much appreciated, staying until the morning hour, when they dispersed to their various homes, hoping to meet again on some future occasion for another enjoyable evening."

H. W. Boozer writes: "As so many mediums use the Lord's Prayer in their circles, which means nothing to Spiritualists, and educates in no way as to our central truth, I send you for publication a substitute that is not only educational, but is likely to assist in producing the right conditions for successful results. It is as follows: 'Our ever dear friends who have been translated to a superior condition of continued life, we give you at this time our most loving remembrance. And as in your exalted state you are happy as you increase the happiness of others, and especially of us who are yet in the mortal life, so may we by every possible effort do all in our power to hasten the reign of universal brotherhood. To-day continue to give to us your unbounded love and care as you have before time given it to us. And forgive us all forgetfulness of your loving kindnesses, as we should forgive each other. In every temptation to do wrong be with us and with your spirit power make us strong to resist evil. For yours is the real, the true, the superior life, and will be forever and ever. Amen!'"

P. M. Withington writes: "Your paper is too interesting to lose. We can hardly wait till it is due, we so want to see the next number."

A. C. Doane writes: "I consider the discussion in The Progressive Thinker between Brother Howe and Sister Huntley, one of the best things that has ever happened for spiritual thought, and the cultivation of the moral and spiritual powers of the human mind, bringing the individuality of humanity into a higher plane of spiritual thought and action."

G. Oyston, of Seattle, Washington, is desirous of entering the lecture field in support of Spiritualism. He is said to be in every way adapted for the work. Address him at No. 102 Queen Ann avenue.

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

TAKE NOTICE.

All books advertised in the columns of The Progressive Thinker are for sale at this office. Bear this in mind.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

MR. JAMES E. COE is a prominent Spiritualist on the West Side, residing at 549 Warren avenue. Mr. Coe has been a long and faithful worker in the cause, and his numerous friends will celebrate the anniversary of his 70th birthday on the evening of Jan. 16, at Star Lodge Hall, No. 378 S. Western avenue. It will be an interesting occasion as many of the old workers will be there. There will be the choicest of music, singing, speeches. The Continental Singers will be there to charm you. There will be refreshments served, and a grand good time may be expected.

C. J. Barnes has been at Bushton, Ill. H. V. Thompson writes that he spent Christmas at his home, and that he is a great medium. He gave many excellent tests. A lady's hand materialized and clasped the hand of one of the sitters. Tests were fairly rained upon those present to the extent that no one can doubt. Mr. Thompson concludes his letter by saying: "Mr. Barnes is certainly a great instrument in the hands of the spirit world."

D. E. Youngs writes "I notice by referring to the number of my last paper that only two more copies of The Progressive Thinker are my due. As I have not missed a copy in more than twelve years, I do not propose to now when I find the paper better than ever. Since parting with Mrs. Youngs, Nov 11, last, I take a much greater interest in the philosophy of Spiritualism than ever before. How can any man who has parted with wife or child believe that destroying the body ends all? We know better."

The permanent address of H. D. Barrett, president of the N. S. A., is Canaan, Me.

Mrs. C. J. Ingram writes from Renood, Pa.: "Chas. Theo. Schneider, of Williamsport, Pa., came to our town, and through his inspirational power accomplished good work in the cause of Spiritualism. There never was a meeting of that kind here before, and the spiritual messages from our own loved ones and the proof of the life after death, will do much in aiding us to work for a Temple of Truth. He leaves for his home to-day, and we extend him an ever welcome, and may we band together in time to organize a society."

Harry J. Moore serves the First Spiritualist Church of Battle Creek, Mich., the last three Sundays of January, and his address while there will be 323 Garfield avenue.

Mrs. Isa Wilson Kaynor is now at Bowie, Texas, where she will do some excellent work for the cause of Spiritualism.

Mrs. M. E. Edson writes from Detroit, Mich.: "I have to report the progress of the Central Spiritual Union of this city (Charter No. 43 Mich. State Spiritual Association), now in its eighth year, as progressing finely. Wednesday evening last after the regular circle our pastor, Dr. C. W. Burrows, was treated to a present of a beautiful seal skin cap, which was received by marked appreciation by the doctor."

Mrs. Isa A. Cross writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society will be favored with a lecture by Mrs. Adelaide K. Brooks of the Englewood Spiritual Union, on Sunday evening, January 17, at 323 East 55th street. Subject, 'Spiritual Impressions.' Any one knowing Mrs. Brooks will feel assured of hearing something spiritual and soul-uplifting. Come early, friends, so we can begin promptly at 7:45. On Monday evening, January 4, we celebrated the anniversary of the organizing of our society, by holding a banquet for members only, which was preceded by the reports of the retiring officers. This was followed by the election of officers and standing committees for the year. The election resulted as follows: Dr. H. A. Cross, president; Dr. P. M. Harmon, vice-president; Mrs. E. B. Silberhorn, treasurer; Mrs O. B. Wilson, financial secretary; H. T. Stewart, recording secretary; Mrs. Isa A. Cross, corresponding secretary, and three standing committees. Dr. Harmon then read a new constitution and by-laws which he had prepared and drafted for the society and which were adopted. We then were seated at the banquet tables, Dr. Harmon having been chosen toast master. The officers of the United States Mica Mining and Milling Company, Hon. F. W. Jones, president, Mr. R. W. Menk, vice-president, and Mrs. Minona S. Fitts secretary and treasurer, were invited as the guests of the society. Mrs. Fitts made a presentation speech, presenting our society with a certificate of stock in the Mica Company, the gift coming from herself and the Hon. Frank W. Jones. Our new president in behalf of our society, accepted the valuable gift with a fitting speech. Mr. Menk, Mrs. O. B. Wilson and Mr. W. M. Enslow also made after-dinner speeches. In closing, Dr. Harmon made a beautiful and touching prayer. Our society has procured a legal state charter, so that we can hold property the same as any other legal institution. The mica stock presented to our society on the occasion above referred to, makes a nice nest-egg, the outcome of which may result in our society building a spiritual temple here in Chicago at some future time. Our little medium, Mrs. E. Klein is always with us to bring messages from the friends on the other side. Come and see us. You will be made to feel at home."

Mrs. E. M. Harrington writes: "We have taken The Progressive Thinker ever since its first inception and really could not do without it. We have labored to extend its circulation, feeling that in so doing we were performing a great and good work. We admire the masterly manner in which you battle for right against might; especially do we admire your bold and fearless advocacy of our grand public school system against the attacks of Rome. Our schools take the heterogeneous mass of ignorance from the effete governments of the old world, and by their alchemy transmute them into human beings and loyal American citizens. Silenced be the insiduous voice and palsied be the cowardly arm that would strike one blow at our public schools, the very bulwark of our glorious liberties. May you continue to raise your voice and to wield your tronchant pen against everything that would stop the car of progress. May your paper continue until theological dogmas and superstition are relegated to blackest darkness where they originated and where they belong."

G. H. Brooks writes: "I began my work for the month of January for the Independent Spiritualist Society of Toledo, Ohio, the first Sunday in this month. My address is No. 337 Tenth street. I will respond to calls for funerals or week night meetings. Send all letters and telegrams to the above number."

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

G. H. Brooks is lecturing to good audiences at Toledo, Ohio.

Prof. Lockwood has an engagement to lecture at Pittsburg, Pa. His address while there will be No. 237 Atwood street.

Mrs. A. A. Averill writes: "The Lynn (Mass.) Spiritualists Association celebrated the tenth anniversary of its organization, Jan. 3. The exercises, under the direction of President Caird, were of an extremely interesting nature. Mrs. Dr. Caird, Mrs. Dr. Chase, Mrs. Mamie Helyett, Mrs. Carrie Hare, Mrs. Maude Litch, F. Forrest Harding, of Victoria, and J. B. Hatch, of Boston, assisted with addresses and messages. A very pleasing feature was the exercises of the children from the lyceum, many of them showing marked talent, which is being rapidly developed under the direction of Harry C. Chase, musical instructor, and Miss Mona Belle Welch, elocutionist. Musical selections were given by Chase's orchestra, cornet solo by 'the Atherleys,' vocal solo by C. A. Robinson, and dramatic readings by Miss Welch. Circles were held by local mediums and supper served in the banquet hall. The society is in the most prosperous condition of any anniversary since its organization. Under the able leadership of President Caird, a large amount of work has been accomplished during the past year. The membership is constantly increasing, numbering about 175 at the present time."

Mrs. Eva McCoy writes from Marshalltown, Iowa, that she filled her second engagement at Battle Creek, Mich., during December, with the First Spiritual Society, which is progressive and harmonious meetings and sociables being a success. Circles are held weekly and she anticipates excellent results therefrom. The officers of the society are untiring in their efforts, and the members are responsive as a body.

Lole F. Prior writes from Seattle, Wash.: "New Year's greetings to my many friends who are readers of The Progressive Thinker, and may 1904 bring to all that sweet peace that comes to earth's weary suffering ones, through right understanding! Yes, I am still in the flesh, and hope doing a good and lasting work in this city. I am still fighting the unjust law of taxing mediums, and while we have not succeeded in getting what we want, that is, that all ordained teachers and mediums of Spiritualism, which is a religion, be exempt from paying a license, as an ordinance in this city, we are in a fair way of having it done. Our society is doing an excellent work, holding two meetings each Sunday and building up a progressive lyceum. Of the latter I feel very proud, as I have never had better success anywhere, nor children that take more interest than they do here. We also have a large Ladies' Aid which has recently been organized, and which bids fair for good work in the future. Sunday, December 27, we had our Christmas celebration, which was a grand success in every way. Lyceum celebration at 1 p. m.; lecture, 2:30, subject, The Radius of Bethlehem's Star, by Mrs. Lole F. Prior; reception from 4 to 5 p. m.; Christmas tea served from 5 to 7 p. m.; at 7:30 p. m., a very fine musical and literary entertainment by the lyceum children, and last but by no means least, Christmas tree and Santa Claus."

Mrs. Carrie F. Curran, president of the Ohio State Spiritualist Association writes: "The state work is progressing nicely. The missionaries have been kept busy and have received good reports of their work. There are a number of societies yet to be heard from, and a number of secretaries' names that were on the books that I have written to, but the letters have been returned to me. Middlefield, O., Kenton, O., and Massilon, Ohio, I should be pleased to hear from any Spiritualists living in any of said towns, and I thought of no better way of reaching them than through your most valuable paper, The Progressive Thinker. I was called to Cecil, Ohio, by our worthy Brother Dunakin, Treasurer O. S. A., for New Years, as he had aranged for a meeting at his home. It is his desire to awaken an interest in his vicinity; although the weather was severe they had a good attendance. Brother Dunakin and wife's interest and desire is to do all they can to benefit Spiritualism. Sandusky, Elyria and Cleveland, where I have served, are all doing good work, and our missionaries, Mrs. Baird and Mrs. Schauss have been a great benefit to our cause. My address is 123 Indiana avenue, Toledo, Ohio."

The Universal Occult Church meets at its permanent quarters, Hall "C," 77 Thirty-first street; Hon. R. Gilray, pastor. Services every Sunday evening at 8. Lyceum, afternoons at 2. Conference at 3:30. Mrs. G. E. Aitkens, psychic. Tests at conference and evening services. Good music. All welcome. Come and investigate. There will be a debate between the pastor and the Hon Axel Gustafson, on Free Will, for several Sunday evenings. An interesting time expected.

The subject for Mrs. C. L. V. Richmond's discourse next Sunday, Jan 17, will be, "How Do We Reconcile God's Love With the Sorrows of Mankind?" Services commence at 11 a. m. sharp. Masonic Temple, Room 309.

F. B. Stocks writes from Washington, D. C.: The premium books are an elegant set, and would be an ornament to any library. I prize them very highly."

THE MICHIGAN STATE SPIRITUALIST ASSOCIATION holds it Mid-Winter meeting in Jackson, Feb. 5, 6, and 7, at lecture-room of the Jackson society. There will be ten sessions as follows: Friday, 10:30 a. m., 2 and 7:30 p. m.; Saturday, 10 and 10:30 a. m., 2 and 7:30 p. m.; Sunday, 10 a.m. 2 and 7:30 p m. The following named speakers and mediums will participate: D. A. Herrick, Grand Rapids; Julia M. Walton, Jackson; Dr. B. O'Dell Paw Paw; Mrs. D. A. Morrill, Grand Rapids; Dr. Knowles, Grand Rapids, John D. Boyle, Detroit; Mrs. Virginia Rowe, Jackson; Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague missionaries for the N. S. A.; Mrs Dorothy Daily, Detroit; Dr P. T. Johnson, Battle Creek; Mrs. Beebe; Dr A. B. Spinney, Reed City; Frank N. Foster, Grand Rapids; Mrs. Belle Fuller. All officers will be entertained while at the meeting and all visitors as far as possible. E. E. Carpenter, president; Rena D. Chapman, Marcellus, Mich., secretary.

Dr. Beverly writes: "At Lakeside Hall, corner 31st and Indiana avenue, the S. S. Society have secured Mrs. J. A. Murtha, of Baltimore, the wonderful platform test medium, who served the Englewood Society so long; and is engaged for the next state convention. She draws crowded houses. She will occupy the time in the afternoon as well as the evening meeting. This society expects to give a leap year party, giving out widows and bachelor maids a chance to choose their soul mates and take up their claims in the state of matrimony before they are all taken."

Prof. M. Milleson, spirit artist, is now residing at No. 62 N. Washtenaw avenue, Chicago. We knew Mr. Milleson when in this city some thirty or more years ago. His spirit portraits are magnificent productions, and they illustrate important facts by their radiations of light. He has traveled extensively in the East and West. He will remain in the city for a short time, and will lecture on "Spirit Art" before any society that desires his services.

Frank T. Ripley is serving the First Progressive Society of Peoria, Ill., for the second time this season. Large audiences fill the hall every Sunday. He goes to Findley, Ohio, for the Sundays of February. He can be engaged for March, April and May. Address letters for January to him at No. 106 Glen Oak avenue, Peoria, Ill.; February, to Findley, Ohio.

Aug. Recht writes from Brooklyn, N. Y., that George Deleree lectured Jan. 3, before the Society of Spiritual Truth.

Emil T. Vaas writes: "The Progressive Thinker is my meat and drink, and I can't afford to starve at the rate you make us pay for it, not to say anything about the extra feast of good things in the premium books."

J. H. Rees writes from Marion, Ind.; "E. W. Sprague and wife held very interesting meetings at this place, to large and attentive audiences, who were profoundly interested in the masterly manner in which Bro. Sprague presented the cause of our glorious Philosophy. He and wife are a host within themselves. They have done a good work here for the cause of Spiritualism. At the close of the meetings a society was organized, starting with ten active, energetic and thinking people, and we feel assured that ere many weeks the membership will be doubled; all this, chiefly through the energetic and untiring efforts of Bro. Sprague and wife. Long may they live to enlighten the people."

W. F. Schumacher writes: "Under the direction of Mrs. W. F. Schumacher, pastor of the Spiritualistic Church of the Students of Nature, there was a grand celebration of Christmas day at the hall of that society, 1565 Milwaukee avenue. It was crowded, and the excitement ran high in anticipation of a good thing, the people knowing who was at the head. The music was varied and excellent, and the zither soloist, Miss A. Hirchman, outdid herself. A Christmas tree was filled with gorgeous and brilliant array to represent the new-born light. This was the main feature of the evening, and was an exhibition well worthy of its place on the programme. Over fifty children were present to whom were distributed the usual luxuries of the season by Santa Claus, who came with bells a-jingling from the North Pole. Mrs. N. Hill, Mrs. Schaffer and Mrs. H. Willick were present and enthusiastically assisted in the exercises of the evening."

A. W. Phillips writes: "On Wednesday evening, Jan. 6, the audience rooms of the Spiritual Unity Society, at 207 Lincoln avenue, were crowded to the doors to witness the ordination of Prof. R. S. Ray, the well-known psychometrist and test medium. The audience was liberally sprinkled with well-known Spiritualists from the West and South Sides, including the veteran pioneer, Brother Coe. The meeting opened with prayer and singing. Some fifty tests and spirit messages were given by Prof. Ray preliminary to the event of the evening—the ordination. At 9:35 p. m., Dr. George B. Warne, president of the State Spiritualist Association, began a very earnest and eloquent address which was marked throughout by eminent common sense. The Doctor explained that the selection of Spiritualist clergymen was not in the power of man. They are selected already by our loved ones who have to the other shore. The appointment of a clergyman by the State Association was in the nature of a contract of principal and agent and like any contract can be annulled or extended. Its principal purpose was to protect the public from dishonest pretenders who have done so much to bring discredit upon Spiritualism. The address ended by the induction of the applicant into the revercntial office. As the audience filed out, Prof. Ray's personal popularity was evidenced by the great number of congratulations he received."

As a Lawyer Views the Book.

To the Editor:—In your valued paper for several weeks past you have regaled your readers, of whom I am one, with much matter pro and con a book called The Great Psychological Crime. Many of the writers have sustained it, and many have decried it. I have not read the book, but gathering my information from a careful reading of the various writers about it, it would seem that the author, whoever he or she is, is engaged in an attempt to undo all that the spirit world has been able to accomplish since the first demonstrations occurred at Hydesville by the aid of mediums. While the so-called philosophy of Spiritualism commends itself to many, yet it is at best but a reasoning concerning the effect of the phenomena and as such is not by all people received, but the phenomena, both mental and physical, tends to establish the basic fact of Spiritualism, that "Life is continuous, is progressive, and survives consciously the shock of physical death, and under certain conditions is able to manifest its survival to mortals, to the complete satisfaction of the recipient of the manifestation.

Now as I understand it, if the doctrines of this book are to maintain the efficacy and use of mediumship is to be considered as a crime against humanity, and as a natural consequence the commission of crime, either of omission or commission is to be prevented at all hazards, hence mediums must not exercise their gifts in any form.

Now it seems to me that great care ought to be taken in promulgating a doctrine so entirely adverse to the propagation of the great truth claimed by Spiritualists, "The continuity of life and the communion of spirits with mortals."

I can see no good to come from the efforts to undo all that has been done in the way of convincing people of the truths of Spiritualism. As well call in our missionaries, call a halt upon all efforts to disseminate the gospel of Spiritualism, blow out the lights and shut up shop as to cease the exercise of spiritual gifts by mediums

I may be in error but it looks that way to me now.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

At three o'clock on Christmas morning, transition came to the Hon Isaac Sharp, more popularly known as Governor Sharp. He was born and educated in Pennsylvania, read law with Thaddeus Stevens and went to Kansas during the great political struggle there, afterward filling every position of honor which the state could afford him. In 1885 he came to Washington, where in his legal profession he spent his remaining years, passing away at the age of seventy-one and one-half years.

As a healer, Gov. Sharp possessed rare gifts. His treatment and relief of the spirit limb of an old soldier who lost his leg being but one of his many deeds in healing; another being the saving to life here of a man in whose office he was when he fell from his chair in an apoplectic fit. In two minutes the circulation was established, and when the doctor arrived he was sitting in his chair in his right mind. The doctor asked what had been done to give such results, but the only reply was, "Can you tell?"

The Governor was also a materializing medium, having had three materialized forms in his room at once, but his age and physical condition did not warrant the work being done here; however, he will soon be able to use the same power to greater advantage so he will fill this measure of his work from the other side of life.

He has already been heard from two or three times and may soon be looked for from his higher home as a worker in establishing truth more fully by demonstration.

MRS. M. A. CONGDON.
Washington, D. C.

On Dec. 26, 1903, the oldest Spiritualist, the oldest Mason, and nearly the oldest man in DeWitt county, Illinois, passed over to the other life. Brother Aaron Johnson, aged nearly 90 years, had been a sincere Spiritualist since 1858. He was a member of the Masonic lodge since 1836, and had been a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker from the time it commenced until the last year of his life, when blindness prevented him from reading. Chas. Varney, of the Universalist Church of Clinton, conducted the services and preached a regular Spiritualistic discourse which gave great satisfaction to all the friends.

JOHN H. WRIGHT.

Passed to the higher life. Quietly and peacefully our most esteemed and beloved friend, Mrs. Belle Gordon, bade farewell to mortal life, and entered into the realms of higher conscious existence, Dec. 22, 1903. She was an avowed and devoted Spiritualist, ever seeking to exemplify the lofty and edifying teachings of Spiritualism, which had been a comfort, joy, strength and sustenance to her in the hour of trial and tribulation. Of her it may be truthfully said, that she sought to live the "Golden Rule," to love her neighbor, and to share with the world her precious knowledge of life's continuity, and the soul's eternal existence. In the fullness of her sympathetic heart she lived her Spiritualism in doing for others. To know her meant to love her as a mother. Untiring in her efforts, she was a strength in our church, of which she was a trustee, also an energetic worker and officer of the Ladies' Aid. While we shall miss her genial presence, her helping hands, her counsel and generous aid, we feel that her sympathy and interest in the cause she loved and served remains intact, that she is still with us. While we extend our sympathies to her bereaved son, who mourns her death, we rejoice with her in her new found freedom and reunion with those of her beloved who preceded her.

The obituary services were conducted by Mrs. C. L. Stevens, referring tenderly to our arisen friend, and dwelling in her eloquent manner upon the sublime teachings of true Spiritualism. Also by Rev. Henderson, a Methodist minister, a life-long friend of the family. It was an imposing occasion, many friends being in attendance.

R. F. TISCHER.
Pittsburg, Pa.

Dec. 14, 1903, brought to our esteemed friend and brother, John H. Knight, the much-longed-for release from mortal limitations; after a protracted illness he passed to the higher life and its grander utilities. For several years he served the First Church of Spiritualists of Pittsburg, as secretary, and was an active worker with pen and voice, in the vineyard of Truth, laboring to bring light, truth, fredom and happiness to his fellow-man through a loftier and profounder understanding of life, eternal life. While we extend our sympathies to those who mourn his demise, and suffer the loss of his passing away, our best wishes go to him in his new experiences. Services were conducted by F. Corden White.

RICHARD F. TISCHER.
Pittsburg, Pa.

Passed to spirit life, Nov. 25, 1903, Joseph Kuhn, a native of Budapest, Hungary, aged 85 years; a staunch Spiritualist for the last forty years, and an old subscriber to The Progressive Thinker. SARAH KUHN.

Mrs. Fanny Elizabeth Parker passed to the higher life, from her home in River Forest, early New Year's morning, after intense suffering. Her brief but final illness resulted in her release from the mortal form. The husband, William Henry Parker, and eight sons and daughters survive her.

Mrs. Parker was born in London, England, and came to this country a bride of 18. New Year's day was the 48th anniversary of her marriage.

Mr. and Mrs. Parker became members of the First Association of Spiritualists (now the Church of the Soul) about twenty-four years ago. She was an active member up to the time of her last illness, and in the Band of Harmony (auxiliary of the church) was a sweet and shining presence. The home at River Forest was a center of a large circle of friends. The services were held on Sunday morning, Jan. 3, at 9 o'clock, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond officiating. The floral offerings were many and beautiful, but there was an entire absence of display or ostentation in the arrangements. The service was such as could only be given by those who know and understand that life and love are eternal.

At the Sunday morning service, Mrs. Richmond's inspirers gave a touching tribute to Mrs. Parker, and at the Band of Harmony on Thursday, there were many brief, but affectionate tributes from the members of the society. All felt and feel that she is still one with the work she loved so well.

At Fremont, Mich., on Sunday, Dec. 20, Mrs. Rachel Sprague passed to spirit life, aged 87 years. She leaves three children in the mortal form, John W., of Muskegon; Geo. H., of Chicago, and a loving daughter, Mrs. DeMoss-Hains, of Fremont, who gave her tender care in her declining years. She was a firm, ardent Spiritualist and was always anxious to spread the knowledge of immortality. D. A. Herrick, of Grand Rapids, officiated, assisted by Mrs. Herrick, who rendered three of Longley's beautiful songs. COR.

"The Great Psychological Crime." A Reply to Mrs. Hamsley's Criticism.

I see that in a recent issue of The Thinker, I am, with several others, taken severely to task by Mrs. Hamsley, who grows alternately indignant and eloquent over the criticisms evoked by that special child of her adoption, initiated The Great Psychological Crime.

I am sorry, for her sake, to have been among those who aroused the ire of this "brilliant little lady"—for such she certainly must be, having the endorsement of Bro. Francis—but if I, as one of these specified sinners, had, as she did, used nearly five columns of space instead of only one-quarter of a column, I know not what possible judgment of a condemnatory character would have been meted out to me.

The other parties mentioned in her gentle epistle are abundantly able to speak for themselves, if they deem her mention of them of sufficient importance. As for your humble servant, it is true that in the brief note I penned to The Progressive Thinker commending the contribution of Bros. Lockwood, Tuttle, Morse and Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Longley and others, for the manner in which, in my opinion, they have severally and jointly met and replied to some of the assertions, aspersion and charges in that crime book, I characterized the work of the author as of "the quality of being criminal"—which is Webster's definition of "criminality." Another definition is, "any outrage or great wrong."

If in the light of what is revealed by the criticism of these capable reviewers of "The Great Psychological Crime," there has not been shown sufficient evidence of unpardonable sins of omission and commission as to facts and evidence to warrant such characterization, then where in the name of all that's true is it to be found? These competent critics, each familiar with the subject by life-time experience, show that the author in the presentation of his case, is fatally partial and one-sided, is as unfair as he is unjust. Now a half-truth, the world over, as has been affirmed since the beginning of controversy, can be dextrously used to produce all the evil effects of a full-sized untruth. These writers show that many of the author's statements are unsupported assertions; that his alleged facts are unverifiable, and that the truthfulness of his statistics as to mediumship is openly challenged—is emphatically denied, notwithstanding the lady's full acceptance of them. Fully convinced from the best evidence obtainable by many years of observation and personal experience (which fortunately for me is totally different from that of my fair correspondent's) and which is confirmed by the observation and experience of scores of others, to my personal knowledge, whose expert testimony is no less reliable than unimpeachable—that the representations in this crime book, comprehensively considered, are unjustifiable and untrue—if these matters do not justify the characterization of criminality, where in the whole range of moral controversy shall we look for it? Yet it is in behalf of such defamers that Mrs. Hamsley puts forth her most fervent prayers. Does she really expect that petitions in behalf of such inequity will either avail or prevail with Infinite Justice?

She is pleased to cite this characterization of mine as a sample of the most unreasoning, bigoted prejudice to be found in all the world.

Often young converts display more zeal than knowledge, more words than wisdom. She says: "I, who have so recently come out from among you, feel that my first duty"—is to do what she essayed to do. This is the way that "comeouters" generally start in. Methodists would call her a "backslider." But that is wrong.

It was of the young and enthusiastic Henry the Fifth, that Shakespeare says:

"Consideration, like an angel, came
And whipped the offending Adam out of him,
Leaving his body as a Paradise
To envelope and contain celestial spirits."

It was suggestive in many ways, as it was pertinent and instructive, to find in adjoining columns, running parallel with Mrs. Hamsley's wholesale defense of the monstrous claims of The Great Psychological Crime, as based on her own experience, however brief, that of another lady, Mrs. Clara Watson, whose experience and knowledge of the subject probably quadruples that of Mrs. Hamsley, and whose article in direct opposition to and along side of that of the latter, says: "I wish to add my testimony to that of others, of the manifold good that has come to me through my mental mediumship. It has brought into my life blessings untold, through which I know I am enabled to aid in blessing other lives."

All this is worthy of displayed type. Yet in the face of such direct and personal testimony, easily duplicated in thousands of cases in this country alone, our author solemnly asseverates that the exercise of such mediumship brings only evil to the medium and to society. He fails, however, to substantiate his statements.

Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten, whose exercise of her benign gift of mediumship was the glory of her life, and who for a score or more of years contributed so largely to the mental and moral elevation of her tens of thousands of gratified hearers—she of course, according to the dictum of our crime author, must have sacrificed her character, her honor and all that was most dear to her in life. As exactly the reverse of this is known to be true by all the Spiritualistic world, what becomes of the author's position? And as her case is also known to be typical of any number of others, how further becomes of his "fundamental principle?" It must have gone "a-glimmering."

For cases, similar to that of Mrs. Britten, unlimited in number, additionally refute his proposition—such cases for instance as that of Clegg Wright, Jackson Davis, Hudson Tuttle, J. J. Morse, Mrs. Richmond, Mrs. Conant, Mrs. Brigham, with a thousand others who equally ought to be mentioned in this connection, being only less restricted in their sphere of action. Does Mrs. Hamsley or our author, in his hiding place, think that he can hypnotize the world to believe, or that he can even hypnotize himself to believe, that any one of these or all of them, have lost their power of self-control, the full exercise of their reasoning, or their will-power—that they have destroyed their mental and moral attributes? That "natural degeneracy" has been the result of their public labors? Both she and he know better, I fancy.

Their own individual testimony in each and every instance cited utterly disproves, if anything were necessary, the violent assumptions of the writer of "The Great Psychological Crime," whoever he may be.

The multitude of cases that are available, of a like character, which confront him at every turn and on every side, all of which he either willfully or blindly ignores, these overwhelmingly show the author's charges and conclusions to be untrue. The case of "Blind Tom" is an analogous one also in confutation of the book. In all these cases, the known results produced, was directly opposite to that affirmed to be inevitable, and which is so strenuously believed in by Mrs. Hamsley. Instead of loss of individual power, of self-control, of physical well-being, loss of will-power, the destruction of mental and moral character, there resulted in each and every particular case added powers, increased knowledge, a clearer perception of principles, a more divine philosophy, greater wisdom, and a comprehension of higher and grander truths.

On the other hand, in support of his theory, the author refers to several anonymous cases, not one of which does he attempt to verify, nor allow the reader the privilege of verification. These cases are ruled out of court, though they form his illustrated capital in trade. They rest upon his unsupported word, if not of his fancy. He simply fails to furnish any proof of his say-so.

The instances mentioned in support of the claims of the book are offset and upset by a vast outnumbering of instances, with exactly opposite results—a fact which overthrows its position and convicts the author of great injustice toward a large body of worthy citizens throughout the country, each of whom is his peer.

I feel to disagree with the author's assumptions as much as I coincide with the view of Hudson Tuttle, who says: "The impartial reader after careful perusal will come to the conclusion that the book was written for the one object of injuring the cause of Spiritualism. The attack is one of the most subtle and insidious that has ever been made. It is by a pretended friend, who comes with soft words, and extends a velvet hand, holding a stiletto to stab to the vitals."

So thoroughly is the author hypnotized with the belief that the psychological process "destroys body, mind, honor, virtue, health and life on earth, and entails frightful consequences hereafter," that his energies are all overstrained on this one point, and his view becomes necessarily cross-eyed.

He would have Spiritualists insist on the entire abandonment of every phase, form and degree of mediumship."

It is not the opponents of mediumship who know the most about it, nor who constitute the "Court of the Competent" to sit in judgment on it.

Whoever heard, or thought, or dreamed of charging the long catalogue of evils, specified in this Psychological Crime book, to the Quakers for exercising their mediumship through a long series of years, and which came to them through the psychological process.

"The Great Psychological Crime" was written with the avowed purpose of shewing that the mediumistic process is the "Destructive Principle in Nature," and whoever permits it brings ruin on themselves and others. Its object is by recounting only certain evils resulting from the abuse of hypnotic suggestion or control—which alleged evils, when verified as fact, are known to be of a temporary character—making of these an argument against even the proper and helpful use of this process when applied to the subject of mediumship.

Concretely stated, the object is, the total suppression of mediumship.

The pith of the Great Psychological Crime, we say, is to make apparent the notion that the customary psychological exercise of the faculty or gift of mediumship, such as has enriched the world with unmeasured blessings, inevitably leads to nameless results of a criminal character, all of which is known to be no more true than if the same were said of the gift or faculty of music.

It would be but a "companion piece" to this reductio ad absurdam to declare that regular Sunday preaching by the average orthodox clergyman, who has been hypnotized, willingly or against his will, as is often the case, by friends, surroundings or circumstances, into adopting his church belief and exercising his gifts as a minister, that he thereby loses his power of independent thinking, his self-control, his moral usefulness, etc.

As has been well said by another: "The dishonest use of mediumship is used by him as an argument for the denunciation of all mediumship." Because a certain class of mediums supplement their genuine phenomena with fraudulent ones, to seek to show from this that all mediumship or all mediums, psychics or anyone else who allow, from the purest of motives and from the highest good, the temporary psychological process, is in danger of moral damnation—is a travesty on every principle of common sense. It is in evidence that the maker of such a statement is fully hypnotized by his own false notions, and so long as he is under the control of this psychological spell, he is unable to see the truth.

The author argumentatively combats what no one denies, that the abuse of anything, however good in itself, becomes detrimental It is as trite as it is true that the abuse of a gift, a power, a faculty, even of eating, of religion, results disastrously. This everybody concedes, which recognized truth involves the fact that their legitimate and proper use bring only good in their train.

"He who calls in the aid of an equal understanding, doubles his own," is an accepted truism. But if this is done through mediumistic processes, says our unveracious author, it opens the door to Hades. In this, however, he simply declares the reversal of established truth.

While Spiritualists know better than others, that there are black sheep in the fold, those who, for reasons best known to themselves, seek to dishonor the name of Spiritualism, they also know of the well-nigh infinite good it has done, the blessing it has wrought, the grand, uplifting and helpful service it has been to countless thousands, and is destined yet so to be to mankind through coming ages; and that these Janus-faced humans are only to be compared to spots on the sun.

Concerning the statistics of mediumship, our unknown author says 58 per cent develop dishonesty and fraud; 60 per cent become hysterical; 73 per cent of professional mediums develop uncontrollable, unholy passions; 85 per cent increase of nervous irritability; 92 per cent increase of sexual appetite, etc. All this without a partical of proof to sustain it.

I hold that these alleged statistics on mediumship are not to be found within the range of the vital statistics or statistics on criminology of any state or institution in the Union; that they are rather the opinion of a prejudiced judge whose biased opinion is unworthy of consideration and because they are evidently more self-manufactured than scientifically authorized.

To put forth with great blare of trumpets such questionable propositions as the foundation for an elaborate assault on mediumship per se, and its legitimate results, in a book which, as a whole, is so notably defamatory and libelous—if all this with other reprehensible facts are not subject to the charge of "a great wrong" (which to honestly so declare Mrs. Hamsley thinks is the acme of "creed-bound bigotry") where in the annals of literary criminality is such a wrong to be declared?

Towards the close of her article my lady mentor lays double stress (i. e., in small caps) against my suggestion that those replies be separately published that successfully refute the propositions in the book as "it appeals to her as an intellectual impossibility, because they deal with one side of the question."

It is hard to think that she is so purblind as not to see that this, in a pronounced degree, is just what the book itself does—that it presents one side, the off side, of the question, which she so vehemently approbates.

Mrs. Hamsley is very liberal in charging Hudson Tuttle with not reading the book intelligently, while I am charged with a careless reading of the reviewing articles referred to, and that possibly in re-reading them I may change my view-point, etc.

Whether "careless" or otherwise, I have re-read them and am more convinced than ever, that the criticisms as a whole, show the author's treatment, despite its great pretensions, to be practically valueless as a contribution to psychological truth.

Think of all the home circles throughout the land, where once sundered families are again united through the blessed boon of mediumship, where grief is assuaged, hearts are blest and life made joyous in the realization of the presence of the "loved ones gone before."

To be seriously told by one who never has had any experience of the kind, that to temporarily entertain, occasionally or frequently, a visiting spirit-friend who always proves worthy of the worthiest consideration, with whom reciprocal obligations are recognized and properly appreciated, where benefits are received and conferred beyond the power of words to express—to be told that such visits inevitably result in natural degeneracy on the one part, and viciousness on the other, calls for the exercise of the greatest charity.

To summarize: The reviewers referred to, convincingly show that the author's bitter prejudice is apparent throughout the entire book; that his presentation being one-sided, it is neither true nor just; that it is lamentably incomplete and partial and thus necessarily deluding; that his propositions are erroneous and his conclusions fallacious; that no verification is shown of his statements as to facts; that his reported statistics as to mediumship are without authority, and their proof is demanded; that his views of mediumship are regarded as unwarrantable, his conclusions respecting it being at variance with overwhelming, self-evident facts of a totally different character; that the evils inevitably resulting from mediumistic control are grossly overstated and practically false, as witnesses without number can testify.

But not to epitomize further, the book as a whole is shown to be misleading and without authoritative weight.

Finally, from my own experience and observation, extending over many years, the statements as to the evils inevitably resulting from the legitimate exercise of mediumship, in my judment, are slanderous in character, and an insult to every self-respecting medium and psychic in the land.

Two Thoughtful Minds Present Their Views.

Objects to Subjective Mediumship.

If the editor will allow me space in his paper I would like to say something in regard to the discussion of The Great Psychological Crime. I agree with the author in some particulars and disagree with him in others.

One of my earliest recollections was seeing a table tip, or, rather, what is called physical mediumship. I, as a child, was never allowed to place my hands on the table with the rest of them who sat in the seance. I was always told that only our dead friends and relatives ever communicated with us; that they were the only ones interested in us.

When I was fifteen years of age my father attended a seance in which he was told that I would make a slate-writing medium. Now I was always interested in that phase of mediumship, and I thought of all mediums that I wouldn't be a trance medium, although I had never seen any medium in a trance. I was absolutely ignorant of all kinds of mediumship except the table-tipping.

Now as to a proof of immortality I had never had any. I accepted all assertions of a future life as true as a person of that age will do. I decided that if I could become a slate-writing medium that was just what I wanted So I sat for development, but no writing came, but something entirely different. To describe accurately what the feelings of a trance medium are at first is impossible; suffice it to say they were not long in controlling. When I found that in some one else controlling me I was absolutely helpless, I became frightened. I didn't want to go any farther, but my friends said, "Go on; they won't hurt you." It was with them as with the children of old. What was with them? "Thus, saith the Lord," because "Thus saith the spirits."

THE INFLUENCES AT FIRST SEEMED GOOD, BUT I SOON LEARNED THAT A GOOD MANY LIARS WERE DEAD, AND THAT THEY HAD NOT GOT RID OF THEIR PRINCIPAL HABIT. IT BEHOOVES ME TO STOP, AND RIGHT HERE LET ME SAY IT TAKES ALL THE WILL POWER A PERSON CAN COMMAND TO COMBAT THESE LYING INFLUENCES, AND THE INFLUENCES OF YOUR FRIENDS THAT ARE LIVING.

While trance mediumship may be interesting to people it is far from it to those most concerned. Some have said it is "more blessed to give than to receive," but I say there is a limit, and when it comes to giving away your own individuality, THAT EXCEEDS THE LIMIT. Some have said, "THAT LIKE ATTRACTS LIKE," BUT I HAVE FOUND THAT THERE ARE PLENTY OF INFLUENCES ON THE OTHER SIDE OF LIFE AS READY TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF YOUTH AND INEXPERIENCE, AS THERE ARE ON THIS; AND I BELIEVE IT IS OUR DUTY TO KEEP AWAY FROM SUCH INFLUENCES AND TO LIVE SO THAT WE WON'T BECOME ONE OF THEM WHEN WE ARE "OVER THERE."

But there is one good side to all of this. I know there is a future life. I have been thoroughly convinced of that, a knowledge for which I would not take anything in exchange. Where some people say that some medium convinced them of a future life, I can say that the people we call dead convinced me of it beyond a doubt.

Yours Truly,

THE BOOK APPEALS TO REASON AND GIVES INSPIRATION TO LIFE.

To the Editor:—As one of a small number of students who are taking the preliminary work of the School of Natural Science, under a special instructor, I have for the past eight months been closely studying the Harmonic series of books.

As such, I think it is but right for me to enter the discussion of the book, "The Great Psychological Crime," which you have invited the readers of it to have in The Progressive Thinker. The discussion of the scientific side of the book, I leave to those why by their calling and training, are so much better fitted than I to discuss that side.

I think no one, however, can read the book without being impressed with the author's sincerity of purpose and fairmindedness to those who will take exception to his statements.

The principles and facts as set forth in The Great Psychological Crime appeal to my reason as nothing has ever done before.

I have a new and higher conception of life, a clearer understanding of the natural and spiritual laws. I find that as I try in my simple way to approach nearer to the standard as shown in The Great Psychological Crime, I am able for the first time in my philosophical studies to pass on in a logical way to others who are seeking the way of life, the truths which turn darkness into light.

As one who has gone but a step along the path that leads to the heights beyond, I would say to those whom the book may appeal to it is my earnest hope that they will find in it the same help and inspiration to "lead the life" as I have found.

THE HOME CIRCLE.

It Is Attended With Excellent Results.

We have a nice home circle, consisting of myself and wife, Miss May Fellers, of McPherson, Kansas, Mr. Sanford and wife, and Mr. Carpenter. We are developing trumpet, materialization and clairvoyance, and we are getting fine manifestations. I will add here as to what started us on the road to light and truth.

Some three years ago we resided in McPherson, Kansas, and that grand medium, Mrs. Parsons, of Wichita, visited our town. My wife and I went to her for a reading. Neither of us knew anything about Spiritualism. She gave me a good reading, and to my wife she said, "Why, you are a medium." She told my wife she could now get raps and move a table. We went home and got out the table, and put our hands on it, as she told us, and in a few minutes we heard raps. My wife then asked the table to move, and it got up and rocked like a rocking chair. I tried to hold it, and could not. I got on top of it, and it threw me off. I never saw anyone hold it yet. I have seen my wife put one hand on the table, and it would walk from one room to the other. I have seen old white-headed men sit at the table and ask questions, and get communications from their departed, and get up with tears in their eyes and say, "Well, that beats me." So, friends, that is why we are Spiritualists.

Our medium, Mr. Carpenter, is developed for both materialization and trumpet work. I think he is the best medium I have ever met. He is the only one I know of in the state who produces full illuminated forms. I have seen him do this in lamp light, almost light enough to read. I have seen forms come from his cabinet of all sizes, from one foot high to six feet, and talk and give their names. I have seen the trumpet illuminated and floating around the room talking, or joining in some song we were singing. At the same time a form, illuminated, would walk out of the cabinet, while the spirits were rocking the medium in the cabinet. These manifestations have all occurred at my house and I know they are genuine. Mr. Carpenter has converted many skeptics. He is just an ordinary hard-working man, and is more interested in making converts than money out of his gifts.

THE WAY TO LIVE.

A loving word, how small the cost,
We miss it not, it is not lost,
It will return an hundred fold,
More precious far than gems or gold.
Then speak it now to friends you meet;
Time steals away on silent feet;
Time ne'er returns, it onward rolls,
Keeping the record of our souls.

The friendly deed when kindly done,
Brings sunshine to the wretched one.
Love is a ray of the divine,
The spirit of the parent vine.
Love vivifies the dormant seed
Hidden from sight by worthless deed.
Love is the subtle cord that binds
In one vast whole all living kinds.

Speak now the word and do the deed
To satisfy thy brother's need;
Assist the poor when in distress,
It is the way to happiness.
Help to increase the widow's mite,
To make her heavy burdens light.
Begin at once, do not delay
To do your duty day by day.

A CALM AND DISPASSIONATE VIEW.

Mrs. Lucinda B. Chandler is a lady of rare intellectual culture, and one time was a trance medium, and her review of The Great Psychological Crime will certainly claim the attention of all thoughtful readers, whether they approve or disapprove the same.

READ THE BOOK WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

If the claim of the author of The Great Psychological Crime is true, that the mediumistic process is destructive of individual life, no divine revelation can transcend its importance. If it is not true an earnest effort should be made to prove its falsity through the independent knowledge on the spiritual plane which the author claims is his source of information.

If mediumistic process is a process destructive to individual life, no one of moral principle and humane sympathies could avail themselves of the services of a medium CONTROLLED by a decarnate spirit. No Spiritualist, and especially no medium, can wisely neglect to study carefully the claims and arguments of this work.

This work suggests the questions, has a higher degree of the evolution of human intelligence as a spiritual being become attainable. Can the incarnate and decarnate human ego or entity independently and intelligently communicate? Can incarnate intelligence reach and become acquainted with the life, activities and conditions of the spiritual plane of existence?

Through the centuries of recorded history the fact of continued existence beyond the incident called death, and demonstration of intelligence by decarnate spirits, has kept alive the faith and hope of immortality in struggling mortals. The last half century of modern Spiritualism has overthrown the dominion of the devil and extinguished the literal hell fire. But though the doctrine of life and immortality brought to light by Jesus and salvation through his atoning sacrifice has become a dead letter, the average Spiritualist HAS NOT BECOME A SELF-CONSCIOUS, INDEPENDENT RECEPTACLE OF KNOWLEDGE ON THE SPIRITUAL PLANE OF BEING.

The "superior state," of which A. J. Davis wrote forty years ago, has received little consideration compared with the exhibitions of mediumship. Not only this, but the common attitude of mind among believers in the inter-communion of visible and invisible worlds is to accept as true and as authority what is believed to come from the decarnate.

The system of Natural Science taught in this work makes immortality the outcome of evolution, the gradual development of persistent life principle from the inorganic mineral through vegetable and animal existence up to the self-conscious human intelligence endowed with the power of independent will and choice.

In Chap. IV, Part II, under the head, "Facts demonstrated," it is stated: "All physical matter, both inorganic and organic, integrates conjointly with a finer ethereal or spiritual pattern, in such manner as to constitute what may properly be termed a double material entity.

"The integration of a physical stone conjointly with its more ethereal pattern is of such a character that upon the sudden and forced disintegration and dissolution of the physical stone its finer ethereal body, or duplicate, remains intact for a comparatively brief period of time. In due course of time the ethereal body disintegrates, and to every appearance returns to its original elements.

"Upon the sudden disintegration and dissolution of an oak tree its ethereal duplicate persists intact for a much longer period than does the ethereal body of the stone.

"At the period of physical dissolution of an animal it is clear (to one who is able to observe the transition) that the spiritual body carries with it the animating principle of the animal entity. This is evidenced by the fact that during its existence as a spiritual organism it appears to possess all the natural faculties and intelligent capacities and powers that belong to the animal entity. The animal, however, in due course of time, disappears from the spiritual plane of the animal kingdom.

"But men, women and children in the course of the ages, disappear from the lowest plane of the kingdom of spiritual man, and yet not always in a manner which is identical with the disappearance of the animal from the spiritual plane of animal life. In other words, man disappears from the lowest plane of spiritual life IN EITHER OF TWO DIFFERENT MANNERS, AND BY TWO DISTINCTLY OPPOSITE METHODS OR PROCESSES.

"That is to say, under the constructive principle and process of evolution, growth, development and progress, he disappears from the lowest plane of spiritual life, only to appear upon the next higher, inhabiting a finer spiritual organism, and in possession of all the natural faculties, capacities and powers with which he was invested at the time of the transition and with the same individuality. BUT UNDER THE OPERATION OF THE OPPOSITE PRINCIPLE AND PROCESS OF DESTRUCTION, OR DEVOLUTION, MAN ALSO DISAPPEARS FROM THE LOWEST PLANE OF HIS SPIRITUAL LIFE IN A MANNER WHICH CORRESPONDS IN EVERY ESSENTIAL PARTICULAR WITH THE DISAPPEARANCE OF THE ANIMAL."

The soul that sinneth it shall die, is the scriptural statement of the same idea, of transgression of the law of growth and the progress toward perfection.

According to the exposition of Natural Science by the author, man possesses in addition to the life elements of the forms of life below him the soul elemnet that gives "those added characteristics of self-consciousness, independent choice, reason and the power of independent, self-conscious and rational will and volition."

That these are the characteristics and powers which invest human soul with responsibility is indisputable.

The statement of the author that from this point of vision the mind is able to note what appears to be a far-reaching design of universal intelligence, namely, to ultimately evolve an order of being which shall possess within itself the power and ability to transcend the operation of Nature's Destructive Principle," hints the possible truth of his claim that human soul determines its immortality by its complete exercise of reason, independent choice, independent self-conscious and rational will and volition.

The startling and perhaps to the majority of Spiritualists the untrue and repugnant claim that the mediumistic process is destructive to individual life, it is the evident purpose of the publication of the book to prove, and to arrest thought in consideration of the subject.

Spiritualists and mediums can devote themselves to no more important endeavor than to discover if this claim is true or false. If it cannot be disproved, the first suggestion of humane and moral impulse is to refrain from the risk of promoting the destructive principle of individual life in the medium by seeking the medium's services.

We cannot dispute that mediumship is a subjective psychic process. Can we deny that "TO THE EXTENT THAT THE MEDIUM IS CONTROLLED the faculty of independent self-conscious will and volition are destroyed? "In so far as mediumship exists, at any given time, it deprives the medium of the ability to exercise each and every one of the faculties, capacities and powers of the mind and soul upon which his individual responsibility depends," is a statement not easy to contradict.

That physical and moral degeneracy are not infrequently the result of a continued exercise of mediumship is well known. The chapter on mediumship and insanity opens up a field of searching thought to those who can accept the possible correctness of the statement, "that something like 58 per cent of all the insanity of the country is the result of the mediumistic process." The author explains that "BY NO MEANS ALL OF THIS INSANITY IS DUE TO THE SPECIFIC WORK OF THOSE WHO ARE KNOWN TO THE WORLD AS MEDIUMS. BUT A VERY CONSIDERABLE PERCENTAGE OF IT IS FOUND AMONG MEN AND WOMEN WHO KNOW PRACTICALLY NOTHING OF THE MEDIUMISTIC PROCESS, OR THE PHILOSOPHY OF MODERN SPIRITUALISM."

Has the period of human evolution arrived when not only further progress, but safety from insanity and moral deterioration, depends upon absolute knowledge of the laws of being, of the constructive and destructive principles of nature, and the responsibility of human soul?

The author makes an extensive analysis of mediumship, but does not enter upon the distinction between mediumship and psychic development that is independent. He states in the chapter on Facts Demonstrated, that "it is entirely within the ability of every individual who possesses the necessary intelligence, courage and perseverance to prove the truth of every statement herein (the chapter) contained, provided he also has the necessary time, place and environment for study under proper and efficient instruction."

The author "hopes to be able in a future volume to give a detailed account of his own personal experiences, studies and demonstrations, together with the nature of his instruction during the twenty years he has been engaged in acquiring the knowledge which enables him to speak with unconditional assurance."

That many perhaps who call themselves mediums possess a degree of normal or independent psychic faculty is probable. The author does not touch upon this point. To prove that the CONTROL of will and self-conscious volition is disastrous to the individual CONTROLLED, and to the DEGREE OF CONTROL is the evident purpose of the writer of The Great Psychological Crime.

Dogmatic Christianity the Great Crime of the Age.

The great psychological crime of the ages, past and present, is dogmatic Christianity. Its victims as compared with the hypnotic subjects, either of mortals or decarnate spirits, is like counting the grains of sand on the seashore and the ten digits. The students of history need no details of the crimes committed under the auspices of religious bigotry. The discussions under the "Symposium" may be interesting for a debating club, and they tell no new thing that cannot be found for a basis of argument in Higgins' Anacalypsis and other like authorities.

Pure Christianity as like unlike dogmatic Christianity as light is from darkness, the first being based on altruistic principles, and the latter is founded on myths and superstitions.

The first gospel was the annunciation that the kingdom is nigh at hand. The second gospel is, "love ye one another" It is this gospel that must be preached in simple purity to and be accepted by the masses to save the world from the selfishness and greed of power now prevailing. It needs no new cult, adorned with fringes, to be learned. It is simple and free as the air we breathe. It is to be good, to do good; and to cultivate to the highest extent the soul's possibilities. It can be had without money and without price.

TWO IN ONE

A COMBINATION OF

"The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" Into one Volume.

BY MOSES HULL.

This highly instructive and interesting work is a combination into one volume of two of Mr. Hull's splendid works. By this arrangement the cost is such that the reader is enabled to secure the two books combined at the same price as was formerly asked for them separately. This volume contains 463 pages and is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains an excellent portrait of the author.

THE QUESTION SETTLED

is a careful comparison of Biblical and Modern Spiritualism. No book of the century has made so many converts to Modern Spiritualism as this. The author's aim, faithfully to compare the Bible with modern phenomena and philosophy, has been accomplished. The adaptation of Spiritualism to the wants of humanity; its moral tendency; the Bible Doctrine of angel ministry; the spiritual nature of man, and the objections offered to Spiritualism, are all considered in the light of the Bible, nature, history, reason and common sense, and expressed clearly and forcibly.

THE CONTRAST

consists of a critical comparison of Evangelicalism and Spiritualism. It is a most able production, and is a perfect storehouse of facts for those who wish to defend Spiritualism, or find arguments against the assumptions of Orthodoxy.

ORIGIN OF SPECIES,

By means of natural selection, or the preservation of a favored race in the struggle for life. By Charles Darwin. Gilt top, cloth bound. This book is the grandest achievement of modern scientific thought and research. It has passed through many editions in English, has been translated into almost all the languages of Europe, and has been the subject of more reviews, pamphlets and separate books than any other volume of the age. Most of the great scientists of the age fully support his position. The thought of this book has become a part of the common inheritance of the race. For sale at this office. Price 75 cts.

EXTRAORDINARY MANIFESTATION OF SPIRIT POWER

To the Editor:—I have recently witnessed such a wonderful phenomenon in the matter of materialization that I deem it important that the world should have the benefit of what I witnessed, from the fact it has revolutionized my ideas as to the process of materialization, and it may enlighten others.

The sensitive through whom these manifestations come, is a modest lady who shrinks from public notoriety and has not known until within the last year that she possessed the virtue of medial powers at all. Through a casual sitting it was first ascertained that she was a trance sensitive of wonderful endowments. It was given to us that we could get through this sensitive the Order of Melchisedec of which Jesus was made a high priest forever. They have given us two of the degrees, and the meaning of the twelve stones of the temple, which degrees we will impart to any qualified person on proper application. The other degrees we are to get in the near future. We have in our temple an outer and an inner court, or the holy of holies as of ancient fashion. The inner court is held sacred from all intrusions. On each Sunday morning at ten o'clock we hold our family spiritual communion. On each Thursday evening we sit for trance communications.

The sensitive was instructed to procure for herself a white robe. When that was done we were promised a surprise. Last Sunday morning's communion was set apart for the christening of our spirit baby, five months old. The room was prepared by shading the windows, yet everything was discernible in the room through the aid of midday light. There were but three of us at the seance, the sensitive, myself and another person. The sensitive was seated in her chair in the inner temple. The curtains of the inner temple cut her off from our view. The spirit rapping was unusually loud on this occasion for a time. Now let it be remembered that this sensitive had never sat for materialization. In a short time the curtains were parted and the semblance of a human was produced. This was repeated two or three times, and then to our amazement the curtain was pulled aside by some invisible power and the sensitive was revealed leaning back in her chair while from her side seemed to come two kinds of drapery, white and black, which seemed to come together as of themselves and formed; before our eyes, a human being, dressed in a white robe with a long black veil or head dress falling over the person like unto the order of the Sisters of Mercy. The curtains then fell. In a short time they were parted again and a form was standing by the side of the aperture, holding back the curtain. The sensitive was sitting as before in her chair, in her lap was lying some white and black fabric, that commenced to come together, and out of it grew a child which arose from the lap of the sensitive and floated away from her into the back corner of the seance chamber where it assumed the form of a tall woman who floated up to the door and dissolved before our eyes. The curtain fell, and in a moment an infant was lying in the arm of the sensitive. A man then appeared and at once dissolved. Another man appeared three times. Thus materializations were compounded in our presence and the sensitive was in full view until twenty-two forms were produced We were then informed by the cabinet control that the power had been exhausted and that we would have another seance one year from that day, Dec. 24, 1904.

I asked the one managing the phenomena how it was done, and he said, "I do not know. All I know is we do it, but cannot explain to you the process.

Liberal, Mo. G. H. WALSER.

LYMAN C. HOWE.

An Explanation, and Items of News.

To the Editor:—I left home—as I wrote you—last Saturday afternoon, Jan. 2. No word from you or Mrs. Huntley had reached Fredonia at that time, and if it had arrived Monday, the 4th, it should have followed me here and been in my possession by this time. But nothing has come. It is almost three weeks since I sent in my last, and I thought surely I would get her reply before New Year's day. If hers appears this week my reply could not reach you in time for next week's paper. So I have anticipated it, and send it on herewith.

Last Sunday was unpropitious for the beginning of a month's work at the Spiritual Church. Nevertheless we had a fair audience in the morning, and several times as many in the evening, and good interest manifest The children surprised me by their interest in the lyceum on such a wintry day, Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds prayed for me, and in the evening followed with exhibitions of her mediumship.

Mr. Eddy was at his post selling books and papers.

In Mrs. Dr. Matteson's home has lived a little grandson named Herrington Matteson He was active and original, and always hailed me when he saw me on the street. He was seven years old, and, for a child, very social and companionable, with adults. About Christmas —or the day following—he complained some, and at midnight awoke his grandma, and a little after 4 a. m. his little body was cold in death. It was a shock to all, and his presence is greatly missed in the household.

To-day I met Mrs. Helen M. Reilley—last remaining sister of John S. Starr, whose wife is sister to Bishop A. Beals. She informed me that her sister, Mrs. Phebe C. Chaffee, died at her home, 1491 Elk street, Buffalo, N. Y., January 1, aged 59 years, 11 months and 14 days. She was a medium and very useful in healing the sick for many years. Forty and forty-five years ago, when Elizabeth Lowe—now Mrs. E. L. Watson, of California—H. Clay Burch, of Smith's Mills, Bishop A. Beals, George W. Taylor and myself were stirring the religious embers, and frightening the clergy and their dupes with our spiritual heresies, we occasionally visited Versailles, where we met John Starr and family, Elisha Brown and wife, and Mrs. Reilley and Mrs. Chaffee frequently, and the echoes of those early days of pioneer life and spiritual enthusiasm quiver in memory when we meet the friends that stood by us then. It is "something sweet to think of," and the touch of those magic keys awakens reflections aglow with the light and warmth of human and heavenly love.

Mrs. A. Atcheson, the phychic, spoke at Niagara Falls, Sunday evening, where she has been doing faithful work for a year and a half or more, and she reports a growing interest and strength in her society

The State Association is to hold a three-days' meeting in the First Spiritual church—corner of Jersey and Prospect street—where my work is—on the 15th 16th and 17th of January. H. W. Richardson, of East Aurora, is president of the State Association, and I suppose this meeting will be under his supervision. I hope it will yield ample returns spiritually and financially.

Winter in Western New York is doing its level best to break all previous records, with a fair prospect of success. Its unseasonable pranks played with the programme, while Prof. Lockwood and J. Clegg Wright were the lights of Zion in November and December, 1903.

LYMAN C. HOWE.

From Buffalo, N. Y.

Thursday evening, Dec. 31, the workers connected with the children's lyceum of the First Spiritual Society held an entertainment and Christmas tree in behalf of the children of the lyceum, and a most enjoyable evening was the result, both to the children and the adults present. There was vocal and instrumental music, recitations, also a grand march with flags and banners waving, while the children, teachers and other members were marching. The children's happy faces shone with glee as they passed the Christmas tree, for on it they could see that surely it must be that old Santa Claus had remembered each one, which he had, and in a very bountiful way, for in connection with presents, there were candy and nuts galore. Each one being treated with a package of both, and after the distribution of presents, the children were invited into the dining parlor to partake of refreshments of cake, oranges, candy and coffee, which had been furnished by the workers and friends of the lyceum and society. Two long tables were filled with children who did ample justice to the bountiful supply of good things furnished for them to enjoy, and their bright, happy faces told of the pleasure it was to them.

After the children had been supplied then the friends and older ones sat down to their lunch, while the little ones went back to their packages of presents and candy, also to enjoy themselves which they did until parents arranged for them to go home. But a number of the older members and friends stayed to watch the old year out and the new year in, passing the time in singing and social converse.

Much credit is due Mrs. Dillon and the teachers for their very able efforts in planning and carrying into execution the program of the evening. Much praise and credit is due to these workers and helpers of both lyceum and church society for their very efficient service in helping to make the evening and entertainment an enjoyable one for the children both by the donations for the children and older ones who were remembered.

The ladies of both lyceum and society were very active in serving the children at the refreshment tables and in the preparation relative to same. The names of those who so ably assisted Mrs. Dillon in making the Christmas tree and entertainment a success were Mrs. Dr. J. H. R. Matteson, Mrs. Jessie Darch, Mrs. Ely, Mrs. Atcheson, Mrs. Whittaker, Mrs. Phelps, Mrs. Kelf, Miss Avery, Mrs. Avery, Mr Atcheson, Mr. Beesing, Mr. Leo Manger, Mr. Byron and others. Mrs. Dr. Matteson's sister rendered a helping hand. The evening was a very enjoyable one to all. Long will it be remembered by each one who participated in giving so much pleasure to the children. N. Volney's Answer to Dr. Priestly, a Biographical Notice by Count Dare, and the Zodiacal Signs and Constellations by the Editor;

Also, a Map of the Astrological Heavens o the Ancients.

This is undoubtedly one of the best and most useful books ever published. It eloquently advocates the best interests of mankind, and clearly points out the sources of human ignorance and misery. The author is supposed to meet in the ruins of Palmyra an apparition or phantom, which explains the true principles of society, and the causes of both the prosperity and the ruin of ancient states. A general assembly of the nations is at length convened, a legislative body formed, the source and origin of religion, of government, and of laws discussed, and the Law of Nature—founded on justice and equity—is finally proclaimed to an expectant world.

The Laws and Principles of Mediumship.

A Lecture by C. W. Stewart.

AN IMPORTANT LECTURE.

C. W. Stewart is one of the prominent lecturers in our ranks, and his views on Mediumship will be perused pleasurably at this time, when The Great Psychological Crime is being so widely discussed in this country and in Europe. We take great pleasure in once more introducing him to our readers.

The greatest drawback to the advancement of Spiritualism is the persistent refusal of a majority of Spiritualists to study the principles and underlying laws of mediumship.

WITHOUT MEDIUMSHIP THERE WOULD BE NO SUCH "CAUSE." It is a trite saying that mediumship is the foundation of Spiritualism, but it would seem more correct to say that mediumship bears the same relation to Spiritualism that the structural steel bears to one of the great modern buildings of our large cities, binding together as it does in massive strength the entire structure from basement to dome, and furnishing the sustaining strength for all the details of the completed fabric.

Philosophy is neither transcendentalism, metaphysics, nor sophistry.

True philosophy is the logic of phenomena, reason applied to fact. The phenomena of the starry heavens were the same from all eternity, that they now are, but it required the intellectual development of a Copernicus, a Galileo, a Kepler and a Newton to reason out the laws which governed the phenomena and thus produce the philosophy of the heavens called astronomy.

Spiritual phenomena are merely natural phenomena, belong to, and form a part of, the natural universe, hence any philosophy of Spiritualism worthy of the name must connect itself with all other natural phenomena and align itself with the cosmic order.

Our life here is natural and every manifestation of life here ranges itself with all other natural manifestations, and unless it can be shown that death causes a break in the chain of our individual life then it follows that the next stage of existence is but a continuation of this—is really but one expression of life in different states or conditions. As our life here is but a differentiated expression of natural energy acting through certain specialized modes or conditions, it follows that in any other state of being, the same life must necessarily be the expression of natural energy through certain modes or conditions.

This being true, the only genuine spiritual philosophy must be based upon what is commonly known as material science.

Many Spiritualists have been prone to antagonize so-called materialism, and a strenuous effort has been made to force Spiritualism into the groove of theological dualism. But the time is coming when material science will clear away the mass of transcendental rubbish which now befogs the subject, and there will then be a clear recognition of the fact that there is but one cosmos, infinite in time and extent, and that the material and spiritual are but two sides of the same thing.

Sir William Ramsay, professor of chemistry in the University College of London, has recently discovered that the new element radium, is, under certain conditions, transformed into helium, thus in a certain sense, realizing the dream of the ancient alchemists of the transmutability of elements.

Prof. Ramsay also found that very soon after radium became helium, the helium itself disappeared—literally vanished from sight. If this discovery be valid, it proves that all so-called material substance is concentrated from invisible matter and that the normal condition of matter is the invisible. This corresponds with the nebular hypothesis of creation in which a nebulous mass of cosmic gas, by concentration and auxiliary motion becomes a solar system. The cosmic "fire-mist" is but a stage in the process of concentration when the invisible matter becomes visible.

The mineral kingdom represents the utmost limit of this concentration, and the lowest grade of motion. The rocks disintegrate under the action of the elements and this erosion produces the soil which is more mobile than the rocks, is capable of higher vibration, hence becomes the basis of vegetable and animal life.

Two invisible gases, oxygen and hydrogen unite in chemical proportions and form water and water is capable of higher vibration than the soil and is more powerful when in motion.

Two invisible gases mixed together, oxygen and nitrogen, form the atmosphere which is more volatile than water, and when acted upon by heat, becomes terrible in its destructive power, yet remains invisible.

One more step brings us to electricity which even yet, with all of its wonderful utility defies the power of man's research and remains an unsolved problem. One of the mightiest forces in nature, because capable of still higher vibratory mobility it appears to be a form of transmuted energy. The chemical union of carbon with oxygen called fire communicates its vibration to water and converts it into steam. Through the agency of an engine (a medium of communication), this molecular vibration becomes molar or visible motion, and when applied to a dynamo, is converted into electricity. This energy communicated to a wire, moves the trolley car, and when it passes through a non-conductor, heats it to incandescence, and is reconverted into heat and light.

The correlation and conservation of energy conclusively proves the transmutation of energy and establishes a very wide cycle. And all of these facts point to the theory of the universal transmutation of so-called matter. And it is quite probable that one day it will be discovered that matter and energy are but two conditions of the same thing.

The next step brings us to magnetism, which in the form of animal magnetism is the motor power of the animal body and in the highly complex human being becomes the agent of mentality and will.

The next and last step brings us to mind, the highest manifestation of natural energy, the power which controls the mighty forces of nature, and is the most subtle vibratory force that exists.

The ancient philosophers were wont to speak of the ether, as the abode of the gods. Titus, the Roman general who destroyed Jerusalem, is quoted by Josephus as telling his soldiers that the spirits of those slain in battle ascended into the pure ether and dwelt among the gods, and became propitious daemons to guide and influence human beings in this world. By modern science this ether was assumed because it was necessary to explain the undulatory theory of light. But now, so much light has been thrown upon the subject by modern investigation that the existence of the ether is now a theory as nearly established as it could well be without actual demonstration.

That this substance fills space as interplanetary ether, but as no two molecules of the solidest substance actually touch, this ether fills and penetrates all substances as intermolecular ether. By its vibrations light is carried with stupendous velocity from planet to planet and sun to sun through billions of miles of space. And there is no doubt that as the fish finds its home in water and the bird its home in the air, this to us invisible ether becomes the home of the liberated soul, with its ethereal body on the dissolution of the psysical form

Baron Reichenbach, of Germany, devoted much of his time to the study of what he was pleased to denominate Od force. In his investigations he found that certain persons whom he called "sensitives," possessed this force in an abnormal degree. His experiments with those persons were very interesting. Placing one of them in a dark room where a magnet had been put, the person would, in a short time, be able to see an aura of light surrounding the magnet. Then, unknown to the first, he would place another sensitive in the dark room and they would be able to see each other by the aura or halo which surrounded them. He carried his experiments to the extent that this peculiar aura could be seen to penetrate a solid wall and become visible in another room.

Baron Reichenbach was not a Spiritualist, nor was he investigating the subject other than as an experimental scientist. But his discovery furnishes a clew to the mystery of mediumship. For his "sensitives" are the very persons who are subject to hypnotic influence and provides the peculiar class of persons that are known as spiritual media.

It is a wonderful transition from the incandescent nebulae to a blazing sun, and from that to a solid, rock-bound earth, and back upward through the cycles of evolutionary development to a thinking, living human being with brain and nerves and strength and reason, but we know that this wondrous transition has been made. The wonder is, not that man lives beyond the change called death, but the wonder would be if he did not so live.

And as we have shown that animal magnetism is the most delicate, subtle form of vibratory energy, and that the intermolecular ether is the most delicate substance to be acted upon, this force and this substance coming together in the most complex of organisms, the human body and brain produce the phenomena of life and thought in their highest expression. And more than this, by a superabundance of their united activity, they raise the vibratory status of the brain and nerves of such persons to a point where they may see invisible objects, hear inaudible sounds, and furnishes the vibratory force which enables invisible spirits to speak in audible tones, and to clothe themselves with substance and render themselves temporarily visible to mortal sight.

Prof. John Tyndall, in his lectures on light, tells us that the human eye is limited in its capacity to register impressions. That below a certain number of vibrations which make the red ray, and above the vibration of the violet ray, the eye is powerless, but there are higher and lower vibrations of light which are beyond the limit of the normal eye. Huxley and Helmholtz show that the same is true of the human ear in its relation to sound and Huxley says that were the ear sufficiently developed it could hear the music of the blooming flowers.

This is precisely what mediumship does. It is a suprasensitive development which permits a higher degree of vibration than the normal, which raises such persons to the plane of spirit existence where they can see, and hear that which is invisible and inaudible to the ordinary senses. The proof of this is found in the following facts: Some mediums while being subjected to influence manifest inordinate thirst similar to that experienced by men who are wounded in battle, and they will drink great quantities of water. Many mediums are ravenously hungry after a seance, while others experience a lethargy similar to that which follows intoxication. All of which shows that the brain and nervous system has been subjected to an extreme tension.

As morphine, ether, and chloroform cause stimulation to the point of unconsciousness, it would seem that the trance condition results from supranormal stimulation of the brain from extraneous influence, with this difference, however, that the stimulation which produces trance is caused by magnetic energy, while in the other instance it is caused by the infusion of poison into the brain through the circulation. As a further illustration note the following:

Take a violin tuned at A. Now take another violin tuned at C and there is no relation of tone between them. Now time the latter instrument to A. Place them at opposite sides of a room and balance some bits of wood on the strings of one of them. Then strike the strings of the other with your thumb, and you will see the bits of wood fall off from the strings, and this occurs because the wave of vibration from one is responded to by the other. So, when the brain of the medium is keyed up to the vibration of the spirit realm the two vibrate in unison and the medium becomes an instrument for spirit communications.

It is ignorance of these delicate forces and conditions on the part of the public which makes the life of a medium a perpetual martyrdom. As a rule, they are intensely sensitive. Being constantly subjected to suspicion by the ignorant public increases this condition. Even Spiritualists who ought to know better, are clamorous and exacting in their demand for "more tests," regardless of the health and even the life of the medium, and although under absolute test conditions their spirit friends may materialize and talk to them giving names, dates and everything else, unless they can see the "mole on grandfather's nose," or "that wen on grandmother's neck," they will go away with their hearts full of bitterness.

In a seance for trumpet manifestation, this class invariably stick fast on names. It is a curious fact that names are the most difficult things to get in trumpet seances. Herbert Spencer, in his Principles of Sociology, has a clause which explains this. He says:

"To conceive a name, as such, is to conceive it as a symbol of symbols. There must first be observed the fact that special articulato sounds applied to particular things severally, stand related to them in like ways. Before a word can be thought of a name, it must be thought of, not simply as a group of sounds associated with a certain object, but it must be thought of as having a trait in common with many groups. The ability of names to remind other persons of the objects named must be recognized as a general property of names; and then this property must be abstracted in thought from its concrete manifestations before the conception of a name can arise."

Think of dipping a pen in the fragrance of a rose, trying to write with it, and you can form some idea of the delicate forces used in spirit manifestations.

Trumpet mediumship is a compound of several phases. The best trumpet mediumship involves trance, vocalization, and levitation, together with the forces involved in independent writing, public test mediumship, and perhaps others. In proportion to its complexity and the delicacy of the forces used, is it necessary to closely observe the rules which govern it.

When the circle is seated with alternating positives and negatives, for trumpet manifestations in darkness, harmony is the first requisite. The circle should all "be of one accord in one place" like the disciples on the day of Pentecost. Then it becomes a magnetic battery. Music furnishes vibration and the forces drawn from the medium becomes in the hands of spirits, a directive agency. The darkness is simply a negative condition which contributes to passivity. As soon as the delicate forces are properly adjusted a spirit lifts the trumpet and begins to speak; not as a mortal would do, by placing the trumpet to his mouth, but by vocalizing vibrations of sound within the trumpet through the agency of magnetic forces.

A gentle, passive, and receptive attitude on the part of the person addressed, with mild, pleasant response, enables the spirit to continue positive, and the communication will likely be successful. But should the sitter begin in a positive, harsh tone to demand that the spirit speak names and dates, two of the most difficult things to do, as before stated, the entire circle becomes positive and thus reverses the whole process.

Suppose that you stretch a rope between two posts. Stand at one end of the rope and strike it, and you will see a wave of vibration pass along its entire length and return, and this will continue until it dies away. But if two persons strike the rope simultaneously at both ends, two waves will start in opposite directions and when they meet at the center they will cancel each other. Something like this occurs when a spirit voice is speaking and the sitter sends out a positive demand. The two waves of vibration meet and quench each other and the trumpet falls.

Marconi exercised marvelous patience when experimenting for wireless telegraphy, and after months of fruitless work he was at last rewarded by receiving a single letter agreed upon across 8,000 miles of stormy sea. Had he given up in despair after his first failure, and thrown away his instruments and appliances, he would have acted very much like a certain class of investigators of Spiritualism who expect absolute success at one sitting. But Marconi had unlimited patience and his reward was sure.

To say nothing of the general public, not one half of the so-called Spiritualists are ready for the phase of mediumship known as materialization. This, like trumpet mediumship is a complex phase in which chemistry plays an important part.

The body of a spirit is ethereal and therefore invisible to ordinary physical sight. In a materializing seance the medium generates magnetism rapidly, especially while entranced, and through its agency attentuated substance drawn from the bodies, brain and nerves of the circle, and from the atmosphere, are chemically acted upon so as to produce a visible form for the spirits to manifest through, thus rendering them temporarily visible. Much depends upon the knowledge and skill of the individual spirit to enable them to thus manifest. Just as in trumpet work, some spirits readily learn to use the forces and speak with fluency and clearness, while others are totally unable to manifest at all, and yet others with great difficulty, so is it with materialization. All have to learn to use the forces, but like children at school, there is great difference in capacity and adaptability among spirits as well as mortals.

Herbert Spencer says that instead of science removing the marvelous from nature it only increases it. Every chemist knows that this is true in his own specialty. And it is ignorance on the part of skeptics and many Spiritualists concerning the real facts of nature that leads them to think that they know all about these things when they know next to nothing of them.

Suppose that one of those very skeptics who confidently but sneeringly assert that "materialization is all a fraud," should desire to have a silver watch-case electroplated with gold. He would cary the case to an expert workman, and if he watched the process he would behold a miracle of materialization. He would see the operator provide a bath of liquid called aqua regia, which looks no more like gold than so much water. He would see the watch case suspended in this liquid and an elecro-magnetic battery applied to it and in a given time he would see his silver case transformed into a beautiful gold one by a silent, imponderable, invisible force acting upon a liquid holding gold in solution.

Now the ordinary Spiritualist without any knowledge of the real mysteries of nature, instead of being delighted that the form of a departed spirit can come at all out of a cabinet, clothed in purest white when all of the ladies (or gentlemen as the case may be) in the circle have seen the medium placed under absolute test conditions with no clothing on but jet black, will demand impossibilities and condemn the medium unstintedly if everything does not come up to their ideas. Not only this, but they will say and do everything they can to spoil the conditions. Suppose that in the above chemcal experiment the observer would insist that the watch case should be plated without a battery, or that the bath should be filled with soap-suds instead of aqua regia, would the chemist be able to satisfy him? Or suppose that he should demand that the case should come out with a fine Howard movement in it? He would then be on a par with the alleged "honest investigator" who demands that his great-great-grandfather shall come clad in continentals with buckles on his shoes as big as saucers, and tell him where to find a gold mine in Colorado.

A real scientific thinker would be satisfied under such conditions, as was Marconi that something worth while had occurred, no matter what his belief might be. But the average Spiritualist, instead of using what he sees for the purpose of satisfying himself that materialization is true, wants to get full value for his "two bits" and he counts nothing of value, owing to absolute selfishness, but a piece of information that will enable him to get a few dollars.

This is why the life of a genuine medium is a martyrdom, while the fakes and pretenders fatten. Ignorant selfishness seeking gain, or the gratification of malice, spite or lust, flocks to those who advertise to work wonders while you wait. And as the scene of the prophetic wonders is laid in the future, the selfish dupe from Easy street parts with his cash and goes home with his empty head full of the East wind to wait for that which never comes, and when the truth dawns upon him he becomes a bitter foe, or Spiritualism. While it is true that a porch-climber or sneak thief is a paragon of honor or honesty when compared with a bogus medium, it is the ignorant selfishness of the gullible public and half-baked Spiritualists that creates the demand for them.

But some will say, "We know that Spiritualism is true and we don't want test conditions, but we go to the public circles to hear from our friends." Very well, but mediums are not bargain counters. A public seance is for public manifestations to convince people of a great truth. You don't go to church to consult real estate agents, to the theater to get teeth extracted, nor to a pic-nic to consult lawyers. At a public seance be satisfied with what you get, and if you desire to monopolize a few hours of the medium's time for your own personal benefit, it will not cost you a tenth of what it would cost to visit a living relative in a neighboring state.

And above all, when at a public seance don't let your egotism run away with your brain. Don't for a moment imagine that you know more about managing a seance than those who have had great experience in that line. If you are told to keep still, do it. Listen carefully to the rules, as they are the result of long experience or the commands of the controlling spirit. Be as courteous at a seance as you would be at church, and don't imagine that you are the only really honest person on the globe, for were that the case you would, long since, have been translated to higher spheres! Be at least as lenient with a medium as the law is with one accused of crime. The law presumes every man innocent until he is proven guilty, and the jury is always instructed to give the prisoner the benefit of every reasonable doubt. If you go to a genuine medium with a lot of lies, the chances are that you will be shown up in your true character and get the worst of it!

Man is a microcosm, a world in minature. His bony frame corresponds to, and is made from the rock frame of the globe. His fleshy structure corresponds with, and is derived from the soil on which he walks. The brain and nerves respond to the currents of animal magnetism as the earth responds to the electric and magnetic currents which keep it in its orbit and cause its varied motions. And when Prof. John Tyndall startled the sleepy world with the following words in his Belfast address in 1875, he uttered one of the eternal verities:

"Abandoning all disguise, the confession I feel bound to make before you is that I prolong the vision backward across the boundary of the experimental evidence, and discern in that matter, which we in our ignorance, and notwithstanding our professed reverence for its creator, have hitherto covered with opprobrium, the promise and potency of every form and quality of life."

It is this which constitutes the vastness of Spiritualism. It involves the study of man in all of his relations with nature and fixes his place in the universe. Life mortal and life immortal are one, and mediumship is the doorway between the states of being. "Put the shoes from off thy feet when thou standest in the presence of these, for it is holy ground. Purify thy soul, for only the pure in heart shall see God. Let the soul be exalted above all paltry things and seek to make your faith bright with the white light of truth. Cherish mediums, and try to understand them instead of forever condemning them. The very fact that they are willing to face obloquy and contempt, to bring this truth before the world. That they are willing to become targets for the ridicule and scorn of ignorance should be a guaranty of integrity and should cause every Spiritualist to rally to their support and protection.

Only by a careful study of the laws and principles of spirit return can anyone hope to become a true Spiritualist and know and feel the strength of spiritual truth. Do this, and in time to come all science will become alive with a true religion and all religion be luminous with scientific verity.

TRUTH FOR A BASIS.

God in Poetry—The Songs We Sing.

I am willing to believe in a God and accept that doctrine, if it is true; but I do not want to believe anything that is false or unreal, as some folks do; for believing a thing true does not make it true. There should always be the basis of truth for faith to rest upon, because faith in things unreal is a serious damage to the minds of believers. I am willing to be convinced and converted, and I hereby solicit and importune my opponents in sentiment to convince and convert me to Theism, if they can. And I will tell them how this may be done—that is, produce some clear proof of the existence of a God or Deity—just a few facts—just a little sound evidence and some demonstrations.

Now, in proving a god it is essential to state definitely which god; for there is a number of different gods in dispute among god-believers, and they can't agree. It would be no satisfaction to believe in a god unless I know which one it is; therefore, I want to be able to identify that particular god beyond a reasonable doubt. I shall also insist on knowing what kind of a god it is—single, double or triple—if it is a unity, duality or trinity—a one-headed, two headed or three-headed god—or if it is that big god treated of in Pantheism, which takes in all other gods. These are perplexing problems.

With a show of transcendentalism many modern poets make a lavish use of the word God, presumably as an ornament or flowery flourish; too stupid they are to perceive that it is a real blot and blemish on the face of poetry, and serves only to mislead and confuse the human mind. It is simply a figure of fancy that no one can define or understand.

When any writer or speaker undertakes to teach or recognize Theism by making use of the word God or any of its synonyms or substitutes as expressing belief and sentiment, it depreciates and weakens his or her speech or written production in proporton to its use. I know that the people are getting tired of and disgusted with theistic speech and literature, because they think so, say so and act accordingly. They will not waste time in reading that kind of trash. To prove this I will relate a case in point.

A certain paper, once a first-class Spiritualist journal, once had 20 subscribers in Summerland, which is a very large percentage of Spiritualists here. It came to pass that the editor was suddenly converted to orthodox Theism, and began to fill the editorial pages with old trash about God and Jesus and abundant Bible quotations. Writers who were opposed to that kind of literature were barred out, while contributors with plenty of old religious doctrines were admitted, until that paper contained more God and more Jesus to the square foot than the average religious newspaper. The consequence was the number of readers began to decline until it went below half a dozen subscribers.

For many years The Progressive Thinker's subscribers in this town have congregated at the postoffice every Friday in glorious anticipation of receiving their welcome friend, with its load of interesting and instructive literature.

Some Spiritualists continue to sing the old songs their ancestors sung, and it is a fair supposition that they still hold the faith and sentiments expressed in them; for if they do not it is out of order to sing them; and more, it is false and deceptive. How often do they carelessly sing,

"Yes, we'll gather at the river,
The beautiful, the beautiful river,
Gather with the saints at the river
That flows by the throne of God."

I do wish some of the singers, after they land in the spirit world and get "Nearer, My God, to Thee," would send back messages giving detailed accounts of some things they sing about. We want some particulars about that throne, God sitting on it and the man on the right hand side and the "beautiful river" and the saints and angels.

It is very strange and curious that, in the hundreds of true messages received from the spirit world the spirits have never given any information confirming these matters. We cannot think this an accidental oversight, nor that they have neglected to perform this duty; therefore we must come to the inevitable conclusion that the ideas, thoughts, sentiments expressed in many of the old songs that are sung must be fabrications and vagaries of benighted human minds, with no foundation in fact.

In point of music many of the old church melodies are all right and perfect. In beauty, excellence, sublimity; in harmony and melody of song the old melodies have never been surpassed. We love those old tunes and shall never consent to part with them; but the sentiment, doctrines, principles of old hymns and psalms can go, and be gone forever.

We want the exact truth that our conscience approves, expressed in suitable poesy to fit the old melodies, which carry power, beauty, sublimity. This has been done in some instances, and I will reproduce a few songs that have been thus transformed—that should be committed to memory and sung by true Spiritualists. Good vocal music promotes intellectual, moral and spiritual exaltation.

The Seance.

(Air: Sweet Hour of Prayer.)

Sweet quiet hour to us most dear,
That brings our spirit friends so near,
With tokens pure of heav'nly love
From that bright land, the home above.
We sit and look with pure delight
On their dear forms in robes of white,
And treasure every word of love
Vouchsafed to us from those above.

We thank and bless the spirit pow'r
That gives to us this sacred hour,
When we can clasp the precious hands
Reached out to us from border lands.
They tell us that our homes above
Will be bright mansions filled with love,
And say we all may drink the wine
That fills our souls with light divine.

Hold the Fort.

Ho! my comrades, see the signal,
Waving in the sky,
Angel hosts are now appearing,
Victory is nigh.

Chorus:—
Hold the fort, for light is coming,
Angels signal still,
Raise the banners high before it,
By their help we will.

See the mighty hosts advancing,
Error leading on;
Mighty men among them falling,
Courage almost gone.

See the glorious banner waving,
Hear the bugle blow;
Spirits' gospel plan shall triumph
Over every foe.

Fierce and long the battle rages,
Now our help is near;
Bands of spirits still are near us,
Cheer, my comrades, cheer.

Summer Land.

(Tune: Beulah Land.)

There is a land I long to see,
Where loving friends now wait for me,
Where clouds of sorrow grief and pain
Can never come to us again.

Chorus:—
Oh! Summer Land, sweet Summer Land,
Upon thy shores I long to stand;
To float upon the azure sea,
Dwell in the home prepared for me,
Embrace my loved ones o'er and o'er,
And be with them forevermore.

I long to tread the forest aisles
And meadows where bright verdure smiles
Through valleys plowed by laughing rills,
And o'er the emerald-tinted hills.
Sweet Summer Land! oh! may I be Prepared to view thy glories free,
Oh! may I be so free from guile
My soul may mirror back thy smile.

From Another View-Point.

Prof. Olmstead, of Kansas City, Mo., presents his views in regard to The Great Psychological Crime. He claims that the Author of the book has a "Colossal Egotism," and he gives his reasons therefor. We take pleasure in introducing the Professor to our readers.

THE GREAT PSYCHOLOGICAL Crime

What is it? Truly a startling title. Has such a crime been committed? If so, who are the culprits? The author is one who claims to know that he is a member of a secret society that has made the discovery. It may be the same society that Madame Blavatsky formed several years before her death, which she termed the Esoteric Section, the members being taken from the Theosophical Society scattered over the world. It should be understood that the Theosophical Society was, or is, if it is alive to-day exoteric and in order to get the hidden secrets one must be a member of the Esoteric Section.

This book that claims to bring to light and expose the great crime comes to us in the character of an anonymous letter, where the author withholds his name, but selects a woman to adorn the title page and hides himself under her shadow. It is now over fifty years since little Kate Fox started the ball to rolling which has circled the globe bringing joy to the bereaved hearts of millions of people and proving beyond a doubt that there is no death, convincing people from all walks of life from the highest to the lowest, all resting serenely in the knowledge that the old question asked by Job, "if a man die shall he live again," had been answered in the affirmative, until now this unknown comes forward with an anonymous book and informs us that our wonderful fact has cost a crime, a great crime, "The Great Psychological Crime," that he is a member of a secret society that knows things beyond the ken of some of the brightest minds on earth to say nothing of many millions of lesser lights, all being included among the guilty ones. This would-be spy in our camp who is no friend to our cause has simply furnished a club for the bigoted enemy who have been fighting us all these years and who were the last to accept the great fact discovered by Galileo of the motion of the earth, and he hides his identity from us.

While he does not give us his name it is evident from our readings that he is posing as an adept, or perhaps what the Theosophists call a Mahatma (Great Soul), a member of a secret brotherhood said to exist in India with a few members in other parts of the world, the names of two only having been made public—by Sinnett in his Occult World—one of them he called Koot Hoomi, the one who plagiarized a speech delivered by Henry Kiddle, of New York City.

It is very strange that the spokesman of this secret society made us wait a half century before exposing our cause, knowing all the time that millions of people all over the world were daily committing the greatest crime in the calendar, the one that touches the very soul of man and in some cases resulting in its total annihilation.

Surely this is an awful charge, and if it is true, why is it that this secret society waited so long in exposing it? This secret society if it exists was not formed yesterday, but is many centuries old. Some years ago the Theosophical Society, under the auspices of the adept brotherhood of India, was formed. The three leading members were Col. Olcott of India, its president; Wm. Q. Judge of New York City, its secretary, and Madame Blavatsky, its oracle, the connecting link between the society and the brotherhood of India.

Quite a number of branches were formed in this country and considerable zeal was manifested for a time, but later on it died out and from present appearances the branches, if indeed any are still in existence, show no life. There never seemed to be much harmony of action in the upper triad (Olcott, Judge and Blavatsky) and this may have been one cause of the failure of the society, added too, of course, by the fraudulent action of the secretary with the intercepted letters, an account of which was published at the time in book form.

It will not be necessary to refer to the COLOSSAL EGOTISM of this enemy who is flaunting his imaginary superiority in our faces, but it may be well to consider his possible motives. May it not be an effort to put new life in the Theosophical Society and revive it by drawing members from among the Spiritualists, that he can frighten; it looks like it; besides there may be position and graft in that direction.

But one thing is certain, there is money in the book, according to Hudson Tuttle, for the printers' charge for getting it out is only twenty cents per copy or less.

We have a right to believe that the book is only a compilation of the opinions of the members of the society of which he claims to be a member. Hence it is not the product of any one person's brains or experience, but of the society as a whole.

But if the book is his very own, and he is an adept, then of course, all profits go to him. If this be true and he is an adept, he is using his wonderful unfoldment for private gain, for a selfish purpose, and to do this will rank him with the black magicians. His plan to sell the book and get it before the public is a shrewd one. The high-sounding title and the large circulation of The Progressive Thinker, calling attention to it and requiring that all who desired to comment on it to buy it, will doubtless create a large demand for it.

Instead of using the devil to scare people as the preachers do to get a following, he has substituted hypnotism, and is using it after the manner of the so-called divines, and the threatened results being the same in each case. It has taken many centuries to dispose of the devil, and just how long it will take to dispose of this new devil under a new name remains to be seen. All informed people know that hypnotism is only another name for Mesmerism, which to wrongly use was what was meant in the early days by the unpardonable sin.

We all know that what is called good and evil are everywhere present, and where the sons of God meet his majesty, evil is always present.

WE ALL KNOW THAT HE WHO SEEKS EVIL THINGS IN SPIRITUALISM CAN FIND THEM.

We all also know that all the people in the spirit world are not angels of light. We also know that like seeks its like; that birds of feather seek their kind and no one seeks the evil influences from the celestial world unless he is of the same in character.

If this unknown author has been spending his leisure in trying to sound the depths of the nether world, it was his privilege to do so, but I question his right to consign us all to the depths he reached in his investigations. But one charge he makes is that in some cases a soul is lost.

How does he know?

What proof has he?

According to his theory when the man ceases to breathe here his existence ceases. He is blotted out. He makes the charge, he must prove it, we know he cannot. Why? Because it is admitted in the very highest circles among the Theosophists, and that society represented the old so-called wisdom religions, that the only proof they have of the continuity of life they get from our spiritual mediums, and no such information ever passed through the lips of a medium. The writer of the above was instrumental in forming a Theosophical branch in the city where he resides and remained with it several years and then withdrew from it, and gave as the reason for leaving that he had been unable to acquire any facts that could be proven, and he is aware that the only reason for its existence was to take the place of Spiritualism, and there isn't sufficient known truth in the society to hold it together.

RAMBLING REMARKS.

Suggestions for the Benefit of Spiritual Societies.

To all the readers and patrons of The Progressive Thinker, a "Happy New Year." May its up-to-date, progressive editor wax stronger and stronger in health and be inspired to make his excellent paper even greater and better than ever before. Spiritualism, pure and undefiled, without prefix or suffix, has ever been its theme, and both sides of every question have had a hearing in its columns.

A frank confession of ideas is always the source of wisdom. Students at college always learn more from one another, through mental friction, than they do from their class rooms or text-books. So it is with the students of the great movement of Spiritualism; they glean wisdom from one another through the printed pages of its literature, especially through the columns of The Progressive Thinker.

Spiritualism is so many sided that it is an inexhaustible theme of discussion among those who have the ability to think for themselves. Its phenomena are or should be of the same interest and value to scientists as are the phenomena of the rocks, plants, and insects. Its science can be read as exact as are the demonstrated facts in chemistry. Its philosophy gives the only explanation of life here and hereafter. Its religion takes man into the realm of duty, then relates him to his fellow-men, and then through them to the Infinite Intelligence of the Infiniverse. Here in all of these departments is an infinite variety of topics upon which thinking men can reflect for a life time and never exhaust their rich mines of truth.

The presentation of Spiritualism to the world is of course always subject to change, the law of supply and demand regulating the conduct of the platform. It is a matter of regret to many that there is not more order and system in platform work than is now apparent. Hundreds of gatherings are held every Sunday that bring the blush of shame to the cheek of every refined, cultured one of them. The eagerness of would-be leaders and speakers to appear before the public causes them to attempt to run independent meetings; here the man or woman of education and honesty is often shocked at the farcical performances of those who call themselves mediums, and at the utter disregard of truth. It may be urged that this kind of pabulum is just what many people require, hence it should be given them until they are satiated with and demand something different.

There is a point worthy of consideration in this assertion, yet there is danger that too much stress may be laid upon it. Bread and milk makes a very desirable occasional dish, but as man's sole food, would soon pall on his taste.

A test is a valuable fact, yet its constant repetition proves no more than did the first one given. Its iteration and reiteration in science in the way of experimentation only lead to the establishment of postulates from which absolute deduction may be made. This once done and well done makes the test assume, through its constant dishing up, in season and out of season, the character of a dish of bread and milk—a first-class article for occasional use, but one whose constant use becomes exceedingly distasteful to those who wish to be well rounded out physically, mentally, morally and spiritually. The test is necessary, and should be presented to those who require it, but that presentation should be orderly, dignified, educational and devotional.

Some speakers hire some one in or out of our ranks to write one or two lectures for them. These they commit to memory, and proceed to deliver under "control!" One of our leading lecturers once wrote an address for a New England woman, and she passed herself off as an unconscious trance speaker for years afterwards, yet that one address was her sole stock in trade. Called to one place she would deliver this lecture; called again the next season, it would be the same lecture, perhaps given in reverse order! Such speakers (?) are the loudest defenders of the obsolete itinerant system that are to be found in America. Like Othello's, their occupations will be gone, where scholarship, originality, and progressive thought are demanded from the platforms. It is an open question whether these people do not do more harm than good in their occupancy of the rostrum.

Through settled speakers only has Spiritualism ever attained permanent influence in any city or town in America. Witness the large pastorate of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond in Chicago, and those of Dr. Peebles and Dr. Willis, in Battle Creek, Mich., F. A. Wiggin in Boston, and Moses Hull in Buffalo, to say nothing of the score or more of others that have been equally successful in different sections of the land. The outside world respects permanency in anything, and always honors dignity, integrity, and well-directed efforts in the direction of doing good. Spiritualists could make themselves a power for good in every community if they would but engage their speakers by the year, and demand that those speakers be up to the pastors of Christian churches in their platform utterances. The test

OH! HOW THEY DIFFER!

It is not strange that many of our readers, like the highly honored Mr. Vail, of Marshalltown, Iowa, after reading both sides of the discussion, conclude to occupy the "fence" for a time, waiting to collect their scattered thoughts. As another addition to the conflict, we take pleasure in introducing Prof. Braun, who thoroughly believes in spirit communion, to our readers. We place these two thoughtful Professors side by side, and believe their views will be closely compared.

I have followed the discussion pro and con, with reference to "The Great Psychological Crime," with great interest. I have read as many articles as the limited time at my command would allow. To the impartial reader it is very apparent that the friends of the book have maintained a calm, dignified, spirit in this discussion, while many of the opponents have been sadly wanting in courtesy and fairness. These have indulged more or less in vituperations, speculation, accusations, and unfounded suspicions of various kinds. In place of attempting to refute the author's statements many have attempted to cast doubt and discredit on his personality, purposes and motives. Such tactics always redound to the discredit of the critics, and to the injury of the cause they try to defend. It is an evidence of weakness, and in line with the tactics that have been employed by many adherents of the Christian churches whenever some new fact was brought to light that seemed to contradict some creedal tenets. But this is not fair. It is unscientific, unphilosophical and uncharitable, and creates an impression in every impartial observer that the cause which is defended by the use of such means, is really weak, and is lacking in convincing facts or arguments.

Of course, there have been creditable and honorable exceptions. But not a few writers, from whom I expected a different tone and treatment, have sorely disappointed me. Mr. Hudson Tuttle furnishes one instance. Among the various imputations he has brought forward, I will mention only that of a mercenary spirit. He makes much ado over the fact that the publishers of the book charge two dollars for the same. Now, let it be understood, that I do not intend to cast any doubt upon Mr. Tuttle's character, but in this instance he has used a two-edged sword, for in the back part of one of his works I find another of his own books containing 208 pages, advertised at the price of one dollar, and still another of 320 pages at the price of $1.50. Question: If the publishers of the Great Psychological Crime charge two dollars for a book of 406 pages, how much more benevolent is Mr. Tuttle, or his publishers, in view of the above facts?

Some have maintained that this book of 406 pages could be gotten out for 20 cents by any publisher. Now, since I am a writer myself, and am very much interested in the cast of the production of books, I will ask these friends for the names of all such benevolent printers. In other words, who will undertake to get out for me a limited edition of 1,000 books, of 406 pages each, fold the sheets, sew them together, bind them in cloth covers, and furnish electrotype plates of the reading matter at the price of only 20 cents per copy? I guarantee to refund postage to every informant.

Besides, what about Mr. Tuttle's Psychograph, wich sells at the rate of $1 a piece. What per cent of profit does this yield? Will Mr. Tuttle kindly answer?

Let it understood that the writer is personally acquainted with the author of The Great Psychological Crime (if a personal, daily intercourse of four months or more, and a correspondential acquaintance of over eight years may give me such a claim), and when I therefore attempt to refute a few of the fearfully and wonderfully made implications, imputations and charges that have been advanced by our overzealous friends, I am not indulging in vain speculations but GIVE TESTIMONY OF THAT WHICH I ACTUALLY KNOW.

One critic asks, "Who are they?" meaning the friends of the author and his book. She would have her readers believe, that with a few exceptions, we "are all trumped up for the occasion."

Even if some of us have "never been heard of," we do claim to be able to think and reason independently of "the leaders," if we see fit.

To insinuate that a man must make a great noise—"to be heard of"—in order to lay claim to the title of "a thinker," is absurd. I know personally many sound thinkers who never wrote anything for publication. I myself can be found most of the time in Omaha, Neb., and I am able to refer to many good citizens of this and other cities, who are willing to vouch for my honesty, character and good repute.

"Why have not these masters come forward before with their teachings, and why has this author waited so long before writing this book?" How does the fair questioner know that these masters have not in the past made attempts to enlighten the world? Surely this author is not the first one who ever tried to warn men against "necromancy, sooth-saying, and the conjurations of spirits," as some of the spiritual manifestations were termed in the past. He is not the only one who has raised his voice in warning against a "familiarity with evil spirits."

Is it not a fact, that if you break down the barriers that ordinarily protect people from too close contact with the world of spirits—if you open your being to the control of others—that THE BAD, AS WELL AS THE GOOD CAN APPROACH AND CONTROL YOU?

It is generally understood that the less developed spirits are nearest to the earth plane, and that their interests are still largely centered in the things that engrossed their attention during their period of incarnate existence, such as the gratification of certain passions and inordinate appetites, which they failed to master or control here. You believe that some of these passions cannot be gratified in the spirit world except by and through contact with mortals. For example: A spirit who had been a notorious drunkard, came to a circle held in Beloit, Kans. He demanded that the medium (a young girl) be given a large dose of brandy, which request was at first refused by her friends, but finally complied with, without seeming injury to the girl.

Question: Why did he want the medium, who had no natural craving for liquor, to indulge in it, and why do some people crave animal gratification at times when they are under the influence or control of certain spirits, and when such desire is not natural or normal?

WILL YOU TRY TO THROW DISCREDIT ON MY STATEMENTS, BECAUSE I AM NOT GIVING YOU THE NAMES OF SOME OF THE UNFORTUNATES WHO HAVE BROUGHT TO ME THEIR TALES OF WOE?

It is asserted, and constantly reiterated by Mr. Tuttle and others, that there is in such instances something wrong morally with the mediums, and that such spirits come to them because there is an affinity between them, for "like attracts like."

There is undoubtedly some general truth expressed in this saying, when people are free to choose the company they are to keep; BUT IF YOU PLACE YOURSELF IN A DEFENSELESS POSITION, YOU HAVE TO ACCEPT WHOEVER COMES. The pure girl, or the man with money and valuables in his possession, if left alone and unprotected temporarily or habitually, will these "attract their likes" only or will they not be more liable to attract evil and designing individuals? Why should this rule not hold good in mediumship?

"Why did this author wait so long before giving his knowledge to the world?"

Because there was a beginning in time when he consciously received such knowledge, and then he had to personally demonstrate it to be correct before he could give it to others. In other words, he was not "fully prepared" until within a comparatively recent date.

And now a word in answer to the implication of "selfishness, self-interest, graft," etc.

It is most ridiculous to ascribe mere greed to the author of a book, just because he or his publishers charge a reasonable sum for the same. Mr. Tuttle, for example, would resent such a charge with just indignation, if directed against himself. A book is the product of labor, and as such it has a monetary value apart from all other considerations. Like any other article of merchandise, it may be sold at a reasonable profit without injustice to any one. Were this author to advertise himself as a teacher and charge $200 for a course of instruction, there might be some sense in such an imputation, but I know for certain that no one who has ever enjoyed the privilege of a personal instruction, has even been allowed to pay one penny.

When Mrs. Eddy first began to teach Christian Science, I believe she demanded $300 for her course of instruction and very few felt that they had been robbed. But this author is not like Mrs. Eddy, and yet he has to suffer such imputations. Is this fair and worthy of yourselves, brothers and sisters?

I have served both as a juror and as a witness before courts of justice. Heretofore neither my sanity nor my veracity has been questioned. Will you, my friends, question either when I testify before you to the honor, integrity, sanity, love of truth, equity and justice of the author of The Great Psychological Crime, and not from hearsay or conjecture, but from positive knowledge? Is any kind of human testimony worth anything to you, if you reject mine?

Then it has been surmised that this author was trying to disrupt the ranks of Spiritualists; that he was trying to build up a party for selfish purposes; that he was a Jesuit, Theosophist, and what not. It would be as reasonable to claim that Mr. Tuttle and others were "defending" mediumship, because they wished to remain "leaders," sell their books, serve as mediums, etc., for the sake of the revenues involved. If you claim the one, why not the other? Don't let us use two-edged swords, please.

From personal knowledge I here state that OUR AUTHOR DOES NOT BELONG TO THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY, and that he has no "axe to grind" in that direction.

The charge of being a Jesuit will seem ridiculous to all who have thoroughly examined his book and the individualistic teachings which it contains. Jesuitism means obedience, submission, subjection and the control of the will and conscience of the Jesuit by his "superior." The teachings of the School of Natural Science emphasize THE NECESSITY OF SELF-CONTROL, SELF-DETERMINATION AND SELF-OWNERSHIP. These teachings practically applied will make the true Master. SUBJECTION AND CONTROL MAKE FOR SLAVERY AS A FINAL RESULT.

Perhaps no charge is more often reiterated by the opponents of The Great Psychological Crime, than that the author "hides himself behind a woman." Are there not a thousand and one other reasons possible for the withholding of the author's name than that of cowardice? Those who know him could afford to smile at such an intimation, if it was not made by people whose words carry some weight with the rank and file of Spiritualists. I will, however, not waste any time in refuting this charge of cowardice, but refer the reader to the remarks made on this subject in the last number of The Progressive Thinker. Here, too our friends are using a club that whacks both ways. There are other indignities heaped upon this "unidentified author," which I would be pleased to meet in these columns, but my letter has grown longer already than I intended it should, and so I must close.

Dear friends, stop mud-slinging. It is a habit that belongs to the immature, but it is unworthy of yourselves and the cause of true Spiritualism. Besides IT PROVES NOTHING but your own status in the mental and moral order. Save your breath for the real question at issue, viz., IS SUBJECTIVE MEDIUMSHIP DETRIMENTAL TO THE MEDIUM, OR IS IT NOT? The author of The Great Psychological Crime and his school claim that it is. DISPROVE THEM IF YOU CAN. This is the real point at issue, and not the author's personality or his motives. Be honest with yourselves, and do not attempt to make your readers believe in your unfounded conjectures and surmises.

INTEREST IN THE DISCUSSION CONTINUES.

"Freedom of Thought" must be tolerated. The Catholic Church would not exist five years if its members were allowed to read freethought literature. We never have and never shall stifle free discussion. We never conceal anything under the pretense that it will "injure" Spiritualism, for nothing can possibly injure THE TRUTH. In pursuing this course we are obeying the mandates of those in spirit life, who have made The Progressive Thinker a great success from the start. Thus, side by side we have the views of A. J. King (whose wife was an excellent medium), and Elsie Pomroy McElroy, of Washington, D. C. We take great pleasure in introducing them to our readers.

Do Evil Spirits Control Mediums?

I have read with much interest most of the Symposium and see that leading minds among Spiritualists are arrayed on opposite sides concerning the value of the teachings of a book. Some say it is good, others BAD. What can be the foundation for this difference of opinion?

Spiritualism is claimed by all intelligent Spiritualists to be a science. If so, there should be substantial agreement among its teachers. Its basis must be law, if a science, and capable of being understood and the truth ascertained. What is the trouble—the principle lying at the foundation of this difference of opinion? I take it to be this:

CAN AND DO EVIL DISPOSED SPIRITS CONTROL MEDIUMS FOR EVIL PURPOSES?

This is a fundamental question, and if Spiritualism is a science, then this question should be answered in no uncertain and doubtful way, but demonstrated upon scientific principles that the truth may appear. This involves the question: What is a medium, and how is a medium developed? A proper understanding here ought to settle the controversy.

First, what is a medium? I answer: One who has been prepared to receive and convey the controlling spirit's thought to others.

How prepared?

By the controlling spirit extracting a portion of the medium's magnetism and then infusing his own personal magnetism in its place, so as to enable the will of the spirit to act upon the brain and nervous system of the medium to control his or her thought and bodily forces as he would his own through his own brain and nervous system.

Some think that the controlling spirit gets into the body of the medium.

This is absurd.

Two similar things cannot occupy the same space at the same time. Two spirits cannot occupy the same body at the same time. The fine magnetic ethers of the medium and the spirit, if in near affinity, may be mingled so that the superior spirit will can control the mind and body of the medium.

To develop a medium to be of any great reliability and practicability is the work of much time and labor on the part of the spirit seeking control of the medium, and much time and attention on the part of the medium. Where a medium is designed for some great and important work, each organ of the brain and body is separately worked upon and infused with spirit ethers till controlled by the spirit's will, and thus practiced upon till the whole brain and body are rendered susceptible to the spirit's will. In extracting a medium's magnetism thus, each organ is excited to enable the spirit the easier to withdraw its magnetism, and sometimes this causes an appearance of insanity or what is called obsession. This apparently evil influence is often real when caused by incongruous, diseased and unaffinitized magnetism of CIRCLES upon the brains of sensitives.

Much evil has been caused by not understanding the science of development of mediumship. For a full exposition of the law of mediumship the reader is referred to Vol. III, "Principles of Nature." "Mediumship," "Real Life in the Spirit Land," "Methods of Teachers and Guardians," and pamphlet entitled "Spritiualism vs. Diabolism." All by Mrs. Maria M. King.

The reader will see from this explanation that but few hardly ever, if ever, more than two guardians and a teacher come into control of a medium. All communications given for others are given through one of these, just as telegrams are sent by everybody through the operator of the machine.

The medium is the machine. THE MEDIUM'S GUARDIAN SPIRITS AND TEACHER ARE THE OPERATORS THROUGH WHOM ALL MESSAGES ARE SENT FROM THE SPIRIT WORLD TO THOSE OF EARTH.

The law of spirit communion requires this, Diverse and unaffinitized magnetism will not mingle, but repel each other, and therefore are not subject to the will of one. No medium could long live subject to diverse spiritual magnetisms. They would become insane, and the whole system become diseased, while affinitized spiritual magnetism is the very foundation of health and life.

I might rest the case here as having proved that no evil spirit can control a moral and well-disposed medium. But it may be said that evil-minded men and women die and death does not change their moral status, and why should not such develop mediums of their ilk and thus propagate evil to mankind? I answer, that every spirit has two guardians and a teacher over him, and these are morally higher than he, though his guardians are only one degree higher, but they have guardians that are a degree above them and thus the chain goes upward to the highest circles in spirit life, and the inspirational influence is always instilling into the minds of the lowest spirits thoughts that elevate and improve them.

But suppose they rebel against good influences and would do evil? Then the higher guardians and teachers restrain them by psychological power and prevent evil from being sent down from the higher to the lower life. If the higher life sends evil upon the lower, then the law of progress and improvement is reversed, against which all reason and a faith in the infinite goodness and power of the ruler of the universe rebels.

All spirits must soon learn that evil thoughts and deeds only bring misery to themselves, and when this is realized they will try to improve because they want to be happy. Ignorant spirits who have outgrown viciousness are allowed, we are told by high inspiration, to communicate with the people of earth; therefore all communications from spirits should be judged of like uninspired matter, by the exercise of reason and a knowledge of the law applicable, or the science of the case. If the foregoing exposition is correct, we may now answer, confidently THAT EVIL DISPOSED SPIRITS DO NOT AND CAN NOT CONTROL MEDIUMS FOR EVIL PURPOSES.

A. J. KING.

Hammonton, N. J.

The author of The Great Psychological Crime has the courage of his convictions in starting a crusade against the alleged evils of hypnotism and subjective mediumship. He is certainly original in his views, and there is around his work the indefinable aura which envelops a strongly individual personality. There are no technicalities of style in the book and no unintelligible systems of philosophy. The profound problems involved are stated with the calm dignity characterizing the writings of a scholar. He declares that both hypnotism and subjective mediumship are destructive to individual life, and a crime against the soul and makes an analysis of the causes and results of the strange occurrences happening in the subjective and sub-conscious conditions of human experience, classified as "abnormal."

For centuries man has been trying to find out something about his place in creation and his ultimate destiny. He has not been charitable to the beliefs he persistently denounces, nor at all willing to acknowledge his own limitations.

The author declares that by many years of physical and psychical training he has been enabled to exercise his spiritual organism INDEPENDENTLY, SELF-CONSCIOUSLY AND VOLUNTARY AND ALL INTELLIGENT, MORAL PERSONS WITH PROPER INSTRUCTIONS CAN DO THE SAME. The modus operandi for acquiring direct information on the question of the Infinitely Great, is not stated. It is new to Western psychologists, and yet it has existed for centuries in the far East.

THE AUTHOR HAS ESTABLISHED NORMAL RELATIONS WITH THE SPIRITUAL LAWS GOVERNING LIFE, AND BROUGHT THEM INTO REALITY ON THE PHYSICAL PLANE.

The scientific world has been so much opposed to the investigation of occult forces it could not weigh, measure or dissect with a surgeon's knife, that it cannot give hypnotism and Spiritualism a fair and impartial hearing. Fortunately scientific research is undergoing a decided reaction in the direction of spiritual involution and evolution.

With the advances made in the study of pathology, biology and psychology, there has been a change in the attitude of men of science.

The author of the new system of psychology, as an exponent and apostle of "Natural Science," has discarded all worn-out theories and prejudices and planted his banner on the heights. He has become the fearless and inspired interpreter of a great and mighty spiritual RENAISSANCE.

Indifferent alike to protest, censure, criticism, comment and possible mutiny among the DEVOTEES of modern hypnotism and spiritualistic mediumship, he has dared to send out a message of warning and danger.

The book is an important addition to the world's literature and his explorations into the terre incognita of the soul is the finished result of infinite work, personal experience and observation, of all classes of people from the lowest down in the mental scale to those possessed of the highest intelligence.

He has made an exhaustive study of temperaments, moods and mental faculties, and carefully noted their physical effects. While making his observations with painstaking exactitude, he has shown a strong underlying sympathy and compassion for the human race in its struggles to see the light shining from afar. With scientific methods of thought and rational GLIMPSES INTO THE GLORIES OF THE UNSEEN WORLD, he has accumulated a vast and splendid array of facts pertaining to the realities of spiritual life, and he has systematically classified them. He insists that the Absolute Truth can stand any amount of pressure and the most rigid examination, if applied through reason, logic and common sense.

The Psychical Research Society has turned its flaming torch-light of inquiry on the problems of telepathy, clairvoyance and clairaudiance. Romance writers and charlatans have flung a web of fantasy over these weird subjects. Prophets, seers, wizards, fortune-tellers and religious fanatics are recruited from these cults. The secret of the ages will not be learned in the laboratory, and it will never be revealed to minds trained only in the methods of materialistic science.

The author of The Great Psychological Crime gives his personal observations of the dangers of hypnotism and subjective mediumship, and asserts that the subject of hypnotic experiments SURRENDERS HIS GOD-GIVEN WILL and his individual identity into the absolute custody of the operator, and there is no possibility of resistance. The hypnotist unquestionably controls his independent action and his mental mechanism. He claims that the mediumistic process is almost identical with that of the hypnotic, and in both cases there is a gradual failing of the mental faculties of those persons who, living on the earth, are yet not of it. Long continued practice of hypnotism and subjective mediumship, usually results in mental and moral degeneration. He says that hypnotism is especially dangerous in its influence, on those persons who are mentally unbalanced, and upon those whose credulity predominates over reason, and he denies the final benefits of hypnotism, when used as an anaesthetic.

It is hardly possible to understand all the dangers there may be in the hypnotic condition brought about by an unprincipled operator.

The author has seemingly discarded all interest in the physical phenomena of Spiritualism, as exhibited in modern seances, and proposes to promote human welfare and happiness by destroying the train of evils which spring from hypnotism and mediumship, so that they will cease to be a menace to physical, mental and moral health. HE WILL TEACH A SPIRITUALISM THAT WILL NOT CONFINE THE UNFOLDING INTELLECT. IT WILL NOT BE A VAGUE, DREAMY, TRANSCENDENTAL ABSTRACTION, BUT A GIGANTIC POWER FOR GOOD AND ITS DISCIPLES WILL COME IN TOUCH WITH THE FORCES OF COSMIC EVOLUTION, IN A WAY THAT WILL CREATE FOR THEM ALL DESIRABLE ACHIEVEMENTS AND WISHED FOR RESULTS

Spiritualists are conservative, and they will be slow to absorb other conclusions and methods than those of mediumistic control. But if they receive messages from the beyond, no matter in what way they are revealed, they enter into the supreme joy and harmony of life here and life there.

Unquestionably Spiritualism NEEDS SPIRITUALIZING, and the more advanced of its devotees will welcome most cordially and sincerely any person WHO CAN FURNISH THEM A FINER AND BETTER KEY FOR UNLOCKING THE SHADOWY GATEWAY OF MYSTERY BETWEEN THE TWO WORLDS.

It is seriously claimed by the exponent of the new system of psychology that the spirits of the dead in the lower spheres are mentally and morally depraved, and that mediums are often the unconscious victims of these vicious unregenerate and earth-bound creatures. If a better method of communication between spirits and mortals can be successfully established, other than the dangerous one of mediumship, it will be of VAST IMPORTANCE TO HUMANITY.

The author's philosophy of life is one of happy optimism and receptivity to the influences of Divinity.

The discovery of a new key-note in the scale of daily existence may set itself to the great symphonic harmonies of spiritual life.

He teaches the intensity of spiritual life and content that is rarely realized and gladness of which there has been no account rendered, and that mankind is never without the blessed ministry of the angels. He has blazed a pathway through the shadowy wilderness of the mental world, and revealed its rich resources and the absolute identification of man's hopes and plans, with the purposes of Divinity and Divine beneficence. The new philosophy can be made a strong pillar of support in all societies that have permanent speakers. Regular meetings for its presentation could be held, to which all who were earnestly seeking the truth could be admitted. Sunday services should not be loaded down with test work; they should be free from the appearance even of levity and unwarranted mirth. Entertainments are well enough at times, but on Sundays, is it asking too much to request that only the science, philosophy and religion of Spiritualism be given from Spiritualistic platforms?

HYPNOTISM CRITICALLY CONSIDERED.

Freedom of Choice Must be Kindly Tolerated. That is one of the fundamental principles of Spiritualism. Think for yourself! And while you do so, kindly allow others the same privilege. The two different views of Hypnotism are very striking, and will be read with interest. Dr. Meacham is a Californian of note, while Prof. Cooke, of Boston, Mass., stands high as a writer for magazines and Spiritualistic papers. Read and reflect.

I have before me a work that is attracting no little attention and I think justly entitled to do so. I refer to The Great Psychological Crime.

The work is in many respects timely and justly calls attention to much that might be corrected with benefit to all concerned.

We are inclined to believe, however, that the author has failed to keep consciously in mind the great influence of decided belief, of a special view-point, over what shall constitute sufficient evidence for a positive conviction. Had he been sufficiently careful in this matter, we feel certain that many positive assertions would have been uttered less dogmatically, while many others would have been omitted entirely, thus adding greatly to the value of the work. We cannot keep too constantly in mind the distinction between actual and available knowledge in all directions where we desire a broad and comprehensive view that shall contain, or spring from, all of or real knowledge of the matters in hand. By actual knowledge we mean all that is in our minds. By available knowledge we mean that portion of actual knowledge which is in our self-consciousness.

We can reason, write or act from available knowledge only. Our mood, belief, attention and recollection determine at all times what portion of actual knowledge can be at that time available. We cannot help but feel that our author has sighted a real evil and immediately become so centered on that evil (or those evils, if you please) that other and just as important knowledge has been for the time shunted out of the circuit of availability. It is simply to call attention to a few such magnifications and omissions that this article is written. We shall confine our attention to hypnotism and suggestion, because we have had some ten years' experience with their use in diseased conditions, and more than twenty years as a student along most available lines of psychology and have had limited experience with mediums.

First, what do we mean by hypnotism?

Our author defines hypnotism for us as follows:

"Hypnotism is the process by and through which one person called a hypnotist obtains, holds and exercises control of the will, voluntary powers and sensory organism of another person called a subject."

In this definition we get a good view of our author's viewpoint that has such limiting power over what shall enter into his consciousness, and exaggerates that out of all due proportion.

Hypnotism, to him, means control of our wills, voluntary powers and sensory organisms, leaving us nothing not in the hands of that person possessing such wonderful powers, the hypnotist.

The strongest conception of control given us is that of command, and this is the very idea adopted by our author.

To him, the hypnotist commands and enforces the will, voluntary powers and sensory organisms of his subjects to do his bidding. He claims all this to have been demonstrated by the School of Natural Science. We personally know nothing of this school or of its methods of demonstration, but this definition would so limit hypnotism, according to most of those who have had the widest experience along such lines, as to be of little harm or good either, for most of those who have had actual experience know that it is fatal to attempt to command the will, or any self-conscious power whatever in any save a few cases where weakness is stamped on all the organism.

This conception of force on the one side and weakness on the other, leads him to put into his admissions as being believed by all hypnotists, assertions not believed by even a majority of them, let alone all. But he believes them, and if the other fellow does not he should. But he does not.

For instance, it is not admitted that the hypnotists get control of the will, voluntary powers and sensory organism of all their subjects, or of a majority of them, not forced control.

It is not admitted that a large percentage of men, women and children can be controlled to any appreciable degree by hypnotism. The percentage of good hypnotic subjects is relatively not admitted by any respectable entage of good hypnotists that hypn is a power possessed by the hypnoti ut on the other hand it is almost universally believed to be due to a peculiarity of the make-up of the subject.

It is not admitted that wealth, luxury and the subserviency of many are in the reach of the hypnotists or even of any respectable per cent of them.

It is not admitted that any mischievous and destructive effects are ever connected with the intelligent use of hypnotism, either at once or any other time.

I am not asserting anything about what that School of Natural Science thinks it has demonstrated, but simply that he is in error when he claims that these assertions are admitted by all.

Now let us look briefly at his definition.

He speaks of will and its control as though every reader should know exactly what he means by that. He may know all about the will, independent choice, freedom, etc., but to most of us ordinary minds those words are all seen through the fog, and, to many, not even a light fog.

To many, will belongs to the self-conscious realm only, while to others it is an accompaniment of life on all planes, so that the elimination of self-consciousness will would not eliminate will. To others, and to no small or unimportant workers along the lines of physiology and physiological psychology, will is but a metaphysical name given to nervous processes as they finally eventuate in action. To these, consciousness, mind, will, etc., are products only, and in no essential way connected with action, growth or disease. While we may not individually be in harmony with these views, we must be careful that our definitions, beliefs, view-points, moods, etc., do not get in our way, and limit to too narrow a field our available knowledge. Wide open doors and definitions and investigations that will admit truth from any camp, should be our aim.

Nothing else can save us from one-sided views and exaggerated deductions.

Again, as to control of the sensitive organism, what do we mean by that? Is our control in this direction as great as appears on the surface? He speaks of the use of hypnotism in surgery as though it might become an important factor there, provided these other ill effects did not step in to damn it. Now it is well known by all practical workers, that it can never be any important factor in surgery, for the reason that so small a percentage of cases can be anaesthized to a sufficient degree for that work. The percentage that can be hypnotized at all being small, and only a small percentage of this number can be rendered anaesthetic to any marked degree, such a degree for instance as would render operations of any severity practical, it can easily be seen that its use here must be limited. I have used it successfully for operations many times, but still the actual percentage of available cases is small.

Quite a number of hypnotic subjects remember in a more or less definite way what occurs while they are asleep, and those who do not so remember can be made to do so by suggestion. Even those who are free from pain and apparently know nothing of what is going on will repeat in the minutest detail what occurred during the time of apparent unconsciousness. They must have been sensitive, they were really affected or they could not describe the occurrences.

Bernheim asserts, and most authorities agree, that the organic functions go on just as before, if the hypnotic state is inteligently induced.

He (the author) asserts that complete functional suspension of the physical organism is possible by means of the will alone. I do not pretend to know what is possible to the author, or even to any member of the faculty of the School of Natural Science, but ordinary mortals can do nothing of the kind. In cases where one is led into thinking that will alone does these things, investigation shows that previous hypnotization has been practiced and the patient has learned what is expected of him. I have many times produced sleep, wakened them up, and directed actions of various kinds by mental processes alone, but always in trained subjects. I do not deny that this may occasionally be possible in a good telephathic subject without such training, but these are very, very rare, and for the rest, they do what they have been trained to expect. To say the least, if one eliminates the trained subjects, he will have so few left as to be relatively unimportant.

Hypnotic suggestion is likened to a bullet fired into the brain, while independent suggestion is between parties in the full possession of their voluntary powers and reason.

Leaving entirely out of view the fact that but few are ever in the full possession of those powers being controlled by habit, mood, involuntary attention, urgent desire, etc., it is still rare to find persons whom you can safely command, if you wish to succeed in handling them. A person to be handled in that way must be in the habit of obeying, or of weak and yielding nature.

Self-consciousness cannot as a rule be handled in that manner, but must be outgeneraled, shunted to one side, which is done by giving it self-consciousness, something to do that will hold the attention and not tax him too severely, the less the better so they concentrate thoroughly on it. They thus leave the automatic powers, the hypnotic self more or less open to the suggestions of the hypnotist.

We have simply separated the waking self from the rest of the individual by cleavage. We have not controlled it, but told it how to control itself, and the better it obeys the more perfectly it withdraws attention from the automaic self and leaves it open to suggestion. Then again it is well known that a good hypnotic subject is also subject to control by waking suggestion. These people when in as near perfect self-conscious control as they ever are, will obey almost any reasonable suggestion given them. By reasonable I mean that the act must be within their power and not too repugnant to the normal self.

It is not necessary to produce hypnosis to control pain, to cure disease and in favorable cases produce anaesthesia, in fact, do anything you can do with them by any other means whatever. I and hundreds of others are demonstrating this daily by the use of waking suggestion.

No matter what may be dreamed to the contrary, it has been proven, if anything in this world has, that hypnosis is simply a result and one result only, of suggestion. Stop all hypnotizing and still the people would be no safer than to-day; they can be persuaded to do anything they can be made to any way, if the right method of persuasion is adopted; they are subject to being led as well as driven, only more can be led than driven, hence suggestion is even more powerful for either weal or woe as it reaches far more people. And after all, the jail knows no difference whether I am driven into it, or led into it, or the asylum either and hundreds are led into both and hundreds of other evils.

In the matter of disease he is even more unfortunate. He claims that nine per cent of cases so treated become insane. I do not know what the percentage is, but am surprised that it is no larger. We must remember that the laity have always kept and do yet keep mental diseases, as they call them, separate in their minds from physical ills, so that the immense majority of cases treated by suggestion till almost the immediate present have been cases tending to insanity, and no small percentage with the preliminary symptoms already present. They become insane not as a result of treatment, but in spite of it. No matter how thoroughly the few may believe that brain disease and insanity are cause and effect, the many do not think about such matters and hold practically as stated above.

Our author objects to the hypnotists claiming to cure, for these cases relapse, so he thinks they are not cured. How did they get sick the first time? Is sickness not the result of disobedience of law? No matter how thoroughly cured they may be, if they keep on living the same life in the same manner as before, what would one expect? Here is the cause of relapse, not in a defect of the method of relief used. Eliminate instruction in right living and thinking and there is no difference in methods so far as relapses are concerned. One method may relieve more cases than another, but staying well is a matter of obedience to law.

As for the transformation of diseases, that is but a fairy tale of ancient history. It is like Bessie being put under the influence of a powerful hypnotic and awakening Bobbie.

Imagine chorea fleeing into the basement to avoid that powerful hypnotic eye, and after a longer or shorter hiding in the dark crawling out of the corner as cancer of the stomach. And rheumatism, we all know how wonderfully timid it is and how it can be frightened away easily, but no matter, let it once get a squint at that terrible eye and then see it scud for under the bed, but after a time, lo! it again appears, but as that hydra-headed monster, blood poisoning. This is but another case of the contracting power of a too limited viewpoint.

He speaks of Materia Medica as a normal process in conformity to Nature's Constructive Principle, but hypnotism is abnormal in accord with Nature's Destructive Principle. I wonder how he learned that! Is an opium sleep any more nearly normal than a hypnotic sleep? Is the emetic, diuretic, diaphoretic or cathartic effect of a drug normal? If so, why should their continued use result so disastrously? What do we really mean by Nature's Destructive Principle? We know something of the principle of construction, but is there a destructive principle? Is disease, after all, anything but the failure on the part of a cell, organ, or tissue, to meet the demands of its environment? Are we warranted in speaking of failure from ignorance or weakness as a principle written with a capital letter.

In fact, we do not mean by the word abnormal, as applied to hypnotism or drug action either, that they are necessarily diseased states, but simply and only that it is unusual, unnatural, not a result of the common laws of activity applied automatically by Nature, but artificially by man.

BUT BARRING THESE EFFECTS OF BELIEF, VIEW-POINT AND ATTENTION, WHICH NECESSARILY CREEP INTO THE THINKING, ACTING, WRITING AND LIVING OF ALL OF US, THIS IS A REMARKABLE WORK, WELL WORTH NOT ONLY READING, BUT OF CAREFUL STUDY. WE HEARTILY RECOMMEND IT TO ALL INTERESTED PARTIES AND WISH FOR IT AN EXTENSIVE SALE.

We would have chosen rather to write of its many, many good things, but for an urgent request to point out a few errors, that it might lead to an earnest and individual reading, rather than a mere accepting of its statements, which I feel sure the author would least desire. We shall wait anxiously for his forthcoming work.

"They Murder Sleep and Destroy Happiness."

Touching The Great Psychological Crime, the power of hypnotism when viciously used, let us first ask a few questions: "Is it morally wrong to deprive a person of his free self-control?" that is, of his will?—whether such deprivation be by mesmerism, hypnotism, or electrical psychology, as it was once called?

What is it?

It is the overcoming of a negative by a positive mind, or of a less positive by a more positive. In this way you may compel the subject to evil or mischievous deeds. You may delude the mind. You may use that mind to the ends of SEDUCTION, OR STEALING, EMBEZZLING OR SWINDLING, OR TO ANY OF A THOUSAND FORMS OF CRIME.

To ask such questions is sufficient. They answer themselves. As well ask if "bunco-steering," or "confidence operating," or "green goods swindling" is morally allowable.

The possible good and benevolent use of this or a similar power for medical healing is no argument to the contrary. An act is good or bad according to its use or its motive. IT IS NONE THE LESS WRONG FOR THE DISCARNATE MAN OR "ENTITY" TO USE THIS POWER, BECAUSE HE MAY BE IMPELLED BY THE CONTROLLING WILL OF OTHER MORE VICIOUS, MORE DARING, MORE POWERFUL HYPNOTIZING MINDS.

Those spirits, so-called, who deceive human beings on earth are frequently themselves deceived and are controlled—they know not how.

Hellish influences are certainly no novelty on earth to the rational inquirer.

Why does every city or town of any considerable population have to pay and maintain a police force, except that such evil is rampant, and must be reckoned with?

"All things are held by the law of attraction," says Jesus, and its truth is easily demonstrable. The whole natural and spiritual philosophy of dualism is a demonstration of the truth of this law. Every fact in the domain of science points to it. Every living creature, from the lowest animal up to man, has its organic quality, and that is only another way of saying that its organization is controlled by certain conditions or attractions, lower or higher, better or worse.

What is organic quality?

It is the first, bisilar and all-potent condition of power of function, all happiness. It depends on the nature of the parents and partly on their existing states of body, mind and health. It is more fundamental than education and association; it renders the grain cereal; the maple maple; the fish fishy; the fox foxy; the swine swinish; the man brutal or humane.

The signs of organic quality in man or woman are seen in the coarse or fine hair, skin, color, form, motion, tone of action, and mental operation; the cast of feature. It is what we mean by "blood" in those well born and well bred.

TO PERSONS OF FINE, SENSITIVE ORGANIZATION, THERE IS CERTAINLY GRAVE DANGER (AS WELL AS GREAT BENEFIT OCCASIONALLY) IN ATTENDING THE "SEANCE" ROOM. True, the man of iron nerves may say he feels no change of state; but it is a question only of time. The sulphuric acid that eats through an iron wire in a day has only to continue the process to eat through a crow bar.

How shall we find salvation from the tortures with which they assail the body, invade the reason, torture the keen nerves of the spiritual organism, murder sleep and destroy happiness?" MANY SUCH CASES ARE TRACEABLE TO GIVING UP YOUR GOD-GIVEN REASON AND SELF-CONTROL—TO YOU KNOW NOT WHAT COMBINATION OF ENTITIES IN A SEANCE ROOM.

The medium may or may not be a good or pure person. Spiritual depravities do not prevent the manifestations of spirits; far from it. The power of attraction for light or dark, controls or may control. IT IS NO NEWS THAT THESE ENTITIES ARE ABLE TO SIMULATE VIRTUE AND GIVE ADVICE TO A GOOD LIFE, AND OFTEN TO LEAD TO RUIN. The "evil" can quote scripture for their purpose, and by using their will power, insidiously, may gain confidence and get the control in order to ruin, by gratification, of their own desires.

As a surgeon may cut his finger in dissection and die of blood poisoning, so very serious results may follow the poisoning of the spiritual organization of some incautious or ignorant, unsuspecting inquirer, when the poison is not from a dead body but from a morally rotten and decaying "entity."

How shall we discriminate between these unseen wraiths and judge whether they bring with them "AIRS FROM HEAVEN OR BLASTS FROM HELL?" Whether their interests are wicked or charitable?

If this branch of psychology really interests you, try them and judge for yourself if you are capable. But if you value a sound mind in a healthy body, and are of a sensitive organization, meddle not with mixed circles, or such promiscuous gatherings. YOU ARE SAFER IN A LUNATIC ASYLUM AT ONCE. You are more likely to find a "square deal" and conditions for harmony and health.

BETTER TO SEEK DILIGENTLY TO QUICKEN THE SPIRIT, THAT INNER LIFE AND LIGHT WHICH PURIFIES THE HEART AND ILLUMINATES THE MIND, DEVELOPING PERCEPTION OF THE INTERIOR TRUTH IN DEGREES ACCORDING TO THE CHARACTER AND DEGREE OF UNFOLDMENT IN TRUE LIFE.

This Living Light of the spirit dwells within us to enlarge, develop, unfold and balance, while it perfects the intellect and ripens the finite spirit in man. It is like the coming of the rosy-fingered dawn, to kiss the soul flowers into brightness and joy, filling the structures of the natural form and answering to the beautiful vibrations of the inner spirit of life, like a grand overstrung instrument. The finite, human spirit surely dwells within the body, not a chaos, but in form in the human form. Verily the eyes of the soul exist within the natural or material eyes. All the spiritual senses rest within their natural outerness of material vessels.

If there is, as sometimes happens, a divine end and purpose in spirit sight The Being of Beings can make any good man or woman a true seer, letting them see angels in the inner celestial life (or sphere), or "spirits" in the intermediate world, or infernals in the pits of darkness, hatred and other perversions—fiends, furies, etc.

The Inner Light or light of life works in straight lines, as all light does, and the clowns of the pit and hypnotists must walk a straight line if they would come up to breathe the upper airs.

IT IS BEST FOR ALL TO LET THE HARMONIOUS POWERS OF NATURE UNFOLD THE LEAVES AND FLOWERS OF THE MIND AND THUS MANY REAL DANGERS WILL BE AVOIDED.

Eternal meddling with the inner powers of life will bring deep sorrows to the meddlers, as well as to their poor, deluded victims. Let us all rather turn to the Living Light and pray that power to grant that his human children may so bind their souls to the great soul of Infinite Truth, that they shall suffer no error to come between them and truth, that no darkness shall change the day of their lives being into the gloom of night. May their souls ever rest in the holy faith that knows no fear, in that divine life which assures it that the Being of all beings is ever nigh, and that His love will protect, and His wisdom will guide.

The Great Psychological Crime.

I am highly pleased to see the battle raging on the mental plane of the human mind, in regard to The Great Psychological Crime. It raged nearly one hundred years ago in the society of Friends, commonly called Quakers, in regard to the personality of Jesus Christ, the supposed son of the holy virgin; it caused a split in the society. The majority called orthodox Friends believed in the literal interpretation of those ancient occult writings, while the minority or what was termed Hicksite Friends, believed in the occult or spiritual meaning of them, that Jesus Christ was born of the spirit. I will quote the saying of Elias Hicks, founder of the Hicksite Friends: "Don't be so carnally minded as to suppose that Jesus, the son of God, was ever seen by mortal eyes; he is the indwelling principle of eternal truth, dwelling in the inner temple of the human soul; the true light that enlightens every one that cometh into the world, by the unfoldment of their own spiritual nature."

And if The Great Psychological Crime has the tendency towards unfolding the spiritual or divinity in humanity, then the author's time in writing it was not wasted.

The Editor's advice in The Progressive Thinker of Oct. 31, under the heading, "Let Your Light Shine," should be read and re-read by every searcher after light, and then practiced by letting their light shine—for our own spiritual light is the offspring of God, and God is love, and love fulfills the law.

For poems bright, with truth aflame,
Sends forth a booklet, writ with care,
Which is entitled, "Nature's Prayer."

A second title to her book
Gives voice unto a babbling brook,
'Tis "What It Said to a Little Girl,"
Who saw the water leap and whirl.

This brochure is a work of art,
On both the author's and the printer's part;
In fact, 'tis "worth its weight in gold,"
And thousands of it should be sold.

Belle Bush's poems now are known
As far and wide as are my own,
They therefore need no praise of mine,
For they by far my own outshine.

So don't delay, take my advice,
Send Sister Bush her booklet's price.
For all who do, will find indeed,
'TIS JUST THE THING to buy and read.

John W. Ring Presents Some Lucid Reflections on Mediumship and the Laws of Life.

The Great Psychological Crime, as I understand it, is to subject one's self to any influence which prevents free and independent control and exercise of the individual attributes of the soul. (Page 358.)

In Part III, chapters II and III, we find a careful analysis of the evolution of life energy from mineral through vegetable and animal to the human kingdom; and are told that only in the latter does individual consciousness develop and ally itself to the constructive principles of nature; the others simply expressing such intelligence as nature controls or influences them to. Through these evolutionary stages of progress is developed a form of life which is so individualized that "the death of the physical body appears to have no effect whatever upon the continued growth of the spiritual." Observation compels one to note that evolution and construction is always produced by revolution and destruction; death produces birth, and vice versa. While life's ultimate is a ponderous subject to consider, the experiences of a mortal life a tiny portion, yet mine, if I use it well, is as valuable as any other; and I must take issue with the no-name author in the idea that a soul may avoid inherent justice by dissolving into original elements.

Man's high estate possesses him with privilege and responsibility. Education enables him to accept duty and burden as privilege and the law of growth demands that, as a responsible being, he ascend. Our no-name author says, "However young the human infant may be when its physical death occurs, its status as an individualized intelligence is determined." If by transgression of law the soul is slow in its unfolding, no doubt nature's privilege makes provisions for continued opportunity, but will nature's unyielding demand of responsibility grant such unqualified pardon as disintegration, dissolution and annihilation would suggest? Where in her vast ramifications does nature indicate pardon or forgiveness?

To me we are the result of influences, born into this mortal state of being without solicitation, moved by prenatal conditions, biased by daily suggestions and education, and by thus being controlled we learn to control.

Reason leads me to conclude that if "the human infant upon the spiritual plane passes through all the phases and stages of spiritual growth and organic development," then surely the transgressor must pass through the same "phases and stages" of retribution that he would, had he remained in earth life.

Nature never annihilates, she only changes from low to high, and if consciousness is individualized in man, then surely to destroy that consciousness because it failed to express its full capacity, would be full forgiveness, something which nature nowhere manifests.

I have no hope that anyone will stand responsible for my shortcomings. I have a trust that loving hands, made strong by higher power will kindly point to me the way wherein I may correct my ways and make restoration.

I scarcely expect, since I am called each day to change the deeds which I faithfully perform, that I shall attain the exalted plane of entire satisfaction, save by persistent effort, which will produce unfoldment; yet I feel that while nature thus demands I shall grow into a full expression of all soul possessions, she at the same time grants to me privilege of action until I gain the sun-kissed heights where truth shall make me free, and love shall fill me with peace unspeakable.

Trusting for such attainments, where Usefulness will by Knowledge be increased, I endeavor to influence all whom I can benefit thereby, and to be influenced by all that will take me higher. I rejoice to live in this psychic age wherein no crime, save ignorance, is recognized; and every effort is made to reform rather than punish.

Individual consciousness and personal responsibility moves me to know that as a soul center I attract those influences which I crave, and which will benefit me. I emanate as potent a force as my development generates. I learn that I cannot think or act save as I am influenced by some suggestion (the thoughts of my parents before I was born, the effect of my observations through my physical senses, and the surrounding psychic forces), nor can I think or act but that I have certain influence over others. The relationship between these influences and their effects, is a most interesting and instructive study.

The more potent the force the more disagreeable its results when perverted.

Fire lays low entire cities, yet no one seeks to destroy this element. Water's devastations make up a large portion of the world's history, yet no one denies the necessity of water; so all of nature's elements, including the most potent of all, thought or soul-energy, must be considered.

There is a marked difference between influence and control. Intelligent beings are influenced, and by their intelligence they control. Man influenced by a desire for scientific development controls the force of fire and water, steam and electricity; yet he never attempts to control man; he endeavors to influence him.

I recall the fact of a young sensitive who some years ago refused to take the pledge of total abstinence from liquor, reserving the privilege of taking it in case of sickness. Soon afterward he became a willing and satisfactory hypnotic subject, yielding readily to the influence of the operator. At one evening's private experiment a social drink was suggested; such influence was without effect, the subject refusing to act, and the most persistent attempt to compel the action was without avail. Later the operator suggested liquor as a cure for serious sickness, and the subject yielded.

The influence of mind upon mind becomes control only by argument which convinces, and the degree of effect depends on the condition of the subject.

By practice man learns to influence the action of his will, but few if any learn to control this ponderous possession.

The extent of control depends on practice and observation. The baby learns to direct its hands, feet and mind by cultivating the suggestions of adults.

Few adults fully believe that prenatal influence environment and circumstances are material for character building, and are more or less submissive to the influence of each or all; and not a few acknowledge the control of these conditions in life. Most all people recognize both the power and possibility of influence.

Modern Spiritualism has made the "thin veil between us" so very thin that little, if any, distinction should be made concerning the influence of minds in and out of the body. No well meaning person will seek to control another, yet the influence of one person with another we can but concede as mutually helpful.

The presence of our loved ones in spirit is a fact which every age has accepted, in some form or another; their influence and its benefit upon the world none can successfully deny. Mediumship is the channel through which we sense this holy guidance, and being so close an approach to the sublime it brings into operation remarkably subtle forces. We should, therefore, exercise great care, thought and judgment in partaking of its heavenly fruition. The pleasure, consolation and comfort felt by the knowledge of angel ministration is paralleled only by the satisfaction, inspiration and helpfulness sensed by these ministers.

We are taught that soul growth is attained by experience. We find that few if any leave the earth plane fully unfolded, and they are benefited by the influence which they may have upon our lives.

A law of reciprocity upon the spiritual plane, the intelligent understanding of which is the promise of the twentieth century.

Suppose we compare the benefits derived from fire and water and the intelligent application of the forces which they produce, and the destruction which has come from their unbridled energies; suppose we compare the benefits derived from the communion with the denizens of spirit land, their helpful, comforting influence and the annoyances, wrongs or crimes (if such a thing can be) which we observe because of a lack of understanding so mighty a power. The ratio of apparent destruction might pardonably be greater from the latter because it involves the exercise of mightier and subtler laws.

I rejoice that Spiritualism is attaining powerful proportions of educational organization, and stands unmoved by the cry of adversary or wail of weakened associate.

Spiritual mediumship has stood a doorway between the two conditions of life through the ages; its misapplied power has at all times produced experiences which stand as signal towers to those who came on to the scene of action later, and its manifold blessings have sweetened and sustained the lives of millions.

I know a Spiritualist speaker who was confused spiritually by multiplicity of doctrines, uneducated mentally, and undeveloped physically, who after six years of spiritual unfoldment in carefully conducted home circles, went before the public, and has for seven years taught the comforting philosophy of Spiritualism as influenced by spirit guides. This speaker's satisfaction spiritually, unfoldment mentally and growth physically indicates marked improvement. This is but one of the many instances where the influence of spirit intelligences was beneficial.

We need thought and literature of tolerance that declares the good of all, and if revolutionary measures threaten destruction we can but know that progression is the law of nature, and death is but an event in life.

The book entitled The Great Psychological Crime, but emphasizes the caution which Andrew Jackson Davis gives in his "Diakka" and other of his works. It dwells upon the effects which a misunderstanding and misapplication of the psychic forces may have, but it in no way alters the fact and possible benefit of mediumship. We need to teach people personal responsibility and privilege until they will seek to co-operate with the arisen loved ones, to assist them in their unfoldment and to be benefited by their influence. WE DO NOT WANT CONTROLS, but how our souls crave for guides, for the presence of the loved ones who have borne with us the experiences of earth life, its tears and smiles, its burdens and joys, and knowing our weaknesses and limitations come to us from the world where soon we are to go, and with their old-time love, influence us how best to qualify for those conditions.

We need to teach people that the influence of the spirit friends may come in all forms and conditions, for we are constantly sending a variegated assembly there, but that the quality of those who influence them depend entirely upon their purity of thought and life, and upon their knowledge of the law which admits of the influence.

As well say extinguish fire because it destroyed a city as to speak of disregarding spiritual mediumship because some one has been "obsessed" by an undesirable intelligence.

But as wisely as we teach succeeding generations to "control" fire, will we endeavor to exalt man's spiritual conceptions until he seeks to "influence" the arisen loved ones with needed strength and force and receive in return the loving "influence" of their helpfulness.

RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles a Thing of the Past.

"Actina," a Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

A marvelous discovery has been made by that Scientist and Inventive Genius, Prof. W. O. Wilson. He has invented a restorer known as "Actina," through which all affections of the eyes and ear, such as blindness, granulated lids, cataracts, sore eyes, deafness, etc., are cured without cutting or drugging. It is a simple contrivance, known as the Actina Pocket Battery, and through it the patients cure themselves in the privacy of their own homes. It not only abolishes the butcheries and torturous methods practiced by oculists and aurists, but at the same time perfects a positive and lasting cure.

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kansas, writes: "My honest opinion of "Actina" is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It saved my eyes from an operation."

Mr. F. W. Harwood, Springfield, Mass., says that "Actina" cured him of deafness of nine years' standing.

Mr. A. L. Howe, Tully, N. Y., writes: "Actina" has removed cataracts from both my eyes. I can read well without my glasses; am sixty-five years old.

Robert Baker, Ocean Park, Cal., writes: "I should have been blind had I Not used "Actina."

A party of prominent citizens have organized a company known as the New York and London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. If you will call or send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. T. POEMS OF PROGRESS.

Dr T. Wilkins Has Interviewed

Col. Robert G. Ingersoll in Heaven,

And Poetically Describes the Same

He is there and is carrying on a great reformatory work among preachers, church members and bigots generally. He meets opposition in the land of souls the same as he did on earth. The following poem, by Dr. T. Wilkins, portrays in a most vivid and graphic manner some of his varied experiences with St. Peter and others, in his efforts to advance them to a higher plane of action.

As I sit in the twilight dreaming of life's many, many woes,
To that dear old soul, St. Peter, all my tender feeling goes.
He has had his share of trouble in our modern Christian days,
In deciding and consigning those of good and wicked ways,
And there is no cause for doubting that since Ingersoll arrived
The great horde of knowing preachers of much joy have been deprived.

It is well they did their roasting of the Colonel over here;
It is well they had their pleasures over him this side the bier,
For his eloquence and reason e'en St. Peter cannot stand,
And his wisdom will be whispered all about the spirit land.

Many preachers had consigned him to the hottest place in hell,
But St. Peter cannot put him 'mongst those preachers very well,
And when Robert gets to talking and disseminating fun,
Even Satan and his angels will soon start upon the run.

* * * * * * * * * *

Now I seem to see the Colonel, who was never known to shirk,
Making gestures toward old Satan, as he warms up to his work,
And His Majesty subsiding 'neath the Colonel's sparkling wit,
And the heavens growing brighter as with wisdom's fires lit.

And I wonder and conjecture as to how the Colonel fares
With the gates all closed against him just because to doubt he dares,
And while thinking thus my visions soothed me down into a sleep,
Till my spirit, fully conscious, passed beyond the misty deep.

Yes, a real sleep enwrapt me and I saw within my dream,
The old Colonel and St. Peter at the gate, with eyes agleam,
Both in earnest; but St. Peter seemed wrought up in very fear,
While the Colonel seemed illumined with a halo of good cheer.

As I watched in deepest pleasure earth's bright scintillating star,
Old St. Peter touched a button and the gates swung wide ajar,
But the Colonel stood there talking to his enemies below,
Till the tears they shed repentant made the heavens overflow.

There were preachers, deacons, sisters, who had always hated him,
Who were loudly now applauding with appreciative vim.
In the spirit they could see him as they saw him ne'er before
And his language was so charming they kept begging him for more.

While their eyes on earth were blinded by their selfishness and greed,
He could only wound their feelings by attacking their old creed,
But up there where all is spirit he is making Christians see
That their God was but a fiction of the ancient history.
It was fun to hear him tell them what their old religion cost
In the sacrifice of people whom they always taught were lost:
"You have cut out tongues of victims, you have torn men limb from limb,
You have slaughtered mothers, babies, and spread terror dark and grim,
And now here you stand in darkness, still awaiting that great day
When the Savior will reward you with his love—your fancied pay;
And still yonder in the distance you observe the shining throne
That for ages has been standing in your narrow brains alone;
Has been standing as a monument in spirit land to tell
The sad stories of the victims whom you thought had gone to hell.

"See it flashing! see it shining! see it glimmer in the sun!
Read upon its rusting surface all the crimes that have been done
In the name of your religion on the earthly plane, and weep
Till a raging flood of teardrops o'er your souls is running deep,
And you cannot then atone for all the misery you wrought;
You will find your cruel actions will come back to you unsought,
And with these few clinching pointers ringing clearly as a bell,
The good Colonel left his hearers standing facing their own hell.

* * * * * * * * * *

'Twas a treat to stand and watch them, here and there a little squad,
All discussing Robert's lecture and his picture of their God.
I could see them nod and gesture as they stood in twilight dim,
But they soon sank back in darkness as their hate returned for him;
And as for the placid Colonel, he arose and left the place,
With a twinkle in his optics and smile upon his face,
Just as if the task was pleasant and a satisfaction still,
To pull down old Superstition and destroy the gospel mill.

* * * * * * * * * *

After resting just a moment to renew his strength a bit
He passed over to St. Peter, who invited him to sit;
Then the Colonel, brightly smiling, questioned Peter o'er and o'er,
Of the "earthly church delusion, filled with falsehood to the core."

There he sat and coolly plied him with the questions he had stored,
Of the mansions and the Savior, and the saintly singing horde:
"Is there, sir, a God? a heaven where the saints immortal dwell?
And for all the rest a hades, an eternal burning hell?
If the God is omnipresent and omnipotent beside,
And an all-wise, loving Father, aye, all good personified,
For awhile, sir, let me see him, only for a little while;
Should I find him as they tell me, I shall give up with a smile."

"Nay, I cannot," says St. Peter, in a sort of undertone,
"None but Jesus, Lord and Master, can approach the Father's throne."
"Then the Master," said the Colonel, "I will summon to appear,
For if God exists I'll know it; I must gain His holy ear."

At the boldness of the Colonel, old St. Peter looked aggrieved,
For he knew that he had found one whom the church had not deceived.
He began to show a weakness that soon reached the Colonel's eye,
And he knew at once St. Peter was mixed up in that old lie.

It was then the Colonel started to explore the ancient shack,
That with age and wear had crumbled to a shell all grim and black,
When a form loomed up before him like the ghost of some old saint
But the Colonel did not tremble or fall over in a faint.

With a twinkle of good humor and a smile both rich and bland,
He just walked up to his ghostship and reached out a friendly hand,
When the form began to beckon as though calling up from space
Some one else to come and help him barricade the holy place;
But the spectre soon impressed him with a gesture and a nod
That around this ancient palace, now, he need not hunt for God;
And he "need not look for preachers, as each has his private cell,
Where he stays in constant terror of the man who upset hell";
"But I'll take you to a region," spake the spectre, "where, 'tis said,
There once sat a Great Jehovah with a crown upon his head,
Where the preachers from your planet used to gather, sing and pray
For the promise in the Bible for the 'good on judgment day.'"

Then he led him to an altar that seemed built of solid gold,
But the place was dark and gloomy and threw up a scent of mould.
"Here," began the guiding spectre, "is supposed to be the throne
Where the great and good Jehovah sat for ages all alone,
Till Confucius and your Jesus and some others I could name
From upon your little planet, as the people's Saviors came,
And began to hold their meetings in contention for a place,
And their wrangle and their jangle so disturbed His Mighty Grace
That he called them all together in a 'Council of the Right,'
And they wrangled and they jangled till they broke up Heaven quite.
Now, sir, this is all the story; as I got it, so I tell;
But they say down on your planet, it was you extinguished hell,
And they fear you and your reason, hence your presence do not hail,
Lest you turn the little heaven of their souls into a jail."

It was thus the guide recited all he knew of history,
All he knew of Heaven's people and the God that used to be.
All the while the Colonel listened with that twinkle in his eye;
He had heard upon this planet oft the same old musty lie,
And he knew that old St. Peter, all the ages past had known
Of this scheme to catch the people and control the "great white throne."

He discovered in this Heaven, to his sorrow and disgust,
That St. Peter was a holder of much stock in Christian trust;
He discovered that a corner had been gained by old St. Paul,
And the "big ones" had just driven all the "small ones" to the wall.
He discovered that the Savior was no higher than Tom Paine,
And Jehovah there no nearer than upon the earthly plane.

He was glad to meet St. Peter as he sat there at the gate,
For it livened up his journey in that great immortal state.

But he found no place in Heaven where he thought he'd care to stay,
For the place was small and dismal and was sadly in decay.
It was builded to the notion of the minds so long ago,
That the modern man, developed, would find rooms too small and low.

"It is changed," St. Peter told him, "till the place seems new and strange,"
But his saintship seemed enjoying all the features of the change,
And though old he had adopted all the fads of modern thought,
Just to hold down his position that the younger saints had sought.

Bob was shown the great Elijah, who resembles Dowie some,
And was told how he "to Heaven in a chariot had come."
He was shown the dear old Moses, and old David and his folks,
And old Jonah and old Daniel who had figured in the hoax.
He was shown the face of Noah and of Adam and of Eve,
And he wondered how such women, plump and pretty could deceive.
He was shown the massive fog-horn that old Gabriel will blow,
And the Colonel spoke of leaving, but they wouldn't let him go.

In my dream the Colonel told me all the sights he had been shown,
And he said he thought the spirit of progression there had grown,
Till the only hell and heaven that the spirit there could find,
Were conditions each one brought there in the consciousness of mind,
That Jehovah means the center of all power and all life,
And the Devil means the center of all error, pain and strife.

No one knows what is beyond us; no one knows what lies in wait;
No one knows from the beginning what will be his coming fate;
When we close our eyelids mortal in our soul we catch a gleam
Of a bright and shining portal and we linger in that dream.

On this side it seems but justice for the good to stand above
And apart from all the vicious if they build their homes with love,
And all know the brainy Colonel towered far above his foes,
For he always met them kindly when in anger they arose.
It was not the men he battled, but their binding, blinding creed;
It was not the persons hated, but old superstition's seed.

In my soul I see him fighting, leading on across the way,
At the head of hosts of people in the light of modern day;
Hear him talking to immortals who in darkness have been lost,
Or upon the sea of trouble in a shipwrecked boat were tossed.
Hear the words of wisdom falling like the dewdrops on each head,
Like the morning sunlight beaming o'er the verdure almost dead.

His great soul, so full of music and from earthly labors free,
Still is weaving words of power for eternal liberty,
And his high and tender spirit with his true, unselfish love,
Soon will lift the veil of darkness from those fogy eyes above.

* * * * * * * * * *

As I wake from slumber visions I can see the Colonel still,
And he seems pursuing preachers with the same determined will,
With the object still before him to make superstition flee
E'en from heaven, if infected, and to make all people free.

Our Boston Correspondent Expresses Himself Clearly and Forcibly on the Decline of Spiritualist Societies.

There are many things coming to the front at the present time, that Spiritualists must calmly meet. The "decline" of Spiritualist societies is most certainly one of them. The cause of this has to be determined in the future, and a remedy found, if possible. The Spiritualist papers are not supported as well as formerly, with the single exception of The Progressive Thinker. The Light of Truth has sunk $30,000 in the vain effort to be sustained. The old Religio-Philosophical Journal has been so reduced in size that it contains barely one-fifth of the amount of reading matter it formerly had. The Banner of Light has a difficult task in its efforts to live, and all along the line the prospect has not been very encouraging in the Spiritualist newspaper business. This condition of affairs cannot be ascribed to the Great Psychological Crime. It is useless to conceal facts; they will sooner or later force themselves to the front, and demand a hearing. Spirit manifestations, the leading factor in our cause, has certainly been on the increase, and may it not be possible that the decline in the number of prosperous Spiritualist societies may arise from the fact that liberal and eloquent reverends are coming to the front everywhere and attract the Spiritualist? In this city any number of Spiritualists flock to hear the liberal divines who have banished hell and a golden-payed heaven.—Editor.

FROM NEW ENGLAND.

Spiritualism in New England averages about the same from season to season in the matter of numbers attracted to its meetings, and permanent interest in it as a movement on the part of those who seek it as investigators. The movement is by no means represented by the same number of local societies as it was three and a half decades ago. The days when Ralph Waldo Emerson, William Lloyd Garrison, Henry C. Wright, Stephen and Abbie Kelley Foster, Dr. S. B. Brittan, Prof. Wm. Denton, and others of like standing, graced the rostrum are not duplicated now. Thousands flocked to hear the eloquent and scholarly exponents of the new gospel of angel love in those days and were not ashamed to admit their love for Spiritualism to the whole world.

To-day they and their descendants are largely found among the members of the liberal Christian churches. Some of the most popular speakers of that period are now pastors of Christian churches. Want of proper organization and earnest devotion to the truths of Spiritualism are responsible for the decline of our movement in New England.

In Maine where there were once seventy-five or more flourishing societies, there are now less than ten, four of which are ten-day camp-meetings.

Interest has fallen off in New Hampshire and Vermont in even greater degree. There are not more than ten working local societies in both states, whereas at the time to which reference is made, these states were blessed with as many local societies as was the state of Maine.

Massachusetts still has many local societies, but they are not possessed of one-tenth of the financial and numerical strength as they were in the palmy days of Denton, Spence, Doten, Finney, French, Baxter and Randolph; in fact, the towns in which strong societies then existed, have none now, or like some of the cities, only weak and non-influential bodies. Other towns now have societies in which none formerly existed, but these bodies are rather unstable and ebb and flow with the tide of human curiosity. It is not improbable that two hundred Spiritualist gatherings of different kinds are held in Massachusetts every Sunday. Very few of these can be dignified with the name "society"; they are simply gatherings of people, attracted by the magnet of some medium, or by the desire to have "a good time."

Rhode Island and Connecticut are much the same as the state of Maine. When H. H. Brown was settled at Willimantic, and J. Frank Baxter at Providence, Spiritualism was healthily aggressive in both states. Pawtucket and Providence are now the only places in Rhode Island that have local societies. Warren, Woonsocket, Westerly, Newport, Bristol and other live towns now have none, whereas Spiritualism was once at the very front in those places.

Local societies are also few in number in Connecticut as compared with other days. The city of Norwich is about the only place in which an aggressive local society is at work. Hartford has eight or ten Spiritualist meetings every Sunday; they probably do some good, but their influence upon the religious life of the city is slight. The same is true of New Haven, Bridgeport, Meriden, Stonington, New London and other places where weak societies exist, or none at all.

It must not be imagined that popular interest in Spiritualism has waned because of this general decline of the local societies. On the contrary, Spiritualism is more to the people than ever before. It is being talked from the pulpit of nearly every Christian church, while the secular press and the literature of the day are filled with it. Camp-meetings are now numerous, and they contribute largely to the decline of local societies. People "fill up" with Spiritualism at the camps then, like bruin in winter, live upon that store until camp season comes again. Literally some of them draw in their spiritual food for eleven months and fifteen days through their hands. They "lick off" the spiritual sweets as children do molasses candy when it has stuck fast to their fingers. It satisfies them until candy time comes again.

Good work is being done in many places, but the weakness of the itinerant system grows more and more apparent every passing day. The change of speakers every Sunday injures the cause beyond repair. Permanency is never established by removing the underpinning from a building. This is equally true in spiritual work. The noted speakers named above were usually employed for a term of months in the places where they spoke. Their influence was lasting, and could have been made the power of all powers had the Spiritualists risen to their opportunity by proper organization. The best results now apparent are found only through long engagements. The work of such wonderful mediums as Mrs. May S. Pepper must be classed by itself. She has a special following, and her hearers seldom attend any other Spiritualistic meetings. In fact, it is safe to say that they are never present save when this gifted psychic is to appear.

In Boston, Mrs. Minnie M. Soule carried on the work of the Gospel of Spirit Return Society for many years. She interested many people, and her organization did a great deal of practical work, besides giving valuable instruction in spiritual things. The name of her society is somewhat paradoxical—"Spirit Return." Since the spirits of those who take leave of earth never go away, how is it possible for them to "return?" But names count for little when good is outwrought for the mourning sons and daughters of earth. Mrs. N. J. Willis is the regular speaker at the M. S. Ayer Temple. She has a large circle of staunch friends, who listen with delight to her utterances and claim to be greatly benefited by them. Agrippa, Clime, Phillips Brooks, Plato, Aristotle, H. W. Beecher, Theodore Parker, and other celebrated characters in history, are regularly advertised to speak through her organism. Mrs. Willis does her work in her way, and her utterances can only be judged upon their merits, therefore, no one has the right to praise or to condemn them unheard.

Mr. F. A. Wiggin is the settled speaker for the Boston Spiritual Temple. His audiences certainly average with those to be found in the Christian churches from Sunday to Sunday. His meetings are advertised in the column of church notices in the daily papers, and his subjects are upon topics of vital interest to all patriotic citizens. His evening meetings are usually very largely attended. His aim evidently is to make Spiritualism a permanent influence in the religious life of the city. It is a worthy ambition, and he has the consciousness that he is being sustained by many of the best people in Boston. Aside from Mrs. Willis and Mr. Wiggin, there are no regular societies presenting Spiritualistic lectures in Boston. Mrs. Soule has not opened her meetings thus far this season, owing to ill health, while all of the hundred or more other gatherings held every Sunday are either individual enterprises for personal profit, or an aggregation of talent for the purpose of advertising publicly the psychic powers of which the participants claim to be possessed. Two lyceums, led by Mr. J. B. Hatch, Jr., and Mrs. M. J. Butler, complete the Sunday services in Boston. There are numerous week-evening meetings that are almost purely social in character.

Boston is also the home of the Banner of Light, as it has been for forty-seven years. It has had but three editors in all that time—Luther Colby, John W. Day and Harrison D. Barrett. The former fell at his post of duty. Capt Day sold out his interests after two years of service, and Mr. Barrett has been at the helm ever since 1897. Quite a surprise was sprung at his removal a few weeks since, by the party who gained possession of the paper at the time of Mr. Tuttle's transition in October, 1903. and legal proceedings are now pending to determine the rights of the contending parties. All of the old employes of the Banner are reported to have been discharged, and the new management has fortified itself with people of its own choosing. The public is interested, and cannot but wonder what the outcome will be. All hope for the triumph of the right, and trust that justice may prevail. Mr. J. J. Morse is now acting as editor-in-chief, and is assisted by Miss Susie C. Clark, both of whom are well known in Spiritualistic circles. As the oldest publication in the world pertaining to Spiritualism, the Banner's fate is a matter of concern to all Spiritualists, and it is to be hoped that no one of them will permit prejudice to blind his eyes to the good the paper has done in the past, or may do in the future, if honestly conducted and handled by true friends of the cause.

Q. A. D.

Boston, Mass.

This thought, kept well before our people will do no harm, as it will have a tendency to keep them free, and it is freedom we need. It is obvious that some of those who call themselves Spiritualists are inclined to be as narrow in their conceptions of truth as almost any other denomination in the world This is perhaps unpleasant, but it is true nevertheless.

Denominational lines must be swept away—to me it seems the whole aim of spiritual philosophy is toward the elimination of such—toward the destruction of those lines which induce caste, and that spirit which fosters a system of caste, is of all things the most undesirable. Ancient history, and some not so ancient, gives us clearly defined illustrations of the evils of caste systems, and encourage us to strive for equality.

The object of spirit return, is not simply to amuse—to satisfy cravings or curiosity, nor simply to demonstrate the continuity of life, but is essentially for the instruction of the masses—the leading of men away from the paths of past error, and into the higher walks of understanding. If our friends come back to us (as we know they do); it is not only that they whisper "All is well," but that they may give us the benefit of their increased knowledge of life—that they may tell us wherein they have made a mistake, and thereby aid us to avoid that mistake. Oh, may we learn the object of spirit communion so thoroughly that we will raise it to that high standard that is its just due—and may it never die out, is the wish of

WILL J. ERWOOD.

TWO GOOD MEN GONE.

Will J. Erwood Writes of Spiritualistic Work.

I enclose herewith a short account of the life of James E. Hyde, of Ripon, Wis., written by one who knew him well. Brother Hyde has just passed to the higher life, after months of suffering of the most intense character. In his transition this life has been deprived of the influence of a good man; one who was a consistent and faithful Spiritualist for many years. The general verdict of those who knew him was that he was one of the most even tempered, just men they have ever known, and this of course does not by any means cast undesirable reflections upon the cause of which he was a representative.

It was my privilege to speak the words of farewell to the mortal body, of God-speed to the arisen spirit.

The angel of Death has been busy in Wisconsin during the last two weeks in that it has taken away two of our best men. I had no sooner arrived home from officiating at Brother Hyde's funeral than I received word to hold myself in readiness to respond to a similar call from Almond, Wis.

This call was not long delayed, and Thursday, Dec. 31, found me at that town to officiate at the funeral of our co-worker and brother, John S. Cowan, who had answered the summons and gone to join his many friends on the other side. Mr. Cowan was one of the trustees of our state association, and a noble character in every way. That he was held in high esteem is evidenced by the fact that every business house in Almond was closed during the funeral, and also by the fact that he has held office after office in the community and county of which he has long been a resident, his last position being that of postmaster.

The Methodist church was placed at our disposal, and was filled to overflowing by the many who were proud to call John Cowan friend and fellow-townsman. It was my privilege to know Mr. Cowan personally and well, and to say that he was one of the highest type of men is by no means saying too much. His religion was to do good, and justice characterized his every act. I would that Spiritualism had more men in its ranks like the two who have just passed beyond this vale of sorrows.

Brother Hyde leaves a wife and several sons to remember his many excellent qualities, while those who are left to carry on the work Brother Cowan was doing are a wife, one daughter and a son, Mr. Wayne Cowan, who is in the Indian Department at Washington. These good men will be missed, but they are two more who have gone to the life beyond the grave to prepare a welcome for their loved ones who must perforce follow them in the course of time.

Since writing my last letter I have visited a number of places for the purpose of holding meetings, among them being Almond, Portage (where the president of the State Association makes her home and is doing an excellent work for the cause), Cambria, Winona, Minn., and Rochester, Minn., meeting at each place many fine people, and witnessing the growth of the interest in the cause of Spiritualism.

It is gratifying to note that increased interest, in spite of the feeling that sometimes arises to the contrary, I can not see that there is reason to fear the outcome of our cause if we follow strictly in the path outlined by those arisen friends who are permitted to be leaders and guides, as well as in that which our own inspirations tell us is the right.

I find a growing desire on the one hand, for startling phenomena, and, happily, on the other hand as steady a growth of the desire for philosophy—for that sound philosophy that has been shorn of platitudes—presenting only the most cogent reasons for taking up the study of life as revealed by the higher soul illumination. While there is of course, the same necessity for phenomenal evidence, I believe the many are beginning to realize the sacred character of the communion between the two worlds. When I say sacred, I do not mean in the light of sacerdotalism, but that sacredness that embodies the simplicity of truth divested of all shams and meaningless forms and rituals.

Occasionally I met alarmists who fear the interest is dying out—who are afraid that we shall have a priesthood, etc. They are amusing, to say the least, and I am sure are earnest, but I hope mistaken. I cannot see that we want to build up a clergy in the sense that other denominations have, but that we should require our workers to have certain qualifications I believe to be no more than right. However in building up any system which might well be looked upon as a clergy, we would do well to bear in mind one fact, and that is, it is difficult to take such a step without a tendency to sectarianism—to creedalism, and of all things in the world I hope we will not become sectarian or harrow.

In my estimation we should never forget that it is humanity first, then the other things that may follow, but our duty is to men, before it is to church or ism, whether it is a Spiritualistic church, or a Catholic—whether it is Spiritualism, or Methodism, makes no difference.

THE GREAT MYSTERY OF SPIRIT FORMS

NUMBER FOUR.

A few philosophers in America and Europe are aware that in 1901, I published, for the first time in the history of philosophy, a brief outline of some of the principles of Hunger.

Obviously, the passion is transmitted from parent to child through the germ cells of conception.

Hunger is both an hereditary and acquired choice of affinities of nutrition, viz., for self-evolution.

Its laws imply an hereditary capacity for a self-reconstruction of the self.

I have defined Life as the involution, dissolution and evolution of forms by laws of passion.

Hunger is the first of these laws.

On its lowest plane, it is seen to be the principle causing the protozoa to digest and secrete.

On its highest, its laws influence the purest Spiritualism, and its philosophy.

Hunger therefore always implies some form of consciousness of choice. It is not mere physical attraction, i. e., as of a magnet for filings. Or chemical affinity, i. e., as of H for O.

Through its reconstructive laws my body has been evolved from the lowliest forms of the protozoa.

Hunger, and nutrition, are, as a builder to his bricks; a shoemaker to his leather, a tailor to his cloth, a dressmaker to her silk, a watchmaker to his metals.

My body and soul owe their existence to the laws of Hunger. The existence of nutrition has no meaning when it is divorced from its relations to the constructive, and reconstructive laws of Hunger; which get, keep, change, and reconstruct nutrition into blood and nerve cells.

Thus through the laws of Hunger, my Ego, Self, Mind, or Soul gains its first victory over matter; by overcoming the physical and chemical inertias of nutrition, and evolving them into vital forms, forces and motions.

The evolution of human knowledge ultimately depends on these laws

To get nutrition implies touch.

This makes sense images possible; and, out of which grow the identities of the inferior concepts of the subsequently evolved Intellect.

On the side of the evolution of the physiological "matter" of the brain (which evolution is performed by the laws of Hunger) it is obvious, that the brain (as the organ of human knowledge) depends for its existence upon the evolution of blood; blood depends for its existence upon the evolution of nutrition; and the evolution of nutrition, into blood, depends upon the creative laws of Hunger.

On the side of Touch, the laws of Hunger are mental.

On the side of nutrition, they are vital.

Out of these two laws are evolved the body and the soul of man, viz., out of the laws of passions, and senses.

The laws of Hunger which get, keep, and reconstruct, physical and chemical inertias into nerves, and nerve forces, imply the operation of self-creative powers, which are unwearyingly concerned in the evolution of forms; the evolution of forces; and the evolution of motions.

Therefore; the evolution of my Self, Ego, or Soul is revealed in this principle, viz., that these self-created forms, forces, and motions (of which cells, nerve-forces, and circulation are types) continue (after their secondary creation) to assist in creating a still higher series of forms, forces, and motions; of which, mental-images of sight and hearing; forces of strictly mental attraction; and the motion of telepathic concepts, and apparitions, are types.

Thus; as an illustration of a phase of hallucinatory Spiritualism—as distinguished from real Spiritualism—visions of spirits may be made to appear by abnormal quantities of blood acting on the complex structure of the retina, the optic nerve tract and the brain cortex.

Reduce the quantities of forces, and motions, i. e., the size, or volume of the streams of blood flowing into these portions of the brain; and you can reduce the color, number, and forms, of the spirits.

Nicolai, in a paper read to the Royal Society of Berlin, describes the disappearance of spirits, through the reduction of the volume of blood from his brain, by leeches; and the demands of digestion.

The bleeding by leeches began about eleven o'clock in the forenoon.

"I was," he writes, "alone with the surgeon during the operation. The room swarmed with human forms of every description; which crowded fast on one another. This continued till half-past four o'clock. The exact time when digestion commences. I then observed that the figures began to move more slowly. Soon afterwards the colors became gradually paler. Every seven minutes they lost more and more of their intensity without any alteration in the distinct figure of the apparitions. At about half-past six o'clock all the figures were entirely white, and moved very little. Yet the forms appeared perfectly distinct. By degrees they became visibly less plain. Without decreasing in number, as had formerly been the case, the figures did not move off. Neither did they vanish, which also had usually happened on other occasions. In this instance they dissolved immediately into air. Of some, even the whole pieces remained for a length of time; which also by degrees were lost to the eye. At about eight o'clock there did not remain a vestige of any of them. And I have never since experienced any appearance of the same kind."

My explanation of the causes of the final disappearance of Nicolai's hallucinatory spirits is as follows:

The circulatory forms, forces, and motions, ceased to act, first, on those complex parts of the retina, and optic nerve, essential, first, to the actual rates of motion (or time) at which the spirits moved; consequently, the spirits, at first, began to move more slowly.

Secondly; and in order, they ceased to act on those cerebral parts essential to the visual creation of space; i, e., color; as a result, the spirits began to look paler.

Third; the circulatory forms, forces, and motions, ceased to act on those cerebral parts essential to the development of geometrical outlines, figures, shapes, curves, and angles; as a consequence, the lines, angles, and curves, constituting the figures of the spirits, immediately dissolved.

But these facts have another side.

As the reduction of the forms, forces, and motions (circulation) can reduce the laws of space, and time, governing the forms, forces, and motions of mental-images; so, on the other hand, an increase of these same forms, forces, and motions (circulation) modifies, and often increases the number, variety, persistency of these mental forms, forces, and motions

"Every German word and phrase deserted my recollection," said Sir H. Holland. "It was not until I had taken food and wine * * that I regained them again."

Opium, by modifying the forms, forces and motions of the circulation causes the mental forms, mental forces and mental images and motions of the past to re-appear.

"Sometimes," wrote De Quincey, "I seemed to have lived for seventy or a hundred years in one night." That is, the number of mental forms were increased; because, the actual rate of motion, or time, at which scenes moved, increased.

In fever, the rapidity of the circulation, is, other things equal, the cause of the increase of memory, i. e., the force and motion of the blood is increased.

In a personal experience with haschish, I found the external notion of time to be greatly modified. This was because there were so many more images crowded into the minutes.

Other things equal, it is the modification of the form of the force i. e., the blood; in addition to the change in the rates of its motion, viz., time; which, modifying the impressions on the optic tract, causes visual images to appear in such altered relations to the senses.

Memory is therefore based on the forms and forces related to Hunger; and upon the varying rates of the motion of these forms and forces in their relation to the nerves.

An army officer, quoted by Ribot, was thrown from his horse, striking his skull. For five hours he loses all memory, though conscious of everything else. The return of the mental images to his memory, ultimately depended upon the normal motion of the force of the blood.

"Six hours after the accident the pulse begins to rise. The patient takes cognizance of the reply made so many times, 'You fell from your horse!' Eight hours after the accident, the pulse is still rising. The patient remembers to have seen me once before. Two and a half hours later, the pulse is normal. The patent no longer forgets what is said to him. He remembers distinctly the injury."

The temporary destruction of the officer's memory was obviously due to the violent alterations in the motions of the force of the blood in his brain, when he fell. By a different method, yet the same principle, memory is finally destroyed by the terrible changes in the motions of the force of the blood, in apoplectics.

When the motions of this force acts irregularly on the complex part of the retina, the sense of color becomes deranged; and the images of the memory become inextricably confused with those of perverted sensation.

Dr. Weiss gives the case of a sailor, a victim to psychic epilepsy. "The sailor" exaggerated the size of objects and distances, and was color blind. He called all dark colors dark blue and bright colors bright blue. Black was complete dark blue. White, strong light blue. As usual, he passed out of this state. Forgetting everything he had done in it. On another occasion he saw a black figure standing before him, and thought he was close by the sea, although, as was next day ascertained, he was three thousand paces from the shore.

Of course, certain conditions of weak health—not all—imply weaker rates of motion of the force; as in the case of a member of the medical profession, referred to by Dr. Ireland. This weakening of the rates, of the motion, of the force, of the blood, on the optic track, causes objects to appear smaller and weaker. This principle I explained in the case of Nicolai. To prove it, (by an inverse method) by turning the head upside down (so as to increase the rate of the motion of the force of the blood on the optic nerve) I have found that the colors of a landscape will appear more clear, deep, and brilliant Had the blood been drawn from my brain, by the two methods of leeches, and digestion, the colors would have looked paler.

Taking all of these cases together, I note that the lowly passion of creative Hunger, whose laws get, change, keep, reproduce and recreate the forms of nutrition into blood (thereby proving the creative victories of Life, over the physical inertia of "matter") also triumphantly evolves a new subjective world of strictly mental forms, forces, and motions; and which is ruled absolutely by its own law of mental space, viz., coexistences and sizes of mental images; and of mental time, viz., successions and durations of the same.

This is the world with which subjective—not objective—Spiritualism; and its philosophy has to deal.

The sun, moon, stars, and objects of the earth, which act from outside of our bodies, in, and on our organs of sense, furnish us with the laws of physical space and physical time.

This is the world of objective Spiritualism.

Thus; there are four grand classes of self-created forms, forces and motions, necessary to be self-evolved, as a condition to the self-evolution of universal intelligence, sympathy, and memory. And the work of this self-evolution—other things equal—depends on the senses as the servants of those primary laws of Hunger, which get, change, keep, reproduce, and re-create, the forms of "matter."

1. The first class means the self-evolution of the more solid, structural forms, viz., the bones.

2. The second class means the self-evolution of moving structural forms, viz. ,muscles, nerves, blood.

3. The third class involves the self-evolution of imponderable moving forces and forms, viz., nervous force, cerebral electricity, coenaesthesia; as the basis for the telepathing of concepts.

4. The fourth class implies the self-evolution of mental forms, viz., sense-images, and concepts; which—through the senses—are obtained, changed, kept, reproduced, and adjusted in universal relations, by the laws of the passions, i. e., Hunger, Love, Anger, Ambition, Fear, Hope, Sublimity and Compassion, Envy and Jealousy, and Sex, and Wonder.

The physical time necessary for me to see an object of physical light is from $".20 to 0".22.

The mental time, necessary for me to see a mental object, according to a reflex act of consciousness (Exner) is from 0".0662 to 0".0578.

Therefore; if the spirit which Job saw passing before his face had moved through space, at a rate swifter than between 0".20 and 0".22, the sage would not have been able to have physically discerned it.

Paradoxical as it may sound, Job's memory of the passing of the spirit before his face, and his general memory, had its seat in the laws of his passions; not merely in his senses.

Hence, the law of Mental Time which governs Memory, governs the laws of the Passions.

Introspection and personal experience has taught me, that the laws of my own passions, place (before my own consciousness) the classes of their own special, remembered sense-images, with incredible velocity.

Assume the law of Time to be 0".578 for a remembered-image of passion; and 0".22, the Time necessary for a new physical sensation to interest me; and the differences in the velocities of the successions of the shapes, which go to make up the differences in the successions and durations of Mental and Physical Time, are at once apparent.

The laws of my Hunger, which get, keep, change, reproduce, and evolve forms, into nerve cells, could not operate unless conditioned upon very complex laws of memory.

The weakness of the old philosophies, and the intellectualists, has consisted in the fact, that they have entirely overlooked these laws of the memories of the passions; and have attributed the origin and memory of concepts, and images, wholly to the operations of the senses.

But each passion has its laws of memory; and its law of reflex time.

Hence persons predict and infer consequences far more promptly, from the concepts connected with the laws of their own Hunger, Suspicion, Love, Jealousy, Sex, Avarice, Compassion, Shame, Fear, Anger, and Ambition; than from the passing, physical images of their Sight, Hearing, Touch, Smell, and Taste

And; this is why hallucinations of deep-seated feelings of passion, are always more enduring than hallucinations of the senses; because the latter (in the majority of cases) have their origin in the laws governing the former class.

Shame keeps persons from admitting the existence of emotional states; the deepest memories are never told.

This is why the psychologist is thrown off the track by his subject.

The desire to be universally approved, being nearly always a stronger motive in women, and men, than the love of truth.

Only martyrs, scientists and philosophers die for the truth.

No one has ever lived, who has told all the moral and psychological secrets which they know about themselves.

Hence, the psychologist is always working in the dark in the majority of his cases SALVARONA.

THE IROQUOIS THEATRE TRAGEDY

"Oh! see the calcium light," they said,
They looked, and then "six hundred dead."

A Simoon wind and fiery dust—
And then the awful holocaust.

From hell a scorching sheet of flame—
And then charred bodies without name.

"Give dividends," the Shylocks cried,
And then six hundred victims died.

But Justice stands with balanced sword
And waits the inevitable word.

Tho' heaven falls and suns grow dim,
Stern Justice meted out by Him

Who rules the stars—shall never cease
Until on earth the reign of Peace.

LIFE IS GOOD.

They come, they pass, with snow-soft feet,
And deathless youth illumes their eyes;
Alike to them are chaff and wheat,
Alike the foolish and the wise,
They bring the wound, they bring the balm,
They light our smiles, they dry our tears;
Careless of death or life, the calm
Servants of time, the patient years.

The winds that rend and strew the rose
Dissolve the sweetness through the air;
This wind of time that beats and blows,
Leaves all the past still fragrant-fair.
Though hopes may fail and hearts may break,
And fruitless all the striving be,
One golden gift is left to make
Man's bliss, consoling memory.

Hail and farewell, farewell and hail!
The going and the coming guest.
Welcome to daybreak's shining sail,
As to the night beyond the west!
The years may come, the years may go,
And bring the sad or merry mood;
Merry or sad, one thing we know
That life is good, ah, life is good!

The Light Among the Hills.

A Charming Narrative.

Most Beautifully Suggestive is "The Light Among the Hills," by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt. It is a narrative founded on facts alone, and every Spiritualist should read it.

"Some time after this I was awakened in the night by a voice speaking my name. I sat up in bed wide awake and listened. I heard the ticking of the clock and from an adjoining room the savy breathing of the other two members of my family. I felt a strong impression that some one was standing near my bed wanting to speak to me. A soft light filled the room and while I could in no way account for it I was not in the least frightened. I lay down and waited. Soon a voice began speaking—the same voice that had spoken to me before—a voice now thrilling with strength and tenderness. It spake slowly and distinctly and every word entered my brain and thrilled my inner being with a strong conviction of the truth spoken."

Mrs. Austin took from a drawer in the table by which she was sitting, a bundle of papers and choosing one she said: "Now listen to the words the voice spake to me:

"'Look not on yonder snowclad mound,
For she a home of light has found.
Beyond the turmoil you call life,
Beyond its wretchedness and strife,
Her soul from earth and flesh made free
Now waits with joy to welcome thee.
No ancient church nor blood-stained creed
I urge on thee in this thy need;
Find in thyself a power divine
And know unending life is thine.'"

"You see there is nothing mystical or uncertain about that. It is right to the point and it brought me joy and light—like the pure soft light of morning that ushers in a glorious day.

"It is not my purpose to give you a history of the months that elapsed between that time and the time I lost my husband, but I will say that they were bright with hope. I learned not only that there is a life beyond death—a continuation of our present existence—but that it will be just what I myself make it; that if I want to find a heaven hereafter I must do my best to make a heaven here—now. Many times that voice spake to me words of warning, of counsel and of comfort. Many that I had loved and lost came and made themselves known to me. Yes, the veil was rent between me and the spirit world, and my entire being thrilled with renewed life and hope. I began to feel that I had a work to do, and began to prepare myself for it by trying each day to make the most and best of myself and my opportunities.

"'Seek not afar for the things that lie within your reach. Do not expect or ask a higher power to do for you what it is possible for you to do for yourself,' said my spirit instructor. Do your best and the best will come to you. Be kind to every living creature. Entertain not an unkind or evil thought for one moment. Make yourself pure, and true and noble. Excuse nothing in yourself that you would not excuse in another. Let alone other people's failings except to avoid them yourself. Learn to use your trials, misfortunes and disappointments as stepping-stones to lift you higher. Get all the good you can out of everything, and let the bad alone if you cannot help to mend it in any way.'

"Such are some of the counsels I received, and as I sought for greater light I received it. I learned to look after my bodily health carefully. I grew thoughtful about choosing my food and drink. Spirituality and intemperance never go together, and a person may be intemperate in eating as well as any other way.

"Perfect cleanliness of mind and body, pure food, pure water, pure air, plenty of exercise in the sunlight and regular hours for the daily duties, all are essential to success in spiritual attainments. Pure air is of great importance in more ways than one, for only earth-bound spirits will enter a foul atmosphere—do not ever forget that truth. Spirits cannot do impossible things just because they have passed out of the flesh. No one would expect an accomplished musician to render a piece of music perfectly if the instrument given him was out of tune, but many persons expect the communicating spirits will do perfect work through a very imperfect medium. We do not want to throw to the winds our judgment and good sense just because we are dealing with spiritual matters, for there is no time when it is needed any more.

"The absurd idea that because a man is dead he knows everything seems to have taken a firm hold in the mind of the average person. The average person is spiritually lazy; he says he wants the truth, but he is not willing to work for it or even think deeply. Phenomena is of no use, only to convince those who would not be convinced otherwise. It is to the truth seeker what the first reader is to the child, and one ought to very soon progress beyond seeking for it.

A person developing spiritually will soon outgrow that childish love of the marvelous which constantly demands something wonderful. What we persistently seek for we find, therefore it is important that we aim high, maintain high ideals and seek for the highest and noblest attainments."

Then came a quick knock upon the door and Mrs. Austin arose and admitted a stranger, a small woman with keen black eyes. She took in the occupants of the room with a swift searching glance, and turning to Mrs. Austin, said: "Are you Mrs. Austin, the medium?"

"Yes."

"Well, I am a medium also, a a little while ago a spirit came to me and said that she had been to you the last two evenings but your mind was so fully occupied with your own affairs that she could not get your attention. She gave me this message for you, and asked me to bring it to you, saying that you alone could do the work she wants done."

The woman gave Mrs. Austin a folded slip of paper, and with a courteous "good evening," withdrew. Mrs. Austin unfolded the paper and read these words: "Go to the town of Leeden tomorrow by the hill road and your duty will be made clear to you. (Signed) Mandane Estrey."

"What does it mean?" asked Mrs. Grey and Martha in concert.

"I do not know," replied their friend, "but as we do not have to work to-morrow we shall find out."

The next day Mrs. Austin and Mrs. Grey and Martha started for the town specified in the message received the night before. The road led between desolate-looking pasture lands interspersed by groves of sugar maples and somber spruces. Here and there the traveler could look away beneath the spreading boughs into the cool shadowy depths where were beds of soft green moss, where graceful feathery ferns drooped over little streams that with many a splash and tumble plunged into larger streams. Sometimes the road ran beside half-cultivated fields. These farms were usually rough and stony and looked as if nature offered a stern resistance to man's efforts to wring from her a livelihood. The three women enjoyed their drive and saw beauty everywhere as only real nature lovers can. From tangled bushes, ruined fences, and broken and gnarled tree tops birds were flitting and singing joyously. The air was fragrant with the odor of the growing ferns, grasses and briars, and the roadsides were brightened by yellow dandelions and blue violets. The swamps with their pools of dark water where the cat-tails were growing, where the air was filled with the spicy breath of peppermint and wild grape, where slender willow boughs swung their golden "pussies" in the glorious sunlight—all called for their share of enthusiastic admiration.

At last they came out upon a plain at the top of a high hill. The view was magnificent. Hill rose beyond hill until the blue of the farther hills mingled with the soft blue of the sky. The nearer hills were clothed with verdure from bottom to top save where some great gray rock reared above the surface of the soil. The dark robes of the spruces were relieved by dashes of golden green showing where the aspens grew, and here and there a paper birch with its long arms spread outward flashed a gleam of silvery whiteness upon the scene. A few rods ahead stood an old weather-beaten house. Smoke curling out of the big square chimney showed that the house was inhabited. A little farther back from the road stood a large new barn gay in its coat of red paint. In front of the house a stream of crystal water running through a rough bark spout fell into a trough hollowed out of a section of a large log. Near the trough stood a woman feeding some grain out of a tin dish to some ducks and chickens.

"I will drive up and give the horse some water," said Mrs. Austin, but before she had reached the trough a smart carriage drawn by a handsome black horse dashed up and a well-dressed and pompous looking man sprang out and proceeded to uncheck the thirsty horse. In the carriage sat a stylishly dressed woman who looked about her curiously. As Mrs. Austin and her companions drove up they heard the man by the horse exclaim, "What magnificent scenery!" and with a lordly wave of his hand he indicated the surrounding country.

"Yes," said his companion, "it is perfectly lovely, Surely, madame," she said, addressing the bent figure holding the dish of grain, "you must appreciate the delicate coloring and wild beauty of your magnificent hills."

The bent figure straightened. She was a woman a little past forty, perhaps, but she looked much older. Her hair which was drawn tightly back into a small knot at the back of her shapely head, was plentifully streaked with gray, her eyes wore a sad, hopeless expression, and her thin, pale face was lined with care and suffering, and her whole aspect and attitude was dejected and pitiful. For an instant she looked at the handsome carriage and the fashionably dressed woman who had spoken to her, and then she said with cold indifference, "I suppose it is all very fine, but it is not food nor clothing."

"That is always the way with such people," said the woman in the carriage with a tone of contempt; "they never have eyes for the beauty of the landscape or the glory of the sunset; all such people think about is food and shelter just like their cattle—they have no souls."

These words produced a powerful effect upon the woman by the trough. Her figure grew erect and rigid, her toil-hardened hands twitched nervously around the dish she held, and her sad, wistful eyes darkened and gleamed with a wild light, as in a low intense tone she said: "Much such as you know about my desires and feelings! How much do you think you would care about the beauty of the scenery if you had to toil eighteen hours out of twenty-four year in and out? Do you think if you were compelled to cook, and clean, and wash and iron, and churn, and cut and make and mend, to feed calves and pigs and chickens, to nurse the ill by night and day and rear children—work, work till your brain reeled and your aching limbs refused to go, that you would be likely to look with rapture upon the beauty of a sunrise that heralded another day of torture—a day you had already begun?

"With hungry and impatient men to furnish with a dinner, what does it matter to me that the forest is cool and restful and ferny? Hurry as I may there is no time for me to go to yonder willow-shaded brook to rest. Once I loved beauty wherever found; I loved poetry and art; I had my ambitions, and dreamed of a beautiful future; but all my hopes have been crushed, and there is nothing left to me but work and misery. You say that I have no soul—souls are not of much account around here, especially women's souls; but if there is another life and it is not different from this I want nothing of it."

While the woman was speaking, Mrs. Austin stepped out of her carriage and slowly approached her and now lay her hand gently upon the woman's arm. "You poor soul," she said in a low, soothing tone.

The woman turned abruptly and looked at the speaker. At sight of the pure, kind face and wistful eyes looking so pleadingly at her, her countenance softened and her eyes lost their wildness. The pompous man and fashionable woman were whirled swiftly away by the sleek black horse. Mrs. Austin held the woman's arm in a gentle grasp as she said tenderly, "You will find the life beyond death very different from your present life; all the things your soul has yearned for here you will find there—there all your hopes, dreams and ambitions will be realized. What sort of seed you have been sowing all these weary years, my friend?"

The woman burst into tears but almost instantly controlled herself. "I have tried to sow no evil seed," she said, "but how can anyone who is little more than a machine wound up to do a certain amount of work in a given time, think much about goodness? I have to have my mind upon my work and think and plan or I could not do half I have to do."

"I know," said Mrs. Austin pityingly, "and when you do stop you sleep the sleep that follows exhaustion. I know what that is from hard experience. The tortured flesh holds the spirit down but it is there waiting for a chance to assert itself."

The woman shook her head sadly: "I wish I could know it. I could endure this life so much better, I am not sure but I might be happy in it if I could only know that there is a life beyond the grave where I can find my mother and my little ones, where I can get rested just for once and have and enjoy some of the love and peace and beauty I have so hungered for here."

"But, my dear woman, there is just such a life ahead of you, indeed there is," said Mrs. Austin earnestly.

Again the woman shook her head. "I used to think so," she answered sadly, "but some way I have lost all faith in a future life, in the Bible, in God—everything that I was taught to believe in."

Just then two men came down the path leading to the road. One of them led a handsome brown colt by a halter. As the three passed the two women the colt looked around and whinnied softly. A look of pain went over the thin, tired face of the woman and a hard, set look came into her eyes. For a moment she turned her face away from the road, then in a voice that was almost harsh she said: "You saw that colt? Well, I raised him with my own hands. When its mother died my husband said that if I would rear the colt I might have it for my own, and I, like the fool I am, believed him—after all I have been through with, too," she added bitterly, "and now he has sold it to go to a place where he knows the poor creature will be abused, and I being only a woman, must bear it—as I bear everything else. Everything that I love or that loves me is taken from me, and I work on—and who cares?"

GENESIS OF CHRISTIANITY.

Startling Historical Facts Concerning Its Origin.

Not until about a year ago was I aware of the fact that the first Roman emperor, Augustus Caesar, whose reign was from 31 B. C. to A. D. 14, was worshiped throughout the empire as "Divus Filius," the Son of God; that this worship was not a mere lip-service, but of one "who was believed to be supernatural, omniscient, all-powerful, and beneficent, the reincarnation of the wife-virgin Maia; the god whose coming was foretold by the Cumaean Sybil; whose sway was to extend over all the earth; whose conception and birth were both miraculous, and whose advent was to usher in the Golden Age of Peace and Plenty, and to banish sin forever."

So says Del Mar in his recent book on "The Worship of Augustus," and he establishes the fact incontrovertibly. It was a worship "with bell, book, candle, steeple, frankincense, rosary, cross, mitre, temple, priesthood, benefices, and ritual; in short with all the outward marks of superstition, credulity, piety and devotion." For further extracts from the book, see article in The Progressive Thinker, of Oct. 10, 1903, headed "Historical Facts, Concerning the Deification of Roman Emperors."

Catholicism audaciously asserts that the Apostle Peter was bishop of Rome during the last twenty-five years of his life. The Latin Vulgate New Testament, first published at Rheims in 1852, "cum superiorum permissu," contains at the end of the Book of Acts a chronological "Table of Peter," followed by a "Table of Paul." The first-named table under the date of the second year of Claudius, tells us this:

"Having founded the church of Rome and planted his apostolicical seat there, afterward absent from the city, either expelled thence with other Jews (Cornelius Tacitus in Claudio) or, rather, according to the office of his apostleship, leaving it for a time, he visited other churches, and came to Jerusalem again, using, both in his absence and presence, Linus and Cletus for his coadjutors."

The table concludes with the crucifixion of Peter at Rome in the fourteenth year of Nero.

In regard to Paul the next table tells us that he came to Rome in the second year of Nero, that he remained in prison two years, after which he preached in sundry countries of the west, and that "he was beheaded at Rome the same day that Peter was crucified."

Protestants deny that Peter was ever at Rome, but they are bound to believe that Paul came to that city in the reign of Nero, because the book of Acts records his arrival there in bonds. But the presence of Peter in Rome when Paul arrived, or indeed at any time during Paul's alleged sojourn, was quite impossible if the last chapter of Acts is to be credited, which tells us that Paul called together the chief Jews, and that when assembled they desired to hear him "concerning this sect," of which they said, "It is known to us that it is gainsaid everywhere." So reads the Vulgate, and King James' version is substantially the same, but the Peshito or ancient Syriac New Testament reads, "For this doctrine, we know, is not received by anyone."

Accepting, however, the Vulgate version, how could the Apostle Peter have been preaching in Rome fourteen years, off and on, when Paul arrived? And, if Peter happened to be absent, did he not leave "Linus and Cletus for his coadjutors?"

But it is needless to speculate on this question. The fact that the worship of Augustus was all-prevalent throughout the empire precludes the possibility of the introduction of the worship of another personage, especially of a despised Jew, and at a time when the Jews had been expelled from Rome by the Emperor Claudius.

Incidentally, I note the date of the crucifixion of Peter and beheading of Paul, as given in the two tables above mentioned:

Neronis	Nat. Dom.	Ascen.
14	70	37

That is to say, in the fourteenth year of Nero, Anno Domini 70, and the thirty-seventh year of the ascension of Jesus. Standard authorities end the reign of Nero A. D. 68, and the Romish church is the only authority for dating the ascension A. D. 34, as is these tables.

Thanks to "Nummus" who called attention to Del Mar's book, which, though not directed against Christianity, nevertheless makes it evident that the worship of Jesus could not have originated in the first century. And pardon me for repeating once more the declaration of "Nummus" that "Christianity is merely the idolatry of Augustus, slightly modified, altered in name and bleached by time. Put aside its fraudulent literature, and it has not a leg to stand upon; not a single monument, temple, tombstone or coin; nothing but names, words, and the grossest forgery, the most sedulous and shameful imposture ever fiddled upon the credulity of man."

The Arabian story of the Masich (healer), which parallels closely that of the gospel Jesus article in The Progressive Thinker Dec. 13, headed "Isa the Prophet and Jesus the God"), may contain a nucleus of historic truth, inasmuch as Palestine was hardly included in the Roman empire in the reign of Herod the Great or of his immediate successors. That story is doubtless the literary basis of the numerous gospels fabricated by the cloistered monks after the revival of learning. WM. HENRY BURR.

THE GREAT MYSTERY OF SPIRIT FORMS

NUMBER FOUR.

A few philosophers in America and Europe are aware that in 1901, I published, for the first time in the history of philosophy, a brief outline of some of the principles of Hunger.

Obviously, the passion is transmitted from parent to child through the germ cells of conception.

Hunger is both an hereditary and acquired choice of affinities of nutrition, viz., for self-evolution.

Its laws imply an hereditary capacity for a self-reconstruction of the self.

I have defined Life as the involution, dissolution and evolution of forms by laws of passion.

Hunger is the first of these laws.

On its lowest plane, it is seen to be the principle causing the protozoa to digest and secrete.

On its highest, its laws influence the purest Spiritualism, and its philosophy.

Hunger therefore always implies some form of consciousness of choice. It is not mere physical attraction, i. e., as of a magnet for filings. Or chemical affinity, i. e., as of H for O.

Through its reconstructive laws my body has been evolved from the lowliest forms of the protozoa.

Hunger, and nutrition, are, as a builder to his bricks; a shoemaker to his leather, a tailor to his cloth, a dressmaker to her silk, a watchmaker to his metals.

My body and soul owe their existence to the laws of Hunger. The existence of nutrition has no meaning when it is divorced from its relations to the constructive, and reconstructive laws of Hunger; which get, keep, change, and reconstruct nutrition into blood and nerve cells.

Thus through the laws of Hunger, my Ego, Self, Mind, or Soul gains its first victory over matter; by overcoming the physical and chemical inertias of nutrition, and evolving them into vital forms, forces and motions.

The evolution of human knowledge ultimately depends on these laws

To get nutrition implies touch.

This makes sense images possible; and, out of which grow the identities of the inferior concepts of the subsequently evolved Intellect.

On the side of the evolution of the physiological "matter" of the brain (which evolution is performed by the laws of Hunger) it is obvious, that the brain (as the organ of human knowledge) depends for its existence upon the evolution of blood; blood depends for its existence upon the evolution of nutrition; and the evolution of nutrition, into blood, depends upon the creative laws of Hunger.

On the side of Touch, the laws of Hunger are mental.

On the side of nutrition, they are vital.

Out of these two laws are evolved the body and the soul of man, viz., out of the laws of passions, and senses.

The laws of Hunger which get, keep, and reconstruct, physical and chemical inertias into nerves, and nerve forces, imply the operation of self-creative powers, which are unwearyingly concerned in the evolution of forms; the evolution of forces; and the evolution of motions.

Therefore; the evolution of my Self, Ego, or Soul is revealed in this principle, viz., that these self-created forms, forces, and motions (of which cells, nerve-forces, and circulation are types) continue (after their secondary creation) to assist in creating a still higher series of forms, forces, and motions; of which, mental-images of sight and hearing; forces of strictly mental attraction; and the motion of telepathic concepts, and apparitions, are types.

Thus; as an illustration of a phase of hallucinatory Spiritualism—as distinguished from real Spiritualism—visions of spirits may be made to appear by abnormal quantities of blood acting on the complex structure of the retina, the optic nerve tract and the brain cortex.

Reduce the quantities of forces, and motions, i. e., the size, or volume of the streams of blood flowing into these portions of the brain; and you can reduce the color, number, and forms, of the spirits.

Nicolai, in a paper read to the Royal Society of Berlin, describes the disappearance of spirits, through the reduction of the volume of blood from his brain, by leeches; and the demands of digestion.

The bleeding by leeches began about eleven o'clock in the forenoon.

"I was," he writes, "alone with the surgeon during the operation. The room swarmed with human forms of every description; which crowded fast on one another. This continued till half-past four o'clock. The exact time when digestion commences. I then observed that the figures began to move more slowly. Soon afterwards the colors became gradually paler. Every seven minutes they lost more and more of their intensity without any alteration in the distinct figure of the apparitions. At about half-past six o'clock all the figures were entirely white, and moved very little. Yet the forms appeared perfectly distinct. By degrees they became visibly less plain. Without decreasing in number, as had formerly been the case, the figures did not move off. Neither did they vanish, which also had usually happened on other occasions. In this instance they dissolved immediately into air. Of some, even the whole pieces remained for a length of time; which also by degrees were lost to the eye. At about eight o'clock there did not remain a vestige of any of them. And I have never since experienced any appearance of the same kind."

My explanation of the causes of the final disappearance of Nicolai's hallucinatory spirits is as follows:

The circulatory forms, forces, and motions, ceased to act, first, on those complex parts of the retina, and optic nerve, essential, first, to the actual rates of motion (or time) at which the spirits moved; consequently, the spirits, at first, began to move more slowly.

Secondly; and in order, they ceased to act on those cerebral parts essential to the visual creation of space; i, e., color; as a result, the spirits began to look paler.

Third; the circulatory forms, forces, and motions, ceased to act on those cerebral parts essential to the development of geometrical outlines, figures, shapes, curves, and angles; as a consequence, the lines, angles, and curves, constituting the figures of the spirits, immediately dissolved.

But these facts have another side.

As the reduction of the forms, forces, and motions (circulation) can reduce the laws of space, and time, governing the forms, forces, and motions of mental-images; so, on the other hand, an increase of these same forms, forces, and motions (circulation) modifies, and often increases the number, variety, persistency of these mental forms, forces, and motions

"Every German word and phrase deserted my recollection," said Sir H. Holland. "It was not until I had taken food and wine * * that I regained them again."

Opium, by modifying the forms, forces and motions of the circulation causes the mental forms, mental forces, and mental images and motions of the past to re-appear.

"Sometimes," wrote De Quincey, "I seemed to have lived for seventy or a hundred years in one night." That is, the number of mental forms were increased; because, the actual rate of motion, or time, at which scenes moved, increased.

In fever, the rapidity of the circulation, is, other things equal, the cause of the increase of memory, i. e., the force and motion of the blood is increased.

In a personal experience with haschish, I found the external notion of time to be greatly modified. This was because there were so many more images crowded into the minutes.

Other things equal, it is the modification of the form of the force i. e., the blood; in addition to the change in the rates of its motion, viz., time; which, modifying the impressions on the optic tract, causes visual images to appear in such altered relations to the senses.

Memory is therefore based on the forms and forces related to Hunger; and upon the varying rates of the motion of these forms and forces in their relation to the nerves.

An army officer, quoted by Ribot, was thrown from his horse, striking his skull. For five hours he loses all memory, though conscious of everything else. The return of the mental images to his memory, ultimately depended upon the normal motion of the force of the blood.

"Six hours after the accident the pulse begins to rise. The patient takes cognizance of the reply made so many times, 'You fell from your horse!' Eight hours after the accident, the pulse is still rising. The patient remembers to have seen me once before. Two and a half hours later, the pulse is normal. The patent no longer forgets what is said to him. He remembers distinctly the injury."

The temporary destruction of the officer's memory was obviously due to the violent alterations in the motions of the force of the blood in his brain, when he fell. By a different method, yet the same principle, memory is finally destroyed by the terrible changes in the motions of the force of the blood, in apoplectics.

When the motions of this force acts irregularly on the complex part of the retina, the sense of color becomes deranged; and the images of the memory become inextricably confused with those of perverted sensation.

Dr. Weiss gives the case of a sailor, a victim to psychic epilepsy. "The sailor" exaggerated the size of objects and distances, and was color blind. He called all dark colors dark blue and bright colors bright blue. Black was complete dark blue. White, strong light blue. As usual, he passed out of this state. Forgetting everything he had done in it. On another occasion he saw a black figure standing before him, and thought he was close by the sea, although, as was next day ascertained, he was three thousand paces from the shore.

Of course, certain conditions of weak health—not all—imply weaker rates of motion of the force; as in the case of a member of the medical profession, referred to by Dr. Ireland. This weakening of the rates, of the motion, of the force, of the blood, on the optic track, causes objects to appear smaller and weaker. This principle I explained in the case of Nicolai. To prove it, (by an inverse method) by turning the head upside down (so as to increase the rate of the motion of the force of the blood on the optic nerve) I have found that the colors of a landscape will appear more clear, deep, and brilliant. Had the blood been drawn from my brain, by the two methods of leeches, and digestion, the colors would have looked paler.

Taking all of these cases together, I note that the lowly passion of creative Hunger, whose laws get, change, keep, reproduce and recreate the forms of nutrition into blood (thereby proving the creative victories of Life, over the physical inertia of "matter") also triumphantly evolves a new subjective world of strictly mental forms, forces, and motions; and which is ruled absolutely by its own law of mental space, viz., coexistences and sizes of mental images; and of mental time, viz., successions and durations of the same.

This is the world with which subjective—not objective—Spiritualism; and its philosophy has to deal.

The sun, moon, stars, and objects of the earth, which act from outside of our bodies, in, and on our organs of sense, furnish us with the laws of physical space and physical time.

This is the world of objective Spiritualism.

Thus; there are four grand classes of self-created forms, forces and motions, necessary to be self-evolved, as a condition to the self-evolution of universal intelligence, sympathy, and memory. And the work of this self-evolution—other things equal—depends on the senses as the servants of those primary laws of Hunger, which get, change, keep, reproduce, and re-create, the forms of "matter."

1. The first class means the self-evolution of the more solid, structural forms, viz., the bones.

2. The second class means the self-evolution of moving structural forms, viz. ,muscles, nerves, blood.

3. The third class involves the self-evolution of imponderable moving forces and forms, viz., nervous force, cerebral electricity, coenaesthesia; as the basis for the telepathing of concepts.

4. The fourth class implies the self-evolution of mental forms, viz., sense-images, and concepts; which—through the senses—are obtained, changed, kept, reproduced, and adjusted in universal relations, by the laws of the passions, i. e., Hunger, Love, Anger, Ambition, Fear, Hope, Sublimity and Compassion, Envy and Jealousy, and Sex, and Wonder.

The physical time necessary for me to see an object of physical light is from $".20 to 0".22.

The mental time, necessary for me to see a mental object, according to a reflex act of consciousness (Exner) is from 0".0662 to 0".0578.

Therefore; if the spirit which Job saw passing before his face had moved through space, at a rate swifter than between 0".20 and 0".22, the sage would not have been able to have physically discerned it.

Paradoxical as it may sound, Job's memory of the passing of the spirit before his face, and his general memory, had its seat in the laws of his passions; not merely in his senses.

Hence, the law of Mental Time which governs Memory, governs the laws of the Passions.

Introspection and personal experience has taught me, that the laws of my own passions, place (before my own consciousness) the classes of their own special, remembered sense-images, with incredible velocity.

Assume the law of Time to be 0".578 for a remembered-image of passion; and 0".22, the Time necessary for a new physical sensation to interest me; and the differences in the velocities of the successions of the shapes, which go to make up the differences in the successions and durations of Mental and Physical Time, are at once apparent.

The laws of my Hunger, which get, keep, change, reproduce, and evolve forms, into nerve cells, could not operate unless conditioned upon very complex laws of memory.

The weakness of the old philosophies, and the intellectualists, has consisted in the fact, that they have entirely overlooked these laws of the memories of the passions; and have attributed the origin and memory of concepts, and images, wholly to the operations of the senses.

But each passion has its laws of memory; and its law of reflex time.

Hence persons predict and infer consequences far more promptly, from the concepts connected with the laws of their own Hunger, Suspicion, Love, Jealousy, Sex, Avarice, Compassion, Shame, Fear, Anger, and Ambition; than from the passing, physical images of their Sight, Hearing, Touch, Smell, and Taste

And; this is why hallucinations of deep-seated feelings of passion, are always more enduring than hallucinations of the senses; because the latter (in the majority of cases) have their origin in the laws governing the former class.

Shame keeps persons from admitting the existence of emotional states; the deepest memories are never told.

This is why the psychologist is thrown off the track by his subject.

The desire to be universally approved, being nearly always a stronger motive in women, and men, than the love of truth.

Only martyrs, scientists and philosophers die for the truth.

No one has ever lived, who has told all the moral and psychological secrets which they know about themselves.

Hence, the psychologist is always working in the dark in the majority of his cases SALVARONA.

The Light Among the Hills.

A Charming Narrative.

Most Beautifully Suggestive is "The Light Among the Hills," by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt. It is a narrative founded on facts alone, and every Spiritualist should read it.

"Some time after this I was awakened in the night by a voice speaking my name. I sat up in bed wide awake and listened. I heard the ticking of the clock and from an adjoining room the savy breathing of the other two members of my family. I felt a strong impression that some one was standing near my bed wanting to speak to me. A soft light filled the room and while I could in no way account for it I was not in the least frightened. I lay down and waited. Soon a voice began speaking—the same voice that had spoken to me before—a voice now thrilling with strength and tenderness. It spake slowly and distinctly and every word entered my brain and thrilled my inner being with a strong conviction of the truth spoken."

Mrs. Austin took from a drawer in the table by which she was sitting, a bundle of papers and choosing one she said: "Now listen to the words the voice spake to me:

"'Look not on yonder snowclad mound,
For she a home of light has found.
Beyond the turmoil you call life,
Beyond its wretchedness and strife,
Her soul from earth and flesh made free
Now waits with joy to welcome thee.
No ancient church nor blood-stained creed
I urge on thee in this thy need;
Find in thyself a power divine
And know unending life is thine.'"

"You see there is nothing mystical or uncertain about that. It is right to the point and it brought me joy and light—like the pure soft light of morning that ushers in a glorious day.

"It is not my purpose to give you a history of the months that elapsed between that time and the time I lost my husband, but I will say that they were bright with hope. I learned not only that there is a life beyond death—a continuation of our present existence—but that it will be just what I myself make it; that if I want to find a heaven hereafter I must do my best to make a heaven here—now. Many times that voice spake to me words of warning, of counsel and of comfort. Many that I had loved and lost came and made themselves known to me. Yes, the veil was rent between me and the spirit world, and my entire being thrilled with renewed life and hope. I began to feel that I had a work to do, and began to prepare myself for it by trying each day to make the most and best of myself and my opportunities.

"'Seek not afar for the things that lie within your reach. Do not expect or ask a higher power to do for you what it is possible for you to do for yourself,' said my spirit instructor. Do your best and the best will come to you. Be kind to every living creature. Entertain not an unkind or evil thought for one moment. Make yourself pure, and true and noble. Excuse nothing in yourself that you would not excuse in another. Let alone other people's failings except to avoid them yourself. Learn to use your trials, misfortunes and disappointments as stepping-stones to lift you higher. Get all the good you can out of everything, and let the bad alone if you cannot help to mend it in any way.'

"Such are some of the counsels I received, and as I sought for greater light I received it. I learned to look after my bodily health carefully. I grew thoughtful about choosing my food and drink. Spirituality and intemperance never go together, and a person may be intemperate in eating as well as any other way.

"Perfect cleanliness of mind and body, pure food, pure water, pure air, plenty of exercise in the sunlight and regular hours for the daily duties, all are essential to success in spiritual attainments. Pure air is of great importance in more ways than one, for only earth-bound spirits will enter a foul atmosphere—do not ever forget that truth. Spirits cannot do impossible things just because they have passed out of the flesh. No one would expect an accomplished musician to render a piece of music perfectly if the instrument given him was out of tune, but many persons expect the communicating spirits will do perfect work through a very imperfect medium. We do not want to throw to the winds our judgment and good sense just because we are dealing with spiritual matters, for there is no time when it is needed any more.

"The absurd idea that because a man is dead he knows everything seems to have taken a firm hold in the mind of the average person. The average person is spiritually lazy; he says he wants the truth, but he is not willing to work for it or even think deeply. Phenomena is of no use, only to convince those who would not be convinced otherwise. It is to the truth seeker what the first reader is to the child, and one ought to very soon progress beyond seeking for it.

A person developing spiritually will soon outgrow that childish love of the marvelous which constantly demands something wonderful. What we persistently seek for we find, therefore it is important that we aim high, maintain high ideals and seek for the highest and noblest attainments."

Then came a quick knock upon the door and Mrs. Austin arose and admitted a stranger, a small woman with keen black eyes. She took in the occupants of the room with a swift searching glance, and turning to Mrs. Austin, said: "Are you Mrs. Austin, the medium?"

"Yes."

"Well, I am a medium also, a a little while ago a spirit came to me and said that she had been to you the last two evenings but your mind was so fully occupied with your own affairs that she could not get your attention. She gave me this message for you, and asked me to bring it to you, saying that you alone could do the work she wants done."

The woman gave Mrs. Austin a folded slip of paper, and with a courteous "good evening," withdrew. Mrs. Austin unfolded the paper and read these words: "Go to the town of Leeden tomorrow by the hill road and your duty will be made clear to you. (Signed) Mandane Estrey."

"What does it mean?" asked Mrs. Grey and Martha in concert.

"I do not know," replied their friend, "but as we do not have to work to-morrow we shall find out."

The next day Mrs. Austin and Mrs. Grey and Martha started for the town specified in the message received the night before. The road led between desolate-looking pasture lands interspersed by groves of sugar maples and somber spruces. Here and there the traveler could look away beneath the spreading boughs into the cool shadowy depths where were beds of soft green moss, where graceful feathery ferns drooped over little streams that with many a splash and tumble plunged into larger streams. Sometimes the road ran beside half-cultivated fields. These farms were usually rough and stony and looked as if nature offered a stern resistance to man's efforts to wring from her a livelihood. The three women enjoyed their drive and saw beauty everywhere as only real nature lovers can. From tangled bushes, ruined fences, and broken and gnarled tree tops birds were flitting and singing joyously. The air was fragrant with the odor of the growing ferns, grasses and briars, and the roadsides were brightened by yellow dandelions and blue violets. The swamps with their pools of dark water where the cat-tails were growing, where the air was filled with the spicy breath of peppermint and wild grape, where slender willow boughs swung their golden "pussies" in the glorious sunlight—all called for their share of enthusiastic admiration.

At last they came out upon a plain at the top of a high hill. The view was magnificent. Hill rose beyond hill until the blue of the farther hills mingled with the soft blue of the sky. The nearer hills were clothed with verdure from bottom to top save where some great gray rock reared above the surface of the soil. The dark robes of the spruces were relieved by dashes of golden green showing where the aspens grew, and here and there a paper birch with its long arms spread outward flashed a gleam of silvery whiteness upon the scene. A few rods ahead stood an old weather-beaten house. Smoke curling out of the big square chimney showed that the house was inhabited. A little farther back from the road stood a large new barn gay in its coat of red paint. In front of the house a stream of crystal water running through a rough bark spout fell into a trough hollowed out of a section of a large log. Near the trough stood a woman feeding some grain out of a tin dish to some ducks and chickens.

"I will drive up and give the horse some water," said Mrs. Austin, but before she had reached the trough a smart carriage drawn by a handsome black horse dashed up and a well-dressed and pompous looking man sprang out and proceeded to uncheck the thirsty horse. In the carriage sat a stylishly dressed woman who looked about her curiously. As Mrs. Austin and her companions drove up they heard the man by the horse exclaim, "What magnificent scenery!" and with a lordly wave of his hand he indicated the surrounding country.

"Yes," said his companion, "it is perfectly lovely, Surely, madame," she said, addressing the bent figure holding the dish of grain, "you must appreciate the delicate coloring and wild beauty of your magnificent hills."

The bent figure straightened. She was a woman a little past forty, perhaps, but she looked much older. Her hair which was drawn tightly back into a small knot at the back of her shapely head, was plentifully streaked with gray, her eyes wore a sad, hopeless expression, and her thin, pale face was lined with care and suffering, and her whole aspect and attitude was dejected and pitiful. For an instant she looked at the handsome carriage and the fashionably dressed woman who had spoken to her, and then she said with cold indifference, "I suppose it is all very fine, but it is not food nor clothing."

"That is always the way with such people," said the woman in the carriage with a tone of contempt; "they never have eyes for the beauty of the landscape or the glory of the sunset; all such people think about is food and shelter just like their cattle—they have no souls."

These words produced a powerful effect upon the woman by the trough. Her figure grew erect and rigid, her toil-hardened hands twitched nervously around the dish she held, and her sad, wistful eyes darkened and gleamed with a wild light, as in a low intense tone she said: "Much such as you know about my desires and feelings! How much do you think you would care about the beauty of the scenery if you had to toil eighteen hours out of twenty-four year in and out? Do you think if you were compelled to cook, and clean, and wash and iron, and churn, and cut and make and mend, to feed calves and pigs and chickens, to nurse the ill by night and day and rear children—work, work till your brain reeled and your aching limbs refused to go, that you would be likely to look with rapture upon the beauty of a sunrise that heralded another day of torture—a day you had already begun?

"With hungry and impatient men to furnish with a dinner, what does it matter to me that the forest is cool and restful and ferny? Hurry as I may there is no time for me to go to yonder willow-shaded brook to rest. Once I loved beauty wherever found; I loved poetry and art; I had my ambitions, and dreamed of a beautiful future; but all my hopes have been crushed, and there is nothing left to me but work and misery. You say that I have no soul—souls are not of much account around here, especially women's souls; but if there is another life and it is not different from this I want nothing of it."

While the woman was speaking, Mrs. Austin stepped out of her carriage and slowly approached her and now lay her hand gently upon the woman's arm. "You poor soul," she said in a low, soothing tone.

The woman turned abruptly and looked at the speaker. At sight of the pure, kind face and wistful eyes looking so pleadingly at her, her countenance softened and her eyes lost their wildness. The pompous man and fashionable woman were whirled swiftly away by the sleek black horse. Mrs. Austin held the woman's arm in a gentle grasp as she said tenderly, "You will find the life beyond death very different from your present life; all the things your soul has yearned for here you will find there—there all your hopes, dreams and ambitions will be realized. What sort of seed you have been sowing all these weary years, my friend?"

The woman burst into tears but almost instantly controlled herself. "I have tried to sow no evil seed," she said, "but how can anyone who is little more than a machine wound up to do a certain amount of work in a given time, think much about goodness? I have to have my mind upon my work and think and plan or I could not do half I have to do."

"I know," said Mrs. Austin pityingly, "and when you do stop you sleep the sleep that follows exhaustion. I know what that is from hard experience. The tortured flesh holds the spirit down but it is there waiting for a chance to assert itself."

The woman shook her head sadly: "I wish I could know it. I could endure this life so much better, I am not sure but I might be happy in it if I could only know that there is a life beyond the grave where I can find my mother and my little ones, where I can get rested just for once and have and enjoy some of the love and peace and beauty I have so hungered for here."

"But, my dear woman, there is just such a life ahead of you, indeed there is," said Mrs. Austin earnestly.

Again the woman shook her head. "I used to think so," she answered sadly, "but some way I have lost all faith in a future life, in the Bible, in God—everything that I was taught to believe in."

Just then two men came down the path leading to the road. One of them led a handsome brown colt by a halter. As the three passed the two women the colt looked around and whinnied softly. A look of pain went over the thin, tired face of the woman and a hard, set look came into her eyes. For a moment she turned her face away from the road, then in a voice that was almost harsh she said: "You saw that colt? Well, I raised him with my own hands. When its mother died my husband said that if I would rear the colt I might have it for my own, and I, like the fool I am, believed him—after all I have been through with, too," she added bitterly, "and now he has sold it to go to a place where he knows the poor creature will be abused, and I being only a woman, must bear it—as I bear everything else. Everything that I love or that loves me is taken from me, and I work on—and who cares?"

THE IROQUOIS THEATRE TRAGEDY

"Oh! see the calcium light," they said,
They looked, and then "six hundred dead."

A Simoon wind and fiery dust—
And then the awful holocaust.

From hell a scorching sheet of flame—
And then charred bodies without name.

"Give dividends," the Shylocks cried,
And then six hundred victims died.

But Justice stands with balanced sword
And waits the inevitable word.

Tho' heaven falls and suns grow dim,
Stern Justice meted out by Him

Who rules the stars—shall never cease
Until on earth the reign of Peace.

LIFE IS GOOD.

They come, they pass, with snow-soft feet,
And deathless youth illumes their eyes;
Alike to them are chaff and wheat,
Alike the foolish and the wise,
They bring the wound, they bring the balm,
They light our smiles, they dry our tears;
Careless of death or life, the calm
Servants of time, the patient years.

The winds that rend and strew the rose
Dissolve the sweetness through the air;
This wind of time that beats and blows,
Leaves all the past still fragrant-fair.
Though hopes may fail and hearts may break,
And fruitless all the striving be,
One golden gift is left to make
Man's bliss, consoling memory.

Hail and farewell, farewell and hail!
The going and the coming guest.
Welcome to daybreak's shining sail,
As to the night beyond the west!
The years may come, the years may go,
And bring the sad or merry mood;
Merry or sad, one thing we know
That life is good, ah, life is good!

GENESIS OF CHRISTIANITY.

Startling Historical Facts Concerning its Origin.

Not until about a year ago was I aware of the fact that the first Roman emperor, Augustus Caesar, whose reign was from 31 B. C. to A. D. 14, was worshiped throughout the empire as "Divus Filius," the Son of God; that this worship was not a mere lip-service, but of one "who was believed to be supernatural, omniscient, all-powerful, and beneficent, the reincarnation of the wife-virgin Maia; the god whose coming was foretold by the Cumaean Sybil; whose sway was to extend over all the earth; whose conception and birth were both miraculous, and whose advent was to usher in the Golden Age of Peace and Plenty, and to banish sin forever."

So says Del Mar in his recent book on "The Worship of Augustus," and he establishes the fact incontrovertibly. It was a worship "with bell, book, candle, steeple, frankincense, rosary, cross, mitre, temple, priesthood, benefices, and ritual; in short with all the outward marks of superstition, credulity, piety and devotion." For further extracts from the book, see article in The Progressive Thinker, of Oct. 10, 1903, headed "Historical Facts, Concerning the Deification of Roman Emperors."

Catholicism audaciously asserts that the Apostle Peter was bishop of Rome during the last twenty-five years of his life. The Latin Vulgate New Testament, first published at Rheims in 1852, "cum superiorum permissu," contains at the end of the Book of Acts a chronological "Table of Peter," followed by a "Table of Paul." The first-named table under the date of the second year of Claudius, tells us this:

"Having founded the church of Rome and planted his apostolical seat there, afterward absent from the city, either expelled thence with other Jews (Cornelius Tacitus in Claudio) or, rather, according to the office of his apostleship, leaving it for a time, he visited other churches, and came to Jerusalem again, using, both in his absence and presence, Linus and Cletus for his coadjutors."

The table concludes with the crucifixion of Peter at Rome in the fourteenth year of Nero.

In regard to Paul the next table tells us that he came to Rome in the second year of Nero, that he remained in prison two years, after which he preached in sundry countries of the west, and that "he was beheaded at Rome the same day that Peter was crucified."

Protestants deny that Peter was ever at Rome, but they are bound to believe that Paul came to that city in the reign of Nero, because the book of Acts records his arrival there in bonds. But the presence of Peter in Rome when Paul arrived, or indeed at any time during Paul's alleged sojourn, was quite impossible if the last chapter of Acts is to be credited, which tells us that Paul called together the chief Jews, and that when assembled they desired to hear him "concerning this sect," of which they said, "It is known to us that it is gainsaid everywhere." So reads the Vulgate, and King James' version is substantially the same, but the Peshito or ancient Syriac New Testament reads, "For this doctrine, we know, is not received by anyone."

Accepting, however, the Vulgate version, how could the Apostle Peter have been preaching in Rome fourteen years, off and on, when Paul arrived? And, if Peter happened to be absent, did he not leave "Linus and Cletus for his coadjutors?"

But it is needless to speculate on this question. The fact that the worship of Augustus was all-prevalent throughout the empire precludes the possibility of the introduction of the worship of another personage, especially of a despised Jew, and at a time when the Jews had been expelled from Rome by the Emperor Claudius.

Incidentally, I note the date of the crucifixion of Peter and beheading of Paul, as given in the two tables above mentioned:

Neronis	Nat. Dom.	Ascen.
14	70	37

That is to say, in the fourteenth year of Nero, Anno Domini 70, and the thirty-seventh year of the ascension of Jesus. Standard authorities end the reign of Nero A. D. 68, and the Romish church is the only authority for dating the ascension A. D. 34, as is these tables.

Thanks to "Nummus" who called attention to Del Mar's book, which, though not directed against Christianity, nevertheless makes it evident that the worship of Jesus could not have originated in the first century. And pardon me for repeating once more the declaration of "Nummus" that "Christianity is merely the idolatry of Augustus, slightly modified, altered in name and bleached by time. Put aside its fraudulent literature, and it has not a leg to stand upon; not a single monument, temple, tombstone or coin; nothing but names, words, air, the grossest forgery, the most stupendous and shameful imposture ever saddled upon the credulity of man."

The Arabian story of Isa the Masich (healer), which parallels so closely that of the gospel Jesus (see article in The Progressive Thinker of Dec. 13, headed "Isa the Prophet and Jesus the God"), may contain a nucleus of historic truth, inasmuch as Palestine was hardly included in the Roman empire in the reign of Herod the Great or of his immediate successors. That story is doubtless the literary basis of the numerous gospels fabricated by the cloistered monks after the revival of learning. WM. HENRY BURR.

Subjective and Independent Mediumship—

An Essay by Mr. W. J. Colville.

The controversy still continuing concerning mediumship in all its varied phases may easily be turned to excellent account if, instead of merely disputing over rival theories, all who are at present engaged in the dispute turn their attention to practical experiences. Theories may be good and useful, and they often are so, but unless supported by actual results they prove ultimately of very little value.

It is now nearly fifty-six years since the movement known as Modern Spiritualism is said to have originated and yet after all that lapse of time the same inquiries are being made and the same objections offered as were current more than half a century ago. This fact is neither surprising nor discouraging, if we approach the whole matter intelligently and dispassionately, because as one generation follows another it is but natural that similar inquiries should arise from age to age. Human nature does not seem to alter radically from period to period in its history, even though we may reasonably boast of ever-increasing average intelligence.

PHYSICAL AND PSYCHICAL SCIENCE.

Physical science is now rapidly becoming psychical, and it is seriously declared in many influential places that the famous electrical theory of matter, as recently suggested by many of the leading scientists of the modern world, has already largely revolutionized all old accepted theories of the substance which, for convenience' sake, we still continue to call matter, a word which when subjected to close analysis is found to only signify that universal mother (mater) substance out of which all differentiated objects are formed and into which, whenever they are disintegrated, they assuredly return. Though many of the greatest thinkers of the nineteenth century were far from being Spiritualists in any accepted meaning of that word, they were in most cases far from being avowed Materialists, therefore it is but fair to allow them to pass muster as Agnostics, a title which Thomas Huxley, Herbert Spencer and other singularly eminent philosophic thinkers applied to themselves by preference.

Spiritualism does not antagonize honest Agnosticism, which, when correctly defined, simply means the philosophy of ignorance concerning the ultimate nature of substance as opposed to dogmatic theology on the one hand and equally dogmatic atheism on the other, but all experienced Spiritualists rightly claim that the mass of evidence accumulated on the side of Spiritualism should not be lightly disregarded by those experimental scientists and philosophers whose own methods in their distinctive domains are closely allied to the methods pursued by those intelligent Spiritualists who have devoted much time, thought and patience to actual investigations of the mysteries of the Borderland.

SIMPLE SUBJECTIVE OR PASSIVE MEDIUMSHIP.

SIMPLY SUBJECTIVE OR PASSIVE MEDIUMSHIP MUST IN THE VERY NATURE OF THINGS BE LARGELY UNSATISFACTORY TO MEDIUMS THEMSELVES, BECAUSE A CONDITION OF UNCONSCIOUS ENTRANCEMENT CANNOT FURNISH TO THE ENTRANCED SUBJECT ANY SATISFYING EVIDENCE OF SPIRIT COMMUNION, OR INDEED OF ANYTHING BEYOND THE BARE FACT THAT ONE HAS BEEN FOR A CERTAIN TIME ASLEEP OR IN A COMATOSE CONDITION.

It is, therefore, not from any such phase of mediumship that we can reasonably hope to gather at first hand any information which will prove of value as relating to the law of psychic interaction between inhabitants of earth in fleshly bodies and their friends who are already dismantled of their clay. But though the medium personally, who is a subject of unconscious trance, may be afforded no definite information concerning spirit life, it has often happened that other persons, many of them highly intelligent and diligent inquirers, have received much valuable light through the instrumentality of deeply entranced sensitives, and though it may be reasonably admitted that there are higher phases of mediumship to be cultivated and enjoyed, we have no right to overlook the very important service rendered to the cause of psychic science by trance mediumship.

THE TWO PLANES OF EXISTENCE.

Unconsciousness on one plane of existence by no means implies unconsciousness on other planes; therefore it is not usually correct to state that a medium is ever really unconscious at all in any true sense except when speaking quite relatively concerning ordinary objective consciousness alone. Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond and other illustrious sensitives who have been before the public for a long term of years, have often been heard to say that during entrancement, whilst their guides were speaking through them, they were fully conscious on some other plane of expression, so much so that their clairvoyant and telepathic experiences have sometimes proved intensely interesting and largely subject to verification.

Among particularly able and well-known public advocates of Spiritualism stood Emma Hardinge Britten, who, in her autobiography published by her sister, Mrs. Wilkinson, of Manchester, Eng., records many very instructive and entertaining episodes in her own highly romantic mediumistic career. The translator and editor of "Art Magic" and "Ghost Land" was a singularly individualized woman and one who was very unwilling to yield blindly to any influence, seen or unseen, but Mrs. Britten freely acknowledged her dependence in many ways upon unseen guides who often, according to her own and others' testimony, inspired her platform speeches, and made it possible for her to exercise remarkable clairvoyance on many occasions. This truly remarkable woman, whose name was long a household word in Spiritualistic circles everywhere, was a striking combination of the mediumistic and the independent individualistic temperament; this her various writings, lectures and conduct clearly showed. How far Mrs. Britten was simply herself and how far she was subject to extraneous guidance is somewhat difficult to decide, as she and any influences that inspired her seemed to work together in such entire agreement that it was never easy to know where one melted into the other. The same remarks will largely apply to Mrs. Richmond also, for though she is often spoken of, with her own consent, as a "trance medium," it has very rarely been observed that she and her guides entertain really opposite views on any subject, and why should they if we grant the reasonable premise that in all intelligent and desirable exercises of mediumship there is harmony between the co-operating parties?

Mrs. Britten often said that she had voluntarily "taken service" with the intelligences who guided her career and inspired her utterances, and if such was actually the case a sort of contract was entered into and both parties lived true to their agreement.

DISORDERLY PHASES OF MEDIUMSHIP.

That there are disagreeable and disorderly phases of mediumship is pretty freely admitted on all sides, but these aberrations may readily be traced to conditions with which mediumship in particular is in no way definitely or directly concerned. Lack of proper self-assertion is always a fruitful cause of harassing results, and as many naturally mediumistic people are extremely sensitive, and sensitiveness is a universally acknowledged concomitant of mediumship, it need not occasion much surprise that extremely sensitive persons should be somewhat more liable than others to nervous disturbances when they are placed in trying situations.

To condemn subjective mediumship entirely because it has its drawbacks is utterly illogical; at the same time it is often highly necessary to point the way from simple passivity, which is an entirely negative condition, to a state where individuality can be more fully and self-consciously expressed. The road out of mere passivity or negativity to full self-confidence and entire self-possession, is a gradual and progressive path, and one that can only be trod by those who are determined to master, one by one, the obstacles which all encounter on the way. The first great step is always determined concentration of thought and attention upon one object at a time to the exclusion, for the nonce, of all other interests. The five senses—sight, hearing, taste, touch and smell—need to be disciplined and controlled so that we use our sensitiveness instead of being its slave. Whoever wishes to be an "independent" sensitive instead of merely a passive medium, must gain possession of these senses to the extent of being able to see, hear, taste, touch and smell exclusively at will.

CONCENTRATION ANALYZED AND EXPLAINED.

The ordinary "sensitive" is a person who usually does possess unusually acute sensibilities in some, if not in all directions, and as we are living in a world where all scenes are not lovely, nor are all sounds harmonious, nor all odors pleasing, nor all flavors delicious, nor all textures genial, we are liable to suffer as well as to enjoy unusually much by cultivating extraordinary sensitiveness; it is, indeed, almost universally declared that pain and pleasure are in the very nature of things such close companions that proportionately as we can experience one we can feel the other also. Without attempting to dispute the correctness of that widely accepted proposition we can attempt to show a means whereby we can increase the joy of living without at the same time adding to its sorrow. Possibilities are not necessities, therefore though it will remain a fact that unusually sensitive people have greater capacity for suffering as well as for enjoyment than have their less highly organized neighbors, they can learn to so control their susceptibilities as to bring their emotional experiences very largely under their own command. In practicing self-development through determined concentration, it is necessary to select a given object for meditation and determine to keep the attention riveted at that single point as long as one desires. Merely abstract ideas do not lend themselves so readily for this purpose as do concrete objects, therefore it is usually found desirable to begin with simple exercises as, for example, resolving while in a picture gallery to gaze steadily for a stated time at and into one picture only with such completeness of absorption in that single painting as to become for the time being entirely unconscious of all beside. While you may give yourself a stated time for a definite exercise and aim to continue it thus long, you need be in no way disconcerted if you discover that you cannot at once live wholly up to your self-appointed standard; that is if you have made it at all a high one, but in practically every instance it will be found that the ease or difficulty with which exercises in concentration are attended will depend very largely indeed upon the amount of interest the concentrator takes both in the exercise itself and in the object on which attention is to be riveted.

Affection always plays a large part in all these developments, because whenever we care much for anyone or anything we find it extremely easy to concentrate on the beloved object, but when we are indifferent it is irksome to keep attention fixed.

It is quite possible to single out one particular sound out of a multitude of contemporary sounds and determine to hear that one only, and by thus determining to attune oneself to a special rate of musical vibration it will be found, ere long, that noises which were once extremely distracting are now no longer noticed even though one's hearing is constantly becoming more acute. Leech, the famous caricaturist, is said to have been driven almost to distraction by the sounds of Italian organ-grinders in London streets, an anecdote which proves that though gifted, he was not a well-balanced man; and it is recorded of Herbert Spencer that his sensitiveness to ordinary conversation in a carriage was often so extreme that he provided himself with a pair of ear clappers which completely shut out all sounds while he was driving, and he used these whenever he found his sensitiveness to sound becoming painful. Spencer certainly did right in thus protecting himself and at the same time freeing his friends who were riding with him from all embarrassment; but those who are determining to develop more than ordinary superiority to distractions in a psychic manner, do not require material contrivances to do for them what they are determining to accomplish solely by their own volition.

We frequently hear that very sensitive persons cannot attend large public gatherings of any sort without experiencing both suffering and fatigue; this is because they have not learned to govern their susceptibilities, nor are they surrounded by an organized and competent band of spiritual protectors.

Genuine sensitiveness, freed from all abnormal encumbrances, enables its possessor to discern more than can be discerned ordinarily in every way, and therefore it opens the door for clairvoyance, clairaudience, psychometry, and general clairsentience, which is the ability to apprehend much that the average human being at present knows nothing about whatever.

CLAIRVOYANCE AND CLAIRSENTIENCE.

In C. W. Leadbeater's remarkable book, "Man Visible and Invisible," the reader is informed that such extreme sensitiveness as will make a sight of the human aura easily possible, is actually within the reach of all who will seriously devote themselves to cultivating their psychic possibilities, and in his manual on Clairvoyance the same author gives several directions which have been found very useful by many students who have persistently resolved to test their efficacy; but clairvoyance, though a very pleasing and popular phase of sensitiveness, is by no means so common as that phase of clairsentience which may well be termed CLEAR FEELING, for there are multitudes of mediumistic people who feel distinctly very much that they in no way see, and this feeling is quite as important and convincing as clairvoyance, though not usually quite so phenomenal, and therefore not so attractive, in the opinion of the public at large. Here again it is highly important to discriminate between what one can feel and what one is obliged to feel, for though it is an unmistakable blessing to be able to feel acutely it is a decided bane to be compelled to sense and suffer from unpleasant unseen environments which one has seemingly no power to change and has had no hand in bringing into existence.

A very practical recipe for rising superior to the effect of disagreeable odors which may be encountered while traveling, and which the traveler may have no power to modify by any outward process, is to picture to oneself a bed of fragrant blossoms, and so concentrate upon this mentally outpictured object that through logical association of ideas attention will be entirely led away from the unpleasant odors in one's physical surroundings. Of course we do not mean to say that we ought to so benumb our susceptibilities that we should not take notice of a disagreeable odor, such as escaping gas, when for purposes of safety it would be highly necessary to take action to prevent a conflagration or asphyxiation; quite the contrary, but we shall find ourselves far more able to take needful action in any such predicament when we have learned to discipline our faculties and direct them by our will, than though we had remained continually at their mercy.

SENSITIVENESS AND MEDIUMSHIP.

Voluntary sensitiveness and independent mediumship are very close of kin, and though the latter phrase is sometimes considered slightly ambiguous it is not difficult to rationally define it as voluntary entrance into a psychic state in contradistinction to being subject to control by some extraneous operator. COMMUNION AND FELLOWSHIP are two perfectly agreeable and thoroughly intelligible words, and they suffice to express exactly what we consider to be normal or healthy relations between ourselves and others regardless of whether one or some of us are now living on earth, or some are "here" and others are in the great "hereafter."

Wm. Stead, the celebrated English journalist, says that, in many of his experiences, telepathy or mental telegraphy and spiritual mediumship have been practically inseparable, and such experiences as his are by no means uncommon or unfamiliar to students of psychic phenomena and law. Mr. Stead has often declared that he can lend his hand, or refuse the use of it as he pleases, to any one who may wish to employ it in making a communication. "Letters From Julia" he tells us were written through his hand with his full consent though he did not write them. In their production, according to Mr. Stead's positive declaration regarding their origin, there seems to have been a reasonable blending of those two phases of mediumship sometimes designated "subjective" and "independent."

DANGERS OF SUBJECTIVE MEDIUMSHIP.

The dangers attending subjective mediumship are principally bound up in the same bundle with all lack of rightful self-ownership and the distressful consequences thereof. Until people become more ready to assert themselves with righteous independence at all times, much that goes under the ugly names of obsession and insanity will doubtless have to continue; but it is absurd in the extreme to confound, as many writers do, a perfectly voluntary psychic cooperation with enforced yielding to any influence whatsoever.

Sensitive people who are chronically afraid to act themselves and are consequently always under someone else's "thumb," are too deficient in developed individuality, as yet, to be able to determine whether they will or will not allow some outside influence to work through them. What they need more than anything else is a course of training in the rightful exercise of their own will. Abnormal sensitives are usually persons who are very timid and intellectually idle; they readily, therefore, yield themselves to outside influences, and whether they are known to the world as mediums or not their careers are generally very checkered and their health is usually excessively precarious. It is sometimes the case that one of those psychic weaklings really desires to develop more positive individuality, but in 99 instances out of every average 100, such people do not desire to exert their own will and intellect as it suits their negative temperament much better to allow things to go on irresponsibly so far as they are concerned. Such people are often good-natured, kind-hearted, easy to get along with, and, when surrounded by honorable people, they often do good work in various mediumistic ways. Spiritualism is not responsible for them, for there are multitudes of such in all religious denominations and also in the ranks of passive unbelievers.

Very much subjective mediumship is simply due to temperamental adaptability, and exists quite unconsciously to its possessor who takes it as matter of course, having experienced it from infancy. Decidedly independent mediumship is a very different matter, and is usually a result of some definite desire on the part of the one who exercises it to become cognizant of psychic verities. Subjective mediumship satisfies such natures as love to take life quietly and easily on the intellectual plane, and would rather be thought for by others than do their own thinking. Independent mediumship usually accompanies a strenuous intellectual habit and comports well with a distinctly scientific trend of intellect.

THE MIDDLE GROUND DEFINED.

There is certainly a middle ground between these two extremes, and that ground is very largely taken by "inspirational" speakers and writers and all such "impressional" workers as seem not to lose consciousness while exercising their mediumship, but consciously receive stimulus and assistance from other minds. This subject, we know, is intricate and it is almost impossible in all cases to determine exactly where one phase of mediumship passes into another; it is therefore the height of unwisdom to become dogmatic on these moot questions which are rightfully topics for utterly dispassionate research and study.

To any one who is naturally mediumistic, and has been so from childhood, it seems strange to be told that all mediumship is dangerous and implies a surrender of one's own individuality to some one else, because actual experience has often entirely pointed the other way. The writer will now drop into the first person singular and relate a few personal experiences, leaving readers to theorize upon these narrations as their own intelligence and judgment may direct.

INTERESTING PERSONAL EXPERIENCES.

When I was a little child between five and six years of age I was so clairvoyant that I often was fully conscious of the presence of my mother who had passed to spirit life when I was but an infant, and not only did I see her, but information flowed into my mind simultaneously, which was often subsequently verified. I was never rendered ill or in any way nervously upset by these experiences; on the contrary, my mediumship was always clearest when I was in the best of health and temper, and I was always benefited—never injured by such experiences. Some years later when my attention was first directed to the name of Spiritualism by an announcement concerning the work of Mrs. Richmond, who was then in England, and I had the privilege of listening to one of her remarkable inspired orations, directly I left the hall in which she had officiated I expressed, mentally, the strongest possible desire that I also might be inspired as she had been, and I was taken at my word, for greatly to my own delight and to the astonishment of many people who were well acquainted with me, I suddenly developed into an inspirational speaker, but never once was I influenced in public or in private against my own desire.

During all the years that I have been before the public I have been intermittently conscious of direct individual spiritual guidance, and though I have long been a firm upholder of the idea that we contain within ourselves abilities of which we may be quite unconscious, I have never been able to see the slightest reason for discarding or repudiating mediumship so long as we find it profitable to learn from others here on earth who know certain things that we have not yet apprehended.

My experiences in telepathy, thought transference and all kindred psychic phenomena have been so closely related to what all Spiritualists agree to call mediumship, that I am firmly fixed in the realization that we are, psychically speaking, related in precisely the same way to those who have already "crossed the border" as to those who are still abiding on the surface of this terrestrial globe. My own generalizations concerning mediumship, based on my individual experiences and supported by much phenomena that I have observed in many places during my extensive travels in various countries, are about as follows:

First. The spiritual world includes the physical as the greater contains the lesser; we are therefore now and here veritable spiritual entities and can and do commune with each other very often by means of mental telegraphy, just as our friends who have dropped their fleshly raiment can and do commune with us and with each other.

Second. Spirit communion and spirit control are not identical, while the former is perfectly natural, the latter may be artificial.

Third. We should not allow ourselves to yield blindly to any alleged authority but use our own reasoning powers as far as possible in every relationship of life; by so doing we shall become increasingly able to regulate our psychic experiences at will, and to the same extent that we grow to govern our external conduct.

Fourth. As every magnet has, and must have two poles—one positive and one negative—and these two poles are equally good and necessary, so we, as human entities, are similarly endowed, and we can thus become positive and negative at will so soon as we have acquired the art of self-control. When we wish to learn or to receive we can make ourselves voluntarily receptive to a donor or a teacher, and when we desire to teach or to bestow we can with equal voluntariness render ourselves positive to our surroundings.

Concerning physical mediumship, though I have witnessed a good deal of it of various kinds and qualities, I know but little from personal experience, but from all that I have observed I am prepared to aver that substantially the same freedom of choice can be exercised by the physical as by the purely mental medium. As to necessary conditions for developing and exercising any phase of mediumship I am certain that only what is in every sense orderly and healthful is desirable, and I am further thoroughly convinced that truly reliable mediumship of an ennobling character is possible in all its phases. With the hysterical diatribe against mediumship in its entirety as a destructive process I can have no agreement whatsoever, but do most firmly adhere to the position I have always taken that we can use our own judgment and discretion in all psychic matters to a far greater degree than has been generally supposed.

THE PRICE THAT WE ALL MUST PAY.

On the thing we have, and the thing we do, and the thing that we win in the fray,
There is always a price Dame Nature sets, and the price we are bound to pay.
We may flatter ourselves in our infantile way that we're playing a confidence game,
And that in the end by cunning and stealth we'll hoodwink the dear old dame.
But ever and ever she sets it down, the price of each thing that we win,
And if it be won in the way of right or the red, red path of sin;
And ever and ever, or soon or late, though we juggle accounts by the way,
The price that is set in Nature's book is the price that we have to pay,
'Tis the price that we have to pay,
Though the fact may bring dismay;
The price that is set in Nature's book is the price that we all must pay.

The primrose path is a jolly path, but the price of its joy is writ,
And we cannot escape the grisly shape that ever is haunting it.
The wine's red glow is a goodly glow when it moveth itself aright,
And we say, "Aha! Let the good wine flow, for this is an unco' night";
And we think we are worth a million or two, though the rent has not been paid;
And we roll 'em high, and the drinks we buy till the ghost of trouble is laid;
Till the ghost of trouble is laid, dear boy—but, oh, for the head next day!
For the price that is set in Nature's book is the price that we have to pay.
'Tis the price that we have to pay,
A head like a bale of hay;
The price that is set in Nature's book is the price that we all must pay.

In life's queer game we play for Success—'tis thus we have dubbed the dear,
Though whether she's this, or whether she's that, is a matter not so clear;
But one man plays with the cards of greed for a limitless sack of pelf,
And another man plays, with a solemn face, for a laurel to grace himself,
And each man pays; be sure of it, though it be here or there,
For Nature's price is on the goods, and to see that he pays she'll care;
And the happy man, so I suspect, is the man of a kindly way,
When he pays the price in Nature's book, the price that we all must pay.
The price that we all must pay,
With a tear or a smile, I say;
The price that is set in Nature's book is the price that we all must pay. —Alfred J. Waterhouse.

PAROCHIAL VERSUS PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Apropos of The Progressive Thinker's predicted attack of Catholics, all along the line, upon our public school system, it may be interesting to inquire what degree of efficiency is attained by the pupils of the parochial schools, and what kind of citizens they are likely to make.

The writer has long held the opinion, based upon observation and questioning of persons in his employ, and elsewhere, that attendants at those schools learn catechism and prayers—and not much more. Several, in fact, who have attended both public and parochial, have stated, frankly, that all knowledge of value they had acquired, apart from religion, was from the public schools, and many have expressed serious regret that they were compelled to grow to manhood and womanhood deficient in education, owing to the ignorance of their parents in being dominated and threatened by priestly influence.

Romish priests tell them that unless they attend their sectarian schools, they cannot take "first communion"—and consequently will never reach "heaven."

A Chicago publisher, on a large scale, of photographic views of landscapes, cities, etc., who employs several young women and girls, relates an incident that occurred recently, which conveys an idea of the dense ignorance concerning worldly matters, of some of these graduates.

A lot of 400 views of Chicago parks, street scenes, buildings, etc., got mixed with another lot of 100 views of American scenery and cities. A young miss of 19, who had just been engaged to work, was told to separate the two lots. After laboring with indifferent success for some time, and making numerous inquiries as to where such buildings as the Field Columbian Museum and the Art Institute belonged, she called out: "Mr. W., where is Bunker Hill Monument? In Chicago?"

Before enlightening her, she was asked what school she had attended, and promptly replied, "St. Patrick's!"

Is it to turn out such ignoramuses that the priests are clamoring for a division of our public school funds?

WORDS OF WISDOM.

No circumstances can repair a defect of character.—Emerson.

Cheerfulness is an offshoot of goodness and of wisdom.—Bovee.

There are plenty of acquaintances in the world, but very few real friends.—J. F. Davis.

What is fanaticism to-day is the fashionable creed to-morrow, and trite as the multiplication table a week after.—Wendell Phillips.

We hesitate to employ a word so much abused as patriotism, whose true sense is almost reverse of its popular sense. We have no sympathy with that boyish egotism, hoarse with cheering for one side, for one state, for one town. The right patriotism consists in the delight which springs from contributing our peculiar and legitimate advantages to the benefit of humanity.—R. W. Emerson.

Mankind seems to be so constituted that they fall off quite naturally into two sections, the deceivers and the deceived. And the deceived believes in the deceiver. Just you offer to show him he is being deceived, and, for your disinterested service on his behalf, he will turn and rend you. And where you have mental prostitution you will have social destitution. The more priest-ridden, the more poverty-ridden.—Saladin.

Death Defeated, or the Psychic Secret of How to Keep Young.

This book goes to the foundation of things—health, the laws of health, the foods to eat, the subject of marriage, who should marry and who should not marry, the causes of divorce, the proper time for conception, gestation, the determining of sex, animal flesh-eating, what Herodotus, Hesiod, Homer, Pythagoras, Shelley, Graham and others ate, the foods that produce long life and how to live "immortal" on earth, etc. This book is written in Dr. Peebles' usually clear, crisp style, and attracts the reader from the very first through its facts, logic and convincing arguments. Very handsomely bound in cloth. Price $1.

Vaccination a Curse and a Menace to Personal Liberty.

This finely illustrated volume of between three hundred and four hundred pages, by Dr. Peebles, treats exhaustively of inoculation, cow-pox and calf-lymph vaccination from Jenner's time to the present. It tells how the cow-pox pus poison is obtained—how the vaccine virus, while causing many deaths, sows the seed of eczema, pimpled faces, cancers, tumors, ulcers and leprosy. It gives a history of the several years' battle against vaccination in England, Parliament making it "optional" instead of compulsory. This book should be in every school library and family. Price $1.25.

ECHOES OF THE SYMPOSIUM

LYMAN C. HOWE. MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY.

The Great Psychological Crime

A Comparison of Views and the Reasons Therefor.

Lyman C. Howe, the veteran Spiritualist Lecturer and Medium, a man well and favorably known as one of the foremost thinkers and writers in our ranks, will Champion the Cause of Truth as reflected in Spiritualism, while Mrs Florence Huntley, the well-known Author and Journalist, will defend all the statements in The Great Psychological Crime, which Mr. Howe will dare to assail, making a series of articles instructive, suggestive and inspiring, and which every Spiritualist should most carefully read.

LYMAN C. HOWE REPLIES TO MRS. FLORENCE HUNTLEY.

Mrs. Florence Huntley:—

My Dear Madam:—Having received no reply to my last letter published last week, I infer that some unusual demand on your time has caused delay. As your reply is due in this week's Progressive Thinker, and my answer in next week, I venture to anticipate you and to forward a reply to the letter I have not seen, so that there shall be no break in the correspondence for readers that may be following us, and looking for a letter every week.

The material is abundant for this letter and several more, only that I do not want to be aggressive, or use more than my share of the space allowed us.

The author of "The Great Psychological Crime" defines hypnotism and mediumship as the CONTROL of one person's "WILL, voluntary powers and sensory organism" by the WILL of another. We are not informed whether such control, in all cases, covers the three parts, or not. Perhaps it may not proceed beyond the control of the will. In that case would it be hypnotism?

It is not a new idea that passive subjection to spirit control is not always safe. The propriety of total submission and complete surrender of one's individuality to an unknown and irresponsible spirit, has been much discussed among Spiritualists for many years. Nevertheless, there have been many mediums so controlled, through whom much valuable truth has been communicated, and much humanitarian work accomplished, without any evil consequences being apparent. Many such have practiced mediumship through many consecutive years without realizing any harm to health, intellectual vigor or moral integrity. But a conservative estimate of the mediumship in the evolution of Modern Spiritualism would, I think, show less than ten per cent of this purely negative character which surrenders the individuality to the "control of the will, voluntary powers and sensory organism" of the medium, by the will of a spirit, and in that ten per cent my observation with mediums for 45 years, does not show one per cent of cases attended by any apparent evil results, or harm to the medium; but it must be conceded that there is some danger in all pursuits of knowledge. Chemistry has its sightless victims and physical wrecks. Electricity invites the student into dangerous experiments and often cremates its votaries. Geology lures its disciples into dangerous by-ways and miasmatic jungles, and often leads them into the way of death. Our own beloved Denton is an illustrious example.

The per cent of disaster in the pursuit of psychic knowledge by means of mediumship, is not, I think, greater than, if as great, as that which overtakes the explorer of physical nature. In the unsuccessful efforts to find the North pole, about 800 lives have been lost, and still the pursuit goes on. But if these icy sea pilgrimages should at last succeed in finding the pole, and found it an area of a thousand square miles of tropical gardens, and fertile fields, for the support of physical man, it would be a bagatelle bearing no comparison to the discoveries that Modern Spiritualism has made in the past fifty-five years. But the author of this remarkable book does not limit his attack upon mediumship to the phase of subjective trance control. He includes all phases, and with one sweep of the besom of destruction, seeks to annihilate mediumship in all its stages, variations and classifications! He assures us that mediumship in all its phases, and in all stages of development, is destructive to body and soul, and progressively paralyzes the brain, destroys the intellect, clouds the memory and blights the moral nature, of all who practice it!

He assures us that this is a demonstrated fact in the "School of Natural Science!" And he offers statistics from this mystic "school" to substantiate his charges. That our readers may have the exact language of the author, I will quote from pages 213-214:

"The direct and specific effect of the mediumistic process from its inception to its conclusion, is paralysis of the physical brain, and physical sensory organism of the medium." * * * "Long continued or oft repeated subjection of the medium to the mediumistic process almost invariably results in complete nervous prostration."

In support of certain statements in respect to the effect of mediumship on health, the author says:

"This is also, fully verified by the most recent and reliable statistics, which show the average life of the medium, dating from the development of the mediumistic condition is only a fraction over seven years." This includes mediums of both sexes and all ages who have given themselves up to the practice of mediumship either regularly or as a business."

Then follows this exception, which shows how completely the author ignores the facts so familiar to American Spiritualists:

"It is true that there are a few very remarkable exceptions where mediumistic subjection has followed with reasonable regularity over a period of years. These cases, however, are the rare exceptions, and only serve to prove more fully the general rule." "It is found that in every such exception there is a specific cause, which only serves to verify more fully the principle above stated."

As a sample of these "rare exceptions" he cites "a certain well known medium of international reputation" who "has been giving public seances and delivering public sermons under complete trance control for something like twenty-five years, and possibly longer." As an explanation of this exceptional case, the author says:

"It is known that in this particular instance the magnetic and vital energies of the medium, appropriated by her controls, are immediately resupplied to her from the negative and mediumistic members of her audience." * * * "Let this same medium be subjected to the same character of control under conditions which preclude the possibility of such draft upon her audience and she will break under the strain in a very short time."

Let it be carefully noted here, that the author claims to speak from the authority of the "School of Natural Science," and from "the most recent and reliable statistics." How, or where, these statistics were obtained does not appear. But the statement that the average life of the medium is only a fraction over seven years is emphatically contradicted by the experience of the great body of mediums who have been and are most active and conspicuous in Modern Spiritualism in the United States. A glance at the record ought to convince any one that these "most recent and reliable statistics" ARE THOROUGHLY UNREAL AND UNRELIABLE.

Emma Hardinge Britten was an active medium for thirty to forty years, and lived to ripe old age.

Nellie J. T. Brigham, rather frail from childhood, has been before the public as a medium and speaker, nearly or quite fifty years, and done an amount of work that few women could endure, and is still at it, vigorous, healthy, and exhibiting a clear intellect, self-poise, sharply defined individuality, and a spotless moral character.

Mrs. F. O. Hyzer was also frail, an active public medium thirty to forty years, and lived past three score and ten, with intellect undimmed, and a normal individuality as pronounced as the author of The Great Psychological Crime, yet she exercised her mediumship continuously for many years.

Maria Ramsdall, of Fredonia, was an active trance medium for nearly fifty years, and lived to about four score years, and her intellect was clear, and her individuality decisive to the last.

Dr. J. F. Carter, of Laona, a trance medium for fifty years, with marked improvement in intellectual ability since his mediumship began, and he lived past four score years.

J. V. Mansfield practiced mediumship daily—almost hourly—for about forty years and was near four score, I think, when he passed away.

Cora L. V. Richmond has been a trance medium in the exercise of her mediumship over fifty years, I think, and she is a lively corpse yet! She has been exceptionally constant in the exercise of mediumship, and I think those who know her best will agree that she has improved in intellectual vigor, and physical health AS A RESULT OF SPIRIT CONTROL.

That there may be magnetic interchanges with her audiences is probable, and I presume the same is true of all public speakers as well. Kindred souls sustain each other, whether mediums or not, in public audiences or in social circles and private life. Without this invisible interchange it appears quite likely that most, if not all, men and women would dry up and decay and become intellectually inane and morally stupid.

These examples that I have presented are not "rare exceptions," but the RULE, so far as my knowledge can testify, and very rarely have I known a medium who began with good health, that did not live and continue in the work more than seven years.

But mediums, like other people, are liable to die, from a variety of causes; but I know of no evidence that mediumship was the cause of death in any instance that has come within my sphere of association. But I have known many who were rescued from apparently approaching death by mediumship.

I do not think it any exaggeration to say that tens of thousands have been saved from lives of suffering, or premature death by the kindly offices of mediumship. Desiring information first-hand, I wrote a series of questions to mediums and all but one responded. The one exception was P. L. O. A. Keeler. I will present one of these here, to be followed by others:

W. H. Bach, editor of the Sunflower:

Question.—How long have you been a medium?

Answer.—Ever since I can remember. I am now 41 years old.

Q.—Are you ever entranced?

A.—Yes.

Q.—How often have you been under spirit control?

A.—Have no idea. Hundreds, possibly thousands of times.

Q.—Have you ever realized injury to health from the exercise of mediumship?

A.—No. The contrary was the case. It was beneficial.

Q.—Has mediumship injured your memory?

A.—No.

Q.—Has mediumship weakened your intellectual powers?

A.—No.

Q.—Has mediumship caused any disability to concentrate your thoughts?

A.—No.

Q.—Has mediumship injured your nerves?

A.—No. Never knew I had any until my sickness three years ago after I had been out of mediumistic work over two years.

Q.—Has mediumship weakened your ability to reason closely and logically?

A.—No.

Q.—Have you ever been troubled with evil spirits or obsessions?

A.—No.

After thirty years of mediumship, and hundreds of entrancements, Mr. Bach is a lively business man, with a pronounced individuality and intellectual independence, as nearly as any mind can be independent. Indeed, he is known as a "hustler" in business.

I will supplement this with one from a decidedly representative medium, Mrs. Dr. Matteson, of Buffalo, N. Y.:

Question.—How long have you been a medium?

Answer.—From a child, seven years old.

Q.—How frequently have you been entranced?

A.—Sixty times a day.

Q.—How many years have you been doctoring the sick and giving examinations in a trance condition?

A.—Thirty-one years.

Q.—Are you aware of any injury to your health as a result of your mediumship?

A.—Takes strength and I get very tired.

Q.—Has the exercise of mediumship ever seemed to injure your mental faculties?

A.—No.

Q.—Has it weakened your memory?

A.—No.

Q.—Has it disqualified your mind for active participation in the affairs of this life, and independent thinking and the assertion of your own opinions?

A.—No.

Here is a typical case. If mediumship paralyzes the brain and progressively destroys the intellect, and ruins health, one might expect to see the effects of it after a continuous daily practice of sixty trances per day for thirty-one years. But Mrs. Matteson has raised a large family of children, and for twenty years cared for a blind husband, as tenderly as if he were an infant, and is still giving daily sittings, always in a profound trance, to throngs of sick and suffering patients, many of whom have sought in vain for help from the medical profession, and in addition to her mediumistic work, she is active and energetic in a business way when not engaged with the sick, often working until midnight, or later, at some mechanical device or artistic designs, and her house is a perpetual witness to the work of her hands and brain, where, for many years, her spare hours have been employed. In a financial and business way she has now more tact, genius and executive ability than the average man of the world who devotes his whole life to getting rich. She has proven more than a match for designing doctors and lawyers in many trials in the courts, and her self-possession and individuality do not appear to be on the verge of collapse from paralysis of the brain, due to thirty-one years of daily practice of mediumship. This may be a rare exception to the general rule, for there are not many mediums in the world that have accomplished what she has, and kept so completely in touch with the affairs of both worlds, and generously distributed blessings to the sick, the poor, the unfortunate, and the cause of Spiritualism, by her hard work, and generous donations, many of which are never known, even to her friends, and only to the recipients.

If such a life of many virtues, and humanitarian works, all sustained by the practice of mediumship, is to be sacrificed at last to the "Destructive principle of nature in individual life," and go out in utter "individual extinction," there must be a screw loose somewhere in the machinery of evolution. But though Mrs. Matteson is an exceptional example (when her entire life work is considered) her experience in mediumship as a blessing and not a bane, is in keeping with the rule, and the blights are the exceptions, so far as my knowledge of mediums can testify. But, like the "School of Natural Science," my knowledge is not an ultimatum.

But what I do know, and what I do not know, the first testifying positively, and the latter testifying negatively, make a strong presumptive defense of mediumship against the extreme statements of the author of the book. But he declares in unequivocal language, that HE KNOWS; that SCIENCE HAS DEMONSTRATED the truth of what he writes. In his own words it reads:

"These facts have been demonstrated with as much scientific exactness and certainty as has the physical fact that by the action of electricity light may be produced, power generated, and messages transmitted."

This is strong language. The author evidently thinks it is exactly as he states it. I am not trying to impeach his motives or his truthfulness. But it seems to me quite possible, and even probable, that these "scientific demonstrations" may not be conclusive; and that the author has accepted them as finalities prematurely. For many years the Ptolemaic Astronomy was accepted as demonstrated science, and it was a long, hard battle, before it yielded to the heliocentric theory of Copernicus. When Prof Dolbear applied for a patent for his invention of a method of wireless telegraphy, some thirty years ago, it was denied him, because it was unscientific, and therefore impossible.

To my mind there are evidences quite as reliable and conclusive as any that proceeds from the "School of Natural Science," that some of the statements of our author ARE NOT SCIENTIFICALLY ACCURATE, and therefore NOT TRUE. But I do not question that he believes them true. They are directly opposed to the testimony of the clearest seers in the world. They are contradicted by the life experiences of hundreds of mediums; and until we know more of this mystic "School of Science," and of the methods employed in its researches, and the accuracy of its analysis of facts, and the source of its "statistics," we can hardly be justified in accepting as settled truth, all that is presented in this peculiar book. Nevertheless, it contains much wholesome truth, many helpful suggestions, and superior moral ideals, and a large portion of it has been familiar to intelligent Spiritualists for the past forty years; but not all that is familiar is accepted as truth. We may be as well acquainted with error as with truth, and understand the reasonings of many theorists, without endorsing their theories. But the subject matter of the book, and the speculations upon psychic laws and agencies, the dynamics of human organisms, the affinities of thought and magneitc correspondence, the power of will, the law of attractions, and most of all that is striking in the author's analyses, are familiar as the alphabet to cultured Spiritualists. With cordial regard and sweet good will, I remain,

Yours for truth,

The Golden Rule Considered.

The Ritual and Brother Loveland.

I had a delightful Christmas, and now feel like answering the articles of Brothers Loveland and Wimpey, appearing in The Progressive Thinker, No. 735.

I thank Brother Loveland for giving me his company. I felt, oh, so lonely! His point of "moral ethics, as though there could be immoral ethics," I take as an amusing lapsus lingue. One can't say of the author that he knew no better, as we can where we so often hear the expression, "widow woman."

Brother L. speaks of the "Infinite Intelligence," "Scientific Theism," "baby christenings," "a more devotional, religious spirit," and "the communion service that should follow the address of a settled speaker;" and asks if I endorse this vast mass of semi-christian fads? I answer, abstractly, No! Practically ,yes. For myself I have no more need of these. It is easy to advance an individual. It is so hard to move a whole people. Catholicism retained largely from paganism, and then had a hard enough task. This retention was not altogether unwisdom. They were pleasing and attracted the people. They are a sort of condiment to the solid food, without which a large part of the masses wouldn't come to the feast at all. The world has so far taken only two or three steps in civilization. The Universalists and Unitarians made similar retentions from Protestantism, and then the babies barely survived. Had they dropped every past usage they wouldn't have lived long enough to reach the teething stage

We can't compare science with Spiritualism. Science is no Sunday meeting affair, while Spiritualism so largely is. It was so instinctively, and from its incipiency, and grows more and more so. There are other reasons, in my view, why the great N. S. A. should be conservative. We are yet living in age of war, murder, rapine, and general damnableness. It takes money yet to defend against all this. Capital is conservative, and will not trust a radical. The N. S. A. can raise thousands of gold certificates where an extreme radical organization would be shirtless.

Prof. L. says: "I hope to see Brother B. come to the defense of pure Spiritism." Grand brother, this is exactly what I am working for. As I see it there are many different roads leading to the beautiful haven. Each of us takes the one best adapted to the individual temperament. Chicago has about thirty Spiritualist meetings; no two alike. As I see it, it is the wisdom of evolution. It seems to me like the "many mansions in heaven." Roosevelt says: "If you are cast on a desert island with only a screw-driver, a hatchet and a chisel to make a boat with, why, go make the best one you can." Spiritualism has been cast on a mortal desert island many times in the past, and never yet made a successful boat. I think it behooves us to "look a leetle out." I am trying to do so. I will change to-morrow for a better road, if convinced. As long as the N. S. A. can sail more safely with the Golden Rule canvas it has my best wishes. I am not a member of it; I feel better outside.

I will say about "Infinite Intelligence," that I endorse that most heartily. In my present understanding I see Nature itself an Infinite Intelligence. I see no inert matter. I love to think of Nature as Infinite Intelligence.

Brother J. H. Wimpey takes exception to my interpretation of the Golden Rule. He says "my proof is no proof at all." It would have pleased me a little better if he had taken up my proof and produced proof himself of the faultiness of it. He says it is right to do unto others as you would have them do unto you. It is considered good manners to take people as they say, except where it is clear that they are joking. Evidently the author of the Golden Rule was not jesting, nor talking in parables, nor symbols. It is a plain rule, such as a teacher would give in a schoolroom. We respect a modern author even to the degree of holding him to a rigid construction of his words. We would be warranted in holding a god to a still more rigid construction.

To carry out the Golden Rule, exactly as it reads, and you would give no consideration to the judgment of others, their tastes are ignored, and your wants alone respected. You are to do what you want, however much it offends the others. I see not one word in the Golden Rule considering the others, but everything favoring you. It cultivates superlative selfishness. If every human being on earth practiced it, there would be universal war before the next sunrise.

Suppose one has company and pays them no attention because he doesn't want them to pay attention to him. He would be doing by the company what the Golden Rule instructs. I have met persons that paid no attention to children because they wanted no attention from them. They do to the children as they would have the children do unto them. But, what's the use?

Never mind, dear brother; you will have thousands upon thousands that will agree with you.

E. W. BALDWIN.

THE GOLDEN RULE.

To the Editor;—The issue of November 28, 1903, of your highly esteemed paper, contains a communication from my old friend, E. W. Baldwin, of Madison, Wis., stating that he is not happy in the home of the Golden Rule Order, for the reason that, "The Golden Rule, is, by its nature utterly and hopelessly impracticable."

It was my pleasure to organize and help carry into practical operation the Order of the Golden Rule at Madison, Wisconsin, during my last years' residence in that beautiful city.

The organization—the home—of the Golden Rule is a "prepared place for a prepared people." In all charity, I am impelled to say that Brother Baldwin, in my judgment, was not fully prepared to enter the home of the Golden Rule, when he made his application and was accepted into the fold. Doubtless, he is endeavoring to live up to his best and highest light. And to that end, if there is another place at which he would feel more at home, he should be permitted to depart in peace, and with our blessings, rather than our pity.

On reading his letter we were reminded of the sermon of the great evangelist, the late D. L. Moody, on "The Gate Into the Kingdom," in which he said, "An unregenerate man would rather be in hell than in heaven. Take a man whose heart is full of corruption and wickedness, and place him in heaven among the pure, the holy and the redeemed, and he would not want to stay there. Certainly, if we are to be happy in heaven we must begin to make a heaven here on earth. Heaven is a prepared place for a prepared people. If a gambler or a blasphemer were taken out of the streets of New York and placed on the crystal pavement of heaven, and under the shadow of the tree of life, he would say, "I don't want to stay here." If men were taken to heaven just as they are by nature, without having their hearts regenerated, there would be another rebellion in heaven." It is my judgment of Mr. Baldwin, formed from a personal acquaintance, that the language quoted is too forceful to apply to him. He is neither a gambler nor a blasphemer, nor is his heart full of corruption and wickedness. He is merely wanting in those qualities which are found in the man living the true godly life.

He says, "the most sensible prayer the Christian makes to his Deity is, 'Thy will, not mine be done.'" His appreciation and endorsement of that beautiful prayer, is some evidence that he may yet feel at home in heaven; but when he asserts in the next sentence "That this is the direct opposite of the Golden Rule," he demonstrates clearly that he has yet to learn the true spirit of the Golden Rule; hence, "with charity for all and malice towards none," with the determination to do the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us go forward building up the Order of the Golden Rule everywhere, and thereby make heaven on earth, as is God's will. MOUNT PLEASANT PARK.

Notes of the Work Accomplished at Clinton, Iowa.

When there is not a camp-meeting in progress at Mt. Pleasant Park its people are not all hibernating or deaf to the outer world. This season has been fraught with a greater work for the cause, and for humanity in general than ever before. To take a retrospective view we will find the society in the city, which is composed largely of park residents, holding regular Sunday meetings. This society was organized as an incentive to arouse the Clinton people to take a greater interest in the coming camp, and is doing its work nobly.

The Band of Harmony entertained about fifty hungry children to a dinner composed of all the delicacies the market afforded, and very recently held a four days' fair which was quite a success, netting as it did a handsome sum. With such earnest, whole-souled workers as Sister Rowantree to manipulate affairs, why wouldn't it be a success?

Mrs. Stella Phillips treated the park children to a Christmas tree at her palatial residence, and the many presents so gladdened their little hearts that I fancy even in the gray castles of age these little "buds of promise" will remember with delight this gracious benefactress.

Ever mindful of the pleasures of others, Miss Foster's cottage is often the scene of happy faces made so by a generous luncheon, card party or seance.

The committee on this year's work is being heard from and all seem filled with new inspirations, new resolutions and with enthusiastic determination to make the August meeting an ideal one.

It will not be so difficult, when we consider the galaxy of speakers who have thus far been engaged. On the list will be found the names of Miss Elizabeth Harlow, Harry J. Moore, Willard J. Hull, Mrs. Abbie Sheets, Prof. W. F. Peck, Dr. Geo. B. Warne and others. For psychic demonstrators there are none better than our own Georgia Gladys Cooley and Mrs. Murtha, of Baltimore, who, by the way, is serving the societies of Chicago in a very satisfactory manner at the present time.

It is expected that Miss Agnes Chaffee, a graduate of the Emerson School, of Boston, will conduct a class in physical culture during the camp season. This, with the spiritual unfoldment and grounds whose height is of itself intensely suggestive of a step from lower, selfish motives to higher ideals, there is no reason why we may not develop bodies like Apollo and souls like Brahma.

Notwithstanding the many finely-framed sermons and theories propounded from "everywhere" of the present day, Spiritualism is the only reform that can solve the great problem of life upon a religious basis for here and hereafter. This is done by the blending of phenomena and philosophy, and this year the committee is making special effort in that direction as many of the lectures will be directly followed by messages.

It is beautiful to contemplate that however varied and humble life may be, however simple our habits, yet with pure thoughts, honesty of purpose, and the present untouched by the shadows, of a clouded past, we can give to worthy comrades the right hand of fellowship. And as queer as we may seem to others in our fast-becoming popular philosophy we will all be one in that great day that floods its light through all eternity.

The clear and very interesting account of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, with the inciting causes of that tragedy, will serve to excite renewed interest in the great work of Father Chiniquy, entitled "Fifty years in the Church of Rome." A Kentucky Bishop's Important Admissions.

Rt, Rev. T. U. Dudley, Episcopal Bishop of Kentucky, in a recent sermon, as reported in the Louisville Herald, discussed the important question: "Is Hell to Last Forever?" According to his claim, the Universalists made a grave mistake in splitting off from the church on account of the doctrine of everlasting punishment, for he says: "The church to which we belong has never condemned even what we term Universalism."

Unbelief has reached a climax when it calls out the following:

"Alas, that the very mention of the word is like to provoke a smile in the auditor. Alas, that the most awful threatening of the one accredited revelation of eternal verities is received with the laughter of unbelief."

If the laity are not to laugh the terrible dogma into disgrace, and with it others more vital, then its hideousness must be obliterated.

"We may not smooth it into delusive beauty, but we must tear away the repulsive mask, whose horrors are arousing the laughter of scorn that we may hold the lines of inexorable justice, the inevitable retribution of sin; yet all softened and in harmony with the nature of Him who is essential love and who teaches men to call Him Father."

He lays aside the Bible and gives good spiritual philosophy in the following:

"Are we to believe that the endless condition of the human soul is fixed at the moment of its departure from the body?

"We cannot declare that anyone goes into the other world without some capacity—that is the possibility of development and of union with God; and so, at the last, all shall be fitted for the vision of the Father."

The Bishop finds emple evidence in the Bible that there will be salvation to all. He says:

"Beyond all controversy there are passages of Scripture which if understood in the literal meaning, seem to teach the final restitution of all things, the final triumph of absolute blessedness, the final immanence of God in all things. The great Baptist points to Jesus of Nazareth, whom he sees coming toward him, and cries, 'Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world."

In his closing paragraph he shows the contradictory character of the authority on which his conclusions rest; the woeful conflict which is waged in his own mind, and closes with a wail of despair:

"But, alas, in this splendid diapason of universal and eternal hope, there mingles the roar of the voice of condemnation, and just as plainly are the passages of Scripture which hold out no definite hope for the alleviation to the doom of the finally unrepentant. Which may I believe? The church to which we belong has never condemned even what men term Universalism. Mystery, darkness, doubt, fear. Must these, then, be ever the companions of our life's journey?"

In his soul the good Bishop is a Spiritualist. He is too kind and benevolent to believe in a hell of eternal torture. He believes that all mankind will be saved, but that they will be endowed with "capacity," and "possibility of development," so as to be "fitted for the vision of the Father." This last, translated out of theological verbiage means that they will reach the perfection idealized in God. He clings to the Bible as his authority, yet he finds himself in "doubt and darkness," because of its antagonistic teachings, and this on the most important questions affecting not only life here, but in the infinite ages beyond! We are glad the Episcopalians are Universalists. It is a long step forward. This is not, however, saying that Universalists are Episcopalians.

Communication Through Trance Mediums.

Some Reflections by a Leading Philosopher.

San Francisco, Cal., Dec. 9, 1903.

My Dear Mr. and Mrs. Drake:—

In relation to the communications given by trance mediums, I am more and more inclined to think that in order to receive correct communications from the spirit world, it is essential that the medium, and the supplicant who approaches the spirit shrine, should both be in a perfectly passive state of mind.

If the medium or the supplicant have strongly fixed notions, hopes or desires relating to the subject matter of the communication, the thought vibrations thus produced, must, it seems to me, ex necessitate, constitute a tremendous barrier to the efforts of the spirit in the expression of its thoughts through the organism of the medium. Is it not probable in such cases, that these determinate thought vibrations of medium or supplicant may deflect or impede the thought efforts of the spirit control, thereby causing the medium to speak or write, to a greater or less extent, her own thoughts and desires or those of the supplicant? As in the case of a steamer steering to a point directly across a turbulent river it will to a greater or less extent, in spite of its propelling power, be deflected from its course and swept down by the current. Or, if standing on the bank of a placid river where the sluggish waters are gliding slowly by, I should call to a person across the stream, there would be no impediment to the communication of my thoughts to such party.

They could receive and register them as I intended to give them. But should the river be rolling in raging torrents with the shrieking and howling of the winds, under the pressure of a wild tornado, what think you would be the result of our efforts at conversation across the seething waters? The chances are that meanings would be attributed to my words that I never intended. As at Balaklava, in 1854, when the officers and members of the Light Brigade were anxious to make a charge upon the Russian hosts, a command having been given, and in the din of battle, the booming of guns, the shrieks of the wounded, and the moans of the dying, Captain Morris, the Brigade Commander, interpreting it to charge the enemy, and as a result,

"Into the jaws of death,
Into the mouth of hell
Rode the six hundred,"

an incident the world will never forget. Now, we know mediums who are honest, truthful, and absolutely above reproach, whose leading controls give some of the most remarkable communications and predictions, make mistakes. We know their communications and predictions have been the most absolute failures. Why is this? We also know that in many instances the medium's heart and soul are wholly absorbed in them. They engrossed their thoughts by day, and induced their dreams by night. Their plans were formulated in relation to them, their notions were fixed and determinate. And these dominated all other thoughts, hopes and desires of their life. This may be an exaggerated statement of the case, but as an illustration let it stand. I am of the opinion that the efforts of the spirits to communicate are in these cases deflected by the fixed thoughts of the medium and swept down the channel of their preconceived notions, hopes and desires, by their overwhelming thought vibrations. Possibly I may be wrong, but, if on further investigation I should find myself in error, I shall be only too happy to re-state the problem. At present, however, I shall prefer to rest upon this conclusion rather than to charge the spirit of the medium with deception or falsehood.

In the struggle for existence to which we are all subjected by the facts of our several environments, I have always tried to keep abreast of the times, especially so, in the more recent deductions of scientific and psychological inquiry. It is amazing to see what great achievements are being accomplished in these fields of investigation. It is equally amazing to see how the most learned scientists confine their investigations within the field of effects, without daring to reach out from the world of effects up to the world of eternal causes. All modern scientific research is most unmistakably leading to the great fountain of life—the world of primal and eternal causes. But our scientists are either blinded by their own conceit, or seeing the trend of modern science, they are afraid to declare it.

It is really amusing to see how our great scientists, physicists and philosophers are floundering in the unfathomable abyss of the invisible and intangible entities of the universe.

Sir Oliver Lodge, one of the greatest scientists of modern times, in his very able discourse upon "The Present Conceptions of Matter," and especially, in speaking of Radium, thinks that it is not unreasonable to believe that matter is evanescent, and destructible, passing from existence to nonentity, and arising out of nothing into being. Of course, he does not commit himself to that proposition, but he believes it is not unreasonable, and thinks it may hereafter be scientifically established.

Then comes a horde of unfledged, stripling professors, in our colleges and universities—mere boys, but recently graduated—with theories to upset all preconceived notions and demonstrated facts relating to matter and force. In their opinions the conclusions of Faraday, Humboldt, and the great thinkers of the past, who were earnest students of Nature during all their lives, are of no account. But they, after pursuing a three years' preparatory course, four years in college or University, and possibly a post-graduate course of one year for a degree, and obtaining a professorship in college or university, through influential friends, are ready to kick the world into a "cocked hat." Of course, they must do something to convince their friends and relatives and the hoi polloi that they are exceptionally bright.

And now comes Sir William Ramsey, an able scientist, who by experiment, has satisfied himself, at least, that Radium rays imprisoned in a Crookes' tube will, in a few days, become helium, and in a few days thereafter, the Helium will vanish and go out of existence. By this method he demonstrates the proposition stated by Sir Oliver Lodge, that matter can cease to exist, and can out of nothing come into existence. His experiments also establish the fact, in his own estimation, that one element of matter can be transmuted or changed into another, thus demonstrating the long cherished dream of the alchemists, namely, the transmutation of metals—that the baser metals can be changed into gold, and vice versa. If, however, one element can be changed into another, one can be changed into all, or all into one. And if this be true, are not our beardless professors in most imminent and serious danger of being changed into an animal similar to that rode by Balaam when confronted by the angel of God and menaced with the flaming sword? If Sir William Ramsey knew no more about water or gasoline than he does about Radium or Helium, he could as successfully experiment with the former as with the latter. For, by exposing a dish of water to the rays of the sun, or a cup of gasoline to the atmosphere, they would disappear, and in his estimation, pass from existence into nothing. Ergo, matter is destructible. It can vanish into nothing, and out of nothing arise. The philosophy of the great men of the past dwindles into insignificance, in the presence of the beardless professors of to-day. Think how a few experiments from a pan of water, a cup of gasoline or a pinch of Radium, sends all former demonstrated facts whirling through vacant air. Persius need no longer exclaim: "Gigni de nihilo nihili, in nihilum nil posse reverti"—"Nothing can come from nothing, nothing can to nothing return."

Lucretius may arise from his grave and expunge from his immortal writings, the words: "Nullam rem e nihilo gigni Divinitas unquam"—"The gods have never produced nothing out of nothing."

Nor again, can we sing: "Ex nihilo nihil fit."

Oh, ye Gods and little fishes! How the universe is to be kicked and cuffed about by our great scientists and beardless professors!

The fact is, these scientists will fool with the unseen potentities, and the invisible substances of the universe until they are landed body and soul in the domain of Spiritualism, where, from their own experiments and demonstrated facts, they will be compelled to admit the continued existence of the conscious, intelligent, thinking ego, and the fact of intercommunication between the transient and eternal worlds.

Please write at your earliest convenience, as we desire very much to hear from you and your most estimable wife. Will Mrs. Maud Lord Drake's book be out early in the year? Having, through your kindness, perused the manuscript, I most unhesitatingly bespeak for it a grand and marvelous success. Would that the entire world were acquainted with the life work of Mrs. Drake who is recognized the world over as one of the best and foremost mediums ever controlled by the angel world. The name of Mrs. Maud Lord Drake has long been a household word among Spiritualists throughout the world. From the perusal of the pages of this work, I find that it portrays her life work, her history, her struggles, her trials and her triumphs.

Yes, it presents a mass of the most astounding phenomena occurring through her own mediumship, and now for the first time given broadcast to the general public. It will shed a flood of new light upon the old, old problem: "If a man die, shall he live again?" Mrs. Lewis joins me in sending to you and your good wife our kindest and best regards.

Sincerely yours. GEO. W. LEWIS.

Prophets and Prophecies.

A practical exemplification of the rise and progress of prophecy has been afforded by a recent occurrence in the South. As stated by the Chicago Chronicle:

With the exception of our versatile fellow-townsman, Dr. Dowie, it is probable that there is not an avowed prophet in the country, yet a recent occurrence down in Georgia shows how easy it would be for anyone to set up in the prophet business with the assurance of finding followers and believers, no matter how extravagant his vaticinations might be.

An almanac for 1903, which has had a wide circulation among the colored citizens in the vicinity of Atlanta, contained a typographical error which made it to read that on Nov. 25 the sun would set at 1 o'clock in the afternoon. In this case the prophecy was unintentional, yet the colored brethren accepted it without hesitation.

They argued that it meant the end of the world and some dusky student of the Bible called attention to the ninth verse of the eighth chapter of Amos: "And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord God, that I will cause the sun to go down at noon and I will darken the earth in the clear day."

Of course 1 o'clock is not noon, but the difference was not regarded as vital. The negroes began holding prayer meetings and otherwise making ready for the day of judgment. Moreover, they are at it still, according to a recent dispatch from Atlanta. The almanac people published a statement that the prediction was merely a printer's blunder, but the colored folks decline to accept it as authoritative. One theologian is quoted as averring that the hand of the Almighty was plainly to be seen in the matter. "De man dat wrote de figgers say he didn't do it himself. Who did it, den?" His conclusion is that it was inspiration and in that belief he advises his people to keep in readiness, for though the date set has come and gone he believes that the end of all things cannot be far distant.

The incident recalls the historic blunder of the maker of the New England almanac who, along in 1816, inadvertently printed "Snow" as the prediction for the Fourth of July. There was much hilarity at the absurd prophecy, but according to the historians of the event 1816 proved to be a year without precedent and it actually did snow on Independence Day throughout a great portion of New England.

The Georgia almanac man could not, of course, hope for such a verification of his unintentional prediction, but the readiness with which it was accepted indicates that the prophet business offers a fine field for energetic gentlemen who may have been crowded out of get-rich-quick enterprises by the superior activity and capital of Napoleons of finance and shipbuilding.

There is no tale so wild but that it will find people to credit it. Some people even believe the professions of political "reformers."

A Noble Justice.

According to the Record-Herald of Chicago, the world has suffered an irreparable loss in the recent death of Justice of the Peace Andrew Tracey, of Mount Pleasant, New York. Squire Tracey was a country justice of the peace who honored his profession. In addition to being six feet two inches tall and weighing 400 pounds he believed in arbitration. Whenever a case was brought before him he endeavored to induce the parties to it to compromise. He was not a believer in legal squabbling, and it is recorded of him that he succeeded in settling 90 per cent of his cases by the administration of good advice.

But after all he was human, and, being so, there were times when he failed. Once a man who had beaten his wife was taken before Squire Tracey. The kindly disposed giant on the bench delivered a lecture to the wrongdoer, in which the evils of wife-beating were eloquently set forth. At the end of the squire's talk he proposed to let the sinner go free if he would promise not to beat his wife again. The fellow was sullen, however, and declined to make the promise, whereupon Squire Tracey walked from behind his table, hit the gentleman on the jaw, and after knocking him down proceeded to administer a drubbing that lasted until there were yells for mercy and enthusiastic indications of willingness on the part of the one beneath to make the promise which the squire had demanded. The man never beat his wife again, and the case was dismissed without costs.

As has been said, the world has suffered a serious loss in the death of Squire Andrew Tracey.

A Worthy Woman Passed On.

The commodious Howard homestead, a social landmark of St, Charles, Ill., since 1850, was filled to overflowing on Sunday afternoon, January 10, by loving friends and relatives, gathered at the funeral ceremonies over the body of Mrs. Sarah Ann Bunker. Solos tender and low were impressively sung by Mrs. Edna Wilcox. Prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Terrell, of the Congregational church. A funeral address was given by Dr. Geo. B. Warne, of Chicago, and the local chapter of the Eastern Star rendered the ritual of that order. At the cemetery the casket was lowered with the accompaniment of song and Dr. Warne spoke brief words of formal commitment of her mortal body to the grave.

Mrs. Bunker was born at Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 10, 1829, and died within the walls that had been her home for thirty-five years, on the morning of January 7, 1904, at the age of 74 years, one month and 28 days. Her parents were pioneer Spiritualists of Kane county, Leonard and Caroline E. Howard, the mother being a well-known medium for forty years before her death She was the eldest of their fourteen children, the caretaker of her parents while either one survived and a second mother in sympathy and counsel to her brothers and sisters. Her husband, George C. Bunker, a veteran of the Mexican and Civil wars, passed on before her, in 1868, and an adopted daughter, Sarah, sixteen years ago. Her final illness was of two weeks' duration but the fatal trouble had been with her over forty years. She is survived by only two brothers and three sisters: Burwell Howard, of Amboy, Ill.; Aaron Howard, of Clinton, Ill.; Mrs. Celia Wheeler, of Kenyon, Minn.; Mrs. Julia Bishop, our Chicago medium, and Mrs. Florence Blanchard, of St. Charles.

Mrs. Bunker was a Spiritualist for over fifty years and by her sweet, uncomplaining nature and modest nature had impressed her influence upon the community as a devoted daughter, loyal sister, faithful wife, trusty mother, helpful neighbor, true-hearted friend and sympathetic counselor.

Beautiful were the floral offerings, tender were the fraternal tributes to her memory but more impressive still was the fact that the lips of all who had known her named her but with words of praise.

The address delivered at the burial of the mother, Mrs Howard, in October, 1890, by Miss Emma Nickerson, who was later Mrs Dr. Warne, is still recalled by the listeners on that occasion.

FIND YOUR HELL

Before You Undertake to Preach It to Anybody.

The news of the atrocious murder of four innocent persons and the suicide of the murderer, Scott W. Derby, shocked all readers of the press. People read the news, form an opinion, and express themselves. This is their privilege. A friend of mine, speaking of Derby, the murderer-suicide, said: "That fellow was a moral coward."

The Press man, in reporting the monthly meeting of Methodist ministers at the Y. M. C. A. building, Monday morning, Dec. 21, wrote that Rev. Dr. Burt, of Nottingham, presiding, declared: "We must find a hell and preach it." Referring to Derby, he said: "Such a man ought to be damned; he must be damned. If such a murderer's punishment is not swift and awful there is no just God"; and Dr. Warner, in a paper on revivals is reported as saying that, "Church-goers thought more of good worldly appearance than of salvation," and that "many a church was dying for need of a spiritual revival."

I read the news form an opinion and, occasionally express myself. Yes, Dr. Burt, "find a hell" and then "preach it"; but, by all means, find it before you preach it. Dante gave us a rich description of the Inferno, but his book was placed on the index of prohibited books by the then ruling church because, forsooth, he claimed to have discovered a pope and other clerical gentlemen and ladies in hell. Dr. Burt should read Dante's Inferno. It would certainly suit his present mood. An Italian proverb might also not be amiss in his case. It says: "When you are wrathy drink cold water, change your undergarments and keep still."

"Find a hell and preach it." Where is hell? A Catholic missionary, lecturing here to Protestants, was asked among other questions, "Where is purgatory?" The Paulist father, who had promised to answer all questions for the information of Protestants, said: "I do not know." Yet his church preaches purgatory, sends a large contingent to purgatory every year, and prays as many souls out of it as the money paid for masses "pro defunctis" will reach. And still, he does not know where purgatory is.

Dr. Burt surely does not know where hell is, or he would not say, "Find a hell and preach it."

Speaking of Derby, Dr. Burt says: "Such a man ought to be damned; he must be damned." Had this moral coward only murdered his family and not committed suicide he would have been dealth with by the civil courts and would have been sentenced to death or to imprisonment for life. But now he is out of reach of the civil courts. Is it for this reason that Dr. Burt now wishes to hurl some ecclesiastical punishment at this murderer-suicide? In the middle ages the church of Rome used to excommunicate and anathematize corpses when she could not get hold of the live criminals (heretics). Even in our own days the very grave has been cursed and anathematized after the criminal (?) "lens" had been buried.

Again Dr. Burt says: "If such a murderer's punishment is not swift and awful there is no just God." Dr. Burt seems to have a grave doubt as to whether there is a "just God" or not. That "if" expresses the doubt. Why, then, does Dr. Burt ask, request or urge the ministers to "preach of this terrible crime and the justice of God?" Will they preach on this topic next Sunday? Will they know then whether "there is a just God" or not? is not the justice of God preached to us the year round? Why should we now, in view of this Derby murder and suicide, put God to a test and find out whether he has dealt "swift and awful punishment" on this murderer? The mills of God grind slowly—the proverb says. Scott W. Derby has most assuredly received the proper punishment due to his heinous murders and cowardly suicide. Whether this punishment be of the ecclesiastical orthodox order or according to the spiritual laws of nature matters not to us, and Dr. Burt need not be solicitous about the power of the just God of orthodoxy, or the God of nature to inflict due punishment. Let God deal with Derby.

This murderer-suicide was at one time engaged in missionary work for the church. Has he not laid up treasures in heaven by his devotion to the church. Does he now get credit for these treasures, or did he mortgage them to the money sharks? Dr. Burt was too hasty and knows no more about the punishment due to Derby, or the mode of its infliction than I presume to know. Dr. Burt and the ministers of the ministerial meeting may preach on Derby and his "swift and awful punishment" if they so desire; but I want no such preaching in my dish.

Dr. Warner believed "church-goers thought more of good worldly appearance than of salvation," and said "many a church was dying for need of a spiritual revival." Worldly appearance is all right, even in the churches. The man in sackcloth and ashes would be mocked and laughed at and ordered out of our churches—by the preacher himself. Many years ago a revivalist preacher at Mansfield, Ohio, standing upon the stump of a tree where now the court-house stands, rebuked his hearers for their "worldly appearance," and cried out: "Where is the primitive Christian of to-day, the man in sackcloth?" His oratorical interrogation to which no answer was desired or expected, was answered ex abrupto when Johnny Appleseed, attired in coffee-sacking, stepped forward and said, "Here he is." Dr. Warner certainly does not expect his congregation to come to church a la Johnny Appleseed, especially this time of the year.

"Many a church is dying for the need of a spiritual revival." Dr. Warner, leave out the indefinite article "a" before the adjective "spiritual" and it will sound better. Spirituality has departed from the churches and your revivals, so-called, full of hell-fire and brimstone, "swift and awful punishment" are not "spiritual." I would rather see a church die of atrophy or anaemia than to grow on the hypertrophy or hyperaemia of revivalistic methods. "Preach the gospel to all nations."

What have the churches done for the suppression of crime—in nineteen hundred years? Ninety-five per cent of the criminals in pails and penitentiaries are church-members, and eighty-five per cent of all saloon-keepers are members of one church.

Let us unite in suppressing crime, and let God and the civil courts deal with the criminal.

ELSIE REYNOLDS' MATERIALIZING SHOW.

At last her methods have been fully exploded. That has been done before, but the gullibles and semi-idiots in this country are so numerous that she has flourished from a financial standpoint. We venture to say that this woman never gave a genuine materialization during her whole career. Is it any wonder that the number of Spiritualist societies in this country is on the decline, when we consider that such a person as Mrs. Reynolds is able to carry on her "materialization" shows all over the United States, and deceive the people?

To the Editor:—We send the enclosed letter, hoping to reach the ears of those honestly interested in Spiritualism. We wish it to be distinctly understood first and last that we are not fraud hunters; BUT AFTER HAVING BEEN DECEIVED AND IMPOSED UPON, LIKE THE MAJORITY OF PROFESSED SPIRITUALISTS, WE ARE DETERMINED, BY EARNEST SEEKING, TO KNOW THE TRUTH.

Some of us have been most enthusiastic believers of materialization. The memory of our dear departed is held by us to be most sacred, and all imposition regarding their manifestation, in any and every form, should be exposed, that none may be misled and their hopes built up with deceptions.

Mrs. Elsie Reynolds, a materializationist of California, has had A LARGE FOLLOWING OF DUPES in Los Angeles for many years. Although having been exposed many times, the gullibles in great numbers have been still held in tow. Among her converts and faithful followers was Robert Hale. A seance was held at G. A. Cherry's, 833 Wall street, October 2, 1903, where Mr. Cherry detected fraud. In order to be fully convinced that this work was all fake, he engaged Mrs. Reynolds to hold another seance at his house, October 4, and enlisted two men from the creamery where he worked, to assist him in ascertaining the truth of materialization. Accordingly they cut through the ceiling and slit a hole in the ceiling paper just over the corner to be used as a cabinet. This slit was made so that the paper could be held open when desired, but would close up again and be invisible, thus allowing the two young men resting above on a feather bed to have a full view of the operations. Mr. Cherry charged them to say nothing if the manifestations proved genuine; but if a fake, to call out certain words, when Mr. Cherry would make the exposure. This proved a successful capture, because no one knew of the intending test except these three who were to take part. Mr. Hale has since declared that he was SUCH A GULLIBLE that if he had been informed by Mr. Cherry of this intended investigation, he would certainly have felt it his duty to have notified Mrs. Reynolds.

The young men above saw Mrs. Reynolds sit outside the cabinet next to a slit in the curtain, through which she reached with a white cloth to the opening, showing the audience what appeared to them to be a real materialized spirit with a baby voice spoken by Mrs. Reynolds. Then she went inside the cabinet and adjusted her wardrobe to imitate different spirits.

At the given signal, when Mrs. Reynolds appeared as "Aunt Betsey," Mr. Cherry tore down the curtains, when all beheld Aunt Betsey remove her mask and goggles and very naturally place them in her bosom, and let down her overskirt which had been rolled up, without one word of excuse. The astonished audience now recognized in a clear light that Aunt Betsey was NONE OTHER THAN MRS. REYNOLDS. MRS. LAURA HYLAND, OF SAWTELLE, WAS TAUGHT BY MRS. REYNOLDS HOW TO DO MATERIALIZATION. LETTERS SENT BY MRS. REYNOLDS TO MRS. HYLAND, TELLING HOW TO MANAGE HER CIRCLES AND CONTAINING STOCK TESTS WERE GIVEN TO MR. HALE, BY MRS. HYLAND, WHO BECAME ASHAMED OF THE DISHONEST WORK, AND SO GAVE SEANCES EXPOSING THE METHODS. WE HAVE A LARGE NUMBER OF THOSE LETTERS ADDRESSED TO MRS. HYLAND AND SIGNED BY MRS. REYNOLDS, IN HER OWN CHIROGRAPHY, WHICH SHE CANNOT REFUTE, GIVING THE WHOLE DECEPTION AWAY AND IMPLICATING SOME PROMINENT PROFESSED SPIRITUALISTS (?) AS AIDING THIS NEFARIOUS WORK FOR GAIN.

It is time that Spiritualists awoke to the importance of cleaning their ranks of these PESTIFEROUS BEINGS IN HUMAN FORM, who have brought such a blight upon the grandest principles of truth that have ever dawned upon the mind of man for enlightening the race on all those points of interest most dear to human hearts in the life that now is and the one for which we have hoped, and which we may know through true mediumship and the science and philosophy of Spiritualism. The truth can never be realized through fraud, for the convert made in this way will sometime find out the deception, and so be inclined to regard the whole as false.

We will gladly furnish the above-mentioned letters for publication, and can prove that they were written by Mrs. Reynolds, who we will swear from certain sure evidence of our own senses is a notorious pretender, and that all her work claiming to be materialization of decarnate spirits, is absolute fraud.

We are now satisfied that all this work claiming to materialize the so-called dead, so they may be seen with the physical eye is ALL FRAUDULENT and cannot be done, for all who appear from the spirit world are seen by clairvoyance only. We will, therefore, make the following offer, that we will give ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS to any person who will PRODUCE ONE MATERIALIZED SPIRIT.

We the undersigned do solemnly swear that the above statements concerning Mrs. Reynolds and the letters she wrote to Mrs. Hyland, which we offer for publication, are true; that we witnessed the above described exposure, and have all seen the original letters, which we have proven to be in her own handwriting.

Object Lesson in Catholic Education.

The most recent census of Italy gives that country a population of 32,450,000. Of this number 14,000,000 above the age of ten years can neither read nor write. As the latter number does not include those who are barely able to write their names, and really are uneducated, and children under ten years of age, it may be safely said that 80 per cent of the Italian people are unable to read or write. Spain and Portugal make no better showing. Ignorance, stupidity and superstition predominate.

The people of these countries are all Catholics, born into that church, and education is controlled by the Catholic church. Whatever education there is, is furnished by Catholicism. These countries are what Catholic authority declare all countries should be in educational matters. Education of the higher classes cannot be prevented, but it is such education as the church deems advisable. The masses are kept in ignorance because they are more zealous and easier of control. An Italian writer says, "the priests have made a nation of lions into a herd of sheep," and he might have added, for the purpose of furnishing the fleece to the church. When the Catholic archbishop demands state money for the parochial schools, this object lesson is full and sufficient answer.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE GOLDEN RULE.

An Address by Dr. J. H. Randall, of Chicago.

A BONE OF CONTENTION.

The Golden Rule, like everything else in God's vast Universe, is viewed from many different standpoints, with results as widely different as the views expressed in relation to The Great Psychological Crime. Its origin is really hidden in the dark mists of antiquity, it having received expression before the time of Christ. Dr. J. H. Randall, prominent as a physician and lecturer, analyzes it in an able and impressive manner. His views will be read with interest.

"Do not unto others that which you would not have others do unto you."—Confucius.

"Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so unto them."—Jesus.

I recently read an article in The Progressive Thinker from Mr. E. W. Baldwin, entitled, "The Golden Rule, An Absolute Obstacle to Progress." In said article he states: "The Golden Rule was born of priestcraft." He also makes the statement that "Science never stoops so low as to use the term 'Golden Rule.'"

I do not undertake to show another side of this subject, because I am fond of controversy, but because I believe sound argument can be adduced showing that Mr. Baldwin's position is untenable, and that he is in error.

By the term "Morals," it is generally understood by human consciousness that there are right and wrong actions, and as a study these have been covered by the title of "Ethics" or "The Science of Morals."

With every statement or proposition formulated or conceived by the human mind, endowed with the ability to reason in relation to the impressions derived from experience with its environments, lingers the shadow in thought of its opposite or antagonistic principle. The people involved in business affairs, whose energies are devoted to getting money and accumulating wealth have formulated, "Do others or they'll do you," as their excuse for indifference toward those who see the promise of a higher civilization yet to be realized by the more extended practice of the Golden Rule.

The greatest scholars known, whose knowledge has been derived from wide research and candid consideration of all matters bearing upon human life, are agreed that the knowledge we have classed as "Ultimate Truths," truths mathematically and logically demonstrated, and which no one disputes, is classed as Philosophy. Science, it is agreed, is partially unified knowledge, while Philosophy is completely unified knowledge. Hence to find a philosophical basis for the golden rule, it is necessary to consider the science of right actions and wrong actions.

I am quite well aware of the fact that there are many persons identified with making known the general philosophy of Spiritualism, who insist that everything is right; that there is no wrong, and that everything is as it must be and in accord with absolute law; yet some of these very people are everlastingly criticising others who entertain views differing from those which they are advocating, and are constantly pitching into what they call "ignorance, superstition, bigotry and injustice." Taking the standpoint from which their general teachings radiate, and their specifications in relation to right and wrong, they are not consistent. Upon general principles, unquestionably, everything is right, but there are details as to what may result which have been gathered from human conduct, that implies a certain amount of freedom of action.

THE THREE IMPORTANT RULES.

Morality and ethics is the science of right conduct in our dealings and associations one with another. Its object is to help us to determine how and why certain personal habits and conduct are not pleasing to look upon, and experience has impressed mankind generally that they are detrimental. On the other hand, certain other habits and conduct proves beneficial and satisfactory. From a scientific standpoint, good and bad results from conduct are not accidental, but are inevitable consequences of the constitution of things. The purpose of the science of ethics is to enable us from the known laws of life and the conditions of existence, to ascertain what habits and actions will necessarily lead to happiness, and what will produce misery. The inference would naturally follow that intelligent men and women will be disposed to restrain the impulses which they may have that would be opposed to its deductions, irrespective of a direct estimation of happiness or misery.

In the progress of mankind from the dawn of consciousness with the primitive beginnings of family and tribal life, down to the modern home, municipality, state and nation, we have learned by experience, "The Iron Rule"; "The Silver Rule," and "The Golden Rule."

The Iron Rule for human conduct—evil for evil, or the imposition of evil, causing some other creature misery, just because one has the power, there being no fear of unpleasant consequences, we have come to know is the expression of the lower animal faculties of the mind, and is the law of brutes and savages.

The silver rule in human conduct—good for good—signifies the evolution of being possessing higher qualities in a moral sense, and it was an advancement toward the formation of another character, the formation of which gave promise for the expression of the Golden Rule

The Golden Rule, or doing good for those whose habits and conduct cause you misery as well as themselves, is the ultimate truth in ethics, which philosophers are generally agreed, that for their own permanent peace and happiness, and the good of all mankind, every member of the human family should be governed, and eventually as the higher attains the greater results of being, the practice of the Golden Rule will be the process for governing the disorderly and refractory members of society.

We cannot entertain the thought of a father without the accompanying thought of a child. The thought of a superior is invariably shadowed by an inner consciousness of an inferior. The work of a mechanic to construct a machine; of an artist to paint a landscape, portrait, or any other object upon canvass; of the sculptor to carve soul-suggestive statue from the block of granite or marble; however perfect, useful or beautiful the finished task of either to the one that may enjoy the privilege of looking upon it, each will see that could he do his work over again with the same subject he could greatly improve it. We have some institutions the result of human conduct and conception of duty of one class toward another, that an intelligent person would hardly take the position that they have not been a benefit to the race. The process of their establishment was slow because the process of their usefulness as conceived by human consciousness was slow in its development.

The savage who has never seen a balloon, an engine or a wagon, cannot form any definite idea of the use of either. An electric motor, or an unsymmetrical pierced disk of an eccentric has no place or purpose in the mind of the country rustic who is not familiar with the principles of electricity and the construction of machinery. A fragment of a sentence if not intelligible, is wrongly interpreted in the absence of the remainder; cut off its beginning and end, and the rest of the demonstration proves nothing. Evidence given by a plaintiff often misleads until the evidence which the defendant submits is joined to it.

The conception of a whole suggests parts, and in the case of a part suggests the whole thing involved. Conduct is a whole, an organic whole. It is an aggregate of interdependent actions performed by an organism. That division of ethics pertaining to conduct is a part of this organic whole and is inextricably bound up with all its parts.

One's personal habits, his way of eating a meal, stirring a fire, getting a pail of water, a scuttle of coal or armful of wood, and making a fire, or reading a newspaper or book, are all acts with which morality has no concern. Opening a tent, a window or door to admit fresh air to the space we occupy; putting on an animal skin, blanket or an overcoat, are not thought of as having any ethical significance. These acts nevertheless are all portions of daily conduct in the lives of very many human beings.

The behavior which we call good and that which we call bad is included with the behavior of which we take very little or no notice. The whole of which ethics forms a part is the whole constituted by the theory of conduct in general, and this must be understood before the part alone can be comprehended.

Each of the rules herein mentioned relates to a certain form of conduct, and may be regarded as comprehending certain adjustments of acts to ends from the simplest, among creatures below man, to the most complex acts of human beings, in their homes, in society, the state and nation; exen extending to the cast of these associations of individuals which are for the world-wide general welfare, and therefore are international in character. This feature of the subject is a branch of science and may properly be called

THE EVOLUTION OF CONDUCT.

The student of forms soon becomes familiar with evolution as compared with the theory of a special and perfect creation. Social advancement he will soon discover is as completely under the control of natural law, as is bodily growth. Evolution has taken place, and is now going on in all structures throughout the steadily ascending types of the animal kingdom; and evolution of functions has gone on by similar gradations with the evolution of structures, and from a consideration of these, we naturally drift into consideration of the conduct of creatures and of being as correlated with the increasing complexity of structures and the functions of organs that sustain them.

Organs and their functions are variously compounded to achieve certain bodily acts, and are again re-compounded to affect that co-ordination of bodily acts which we know as conduct. We are concerned with functions, whenever we think of them as processes carried on within the body they belong to the domain of physiology, and we may treat of their adjusted combinations because they are parts of a vitalized complete organism.

THE VARIOUS FUNCTIONS CONSIDERED.

It is the function of the heart to send the blood to all parts of the body and to receive again that portion of it returned, which it then sends to the lungs; it is the function of the lungs to exhale carbon, receive fresh air and oxygenate and purify the blood sent to them for that purpose, and which then passes back to the heart to again be sent by its hydraulic power to all parts of the body for its reconstruction. Newly aerated blood is constantly in demand by the stomach to enable it to do its work; heart, lungs, arteries, veins, stomach, co-operate with secreting and excreting glands to promote digestion, assimilation and construction, and to remove the waste matter resulting from dying tissue, that newly constructed tissue may take its place, and the organism in its integrity be maintained.

In considering these we are dealing with functions, and when we study how certain parts of the organism act upon environment, such as fins, wings, toes, legs and arms, to perform their functions, we are still concerned with physiology; but when we enter upon the study of conduct we notice such combinations of acts as take place by the use of the sensory organs and enter the psychical realm of being. We thus pass from simple organs to the complex organism, made up by an interdependent relation of every part; and soon discover that the systematic adjustment of each to the other, affords the best condition for each in its special place of usefulness, while at the same time its work is for the welfare of all equally with itself.

We will suppose a person guiding his hand by his eyes seizes a weapon which he uses to ward off a blow, but a counter blow is given; the aggressor runs and is chased, a struggle follows, then an arrest by the police, and there follow the several varied acts constituting a prosecution. It is evident that the initial adjustment of an act to an end, inseparable from the rest, must be included with them under the same general head; and from this simple initial adjustment, having intrinsically no moral character, we pass by degrees to the more complex adjustments such as on which moral judgments are passed. Hence, excluding all internal co-ordinations, our subject here is the aggregate of all external co-ordinations; and this aggregate includes not only the simplest as well as the most complex performed by human beings, but also those performed by all inferior beings, which when properly considered are more or less involved. Yet in the lowest creatures most of the movements to the observer may not have any more recognizable purpose than have the struggles of an epileptic or the victim of St. Vitus dance.

THE JELLY FORMED INFUSORIUM.

The little jelly formed infusorium swims randomly, but apparently determined in its course, not by a perceived object to be escaped or pursued, but by varying stimuli in its media, and its acts unadjusted in any appreciable way to ends, leads it now into contact with some nutritive substance which it absorbs, and then into the neighborhood of some creature by which it is swallowed and digested. Lacking those developed senses and motor powers which higher animals possess ninety-nine in a hundred of these minute creatures live only a few hours and disappear for lack of nutrition or by destruction. Its conduct or actions are so little adjusted to ends that life continues only so long as the environment is favorable. The rotifer is a much higher type of acquatic creature, though it is very low in the scale of species; we can see in it how with larger size and more developed structures, and greater power of combining functions, there is advance in conduct; by its whirling cilia it sucks as its food the small infusoria that move around it; by its prehensile tail it fixes itself to some object, and may withdraw its outer organs by contracting its body, and thus preserve itself from injury threatened; it, therefore, by its actions, becomes less dependent on the actions going on around it, and so preserves itself for a longer period than the infusorium. Thus we might pass from considering each type of creature, from the transparent jelly infusorium, to the most complex represented by the vertebrates, of which man is the last great organic link. As we proceed we find the more multiplied and varied adjustments of acts to ends, by which the more complex organism from day to day fulfils more numerous requirements, increase the activities that are carried on, and that they severally help to make greater the period through which useful activities endure, thus continually affording more and greater satisfaction to the creature or being; at the same time leading up to, as the final purpose, complete individual life.

SELF-PRESERVATION.

Self-preservation has much to do with the preservation of offspring by preceding generations. In proportion as there has been improvement of conduct subserving individual life, implying superior and more complex organization, there must have previously been highly evolved conduct, implying forethought subserving nurture to the young. The next step would be considerations for maintenance of the race, and would naturally follow a result of greater care of offspring.

The savage compared with brutes is higher in his conduct, both as to himself and his race. He provides for a larger number of the wants of his offspring; his parental care endures longer, and to a limited extent he disciplines his children into habits, and instructs them in arts, which though crude, are calculated to better fit them for their condition of existence. This conduct of the savage becomes involved with the first order of conduct which is manifested in the affection of brutes for their young. Then again as we ascend from savage to civilized life. The continual adjustments of acts to ends in the rearing of children become more and more elaborate in number, variety, and efficiency of their adaptation to the ends sought; the aid and oversight which is kept over them being maintained throughout a much longer period of their lives in the highly civilized state.

LIVES OF SAVAGES.

The question here is suggested, under what conditions does human conduct for the good of the individual and the race reach its limit?

The predatory lives of savages who depend upon the fruit of the chase for subsistence fall far short of the better form of conduct, or acts to ends, now conceivable in every way; individual life, illy carried on is prematurely shortened; the fostering of offspring seriously fails, and is incomplete when it does not fail; and to maintain self and the race, the thought uppermost is destruction of other beings of a different kind, or of like kind. In tribal groups formed by primitive hordes, instinctively, conduct remains imperfectly evolved in proportion as there are antagonisms between tribes, and between members of the same tribe. The nature which prompts tribal and international aggression, also prompts the aggressions of individuals on one another. The lesson of this fact is, that the limit of improved conduct can be reached only in permanently peaceful societies, and states.

Whether a priest first saw the principle, a scientist, or a philosopher, makes no difference. The physical and psychical facts of life, has revealed that to reach the complete life, we must each so adjust our acts toward others, as not to infringe upon them any more than we are willing that they should infringe upon us, for the attainment of the same end—complete satisfaction with life, that we seek for ourselves, and the conduct of this kind can be approached only as war dies out.

THE GOLDEN RULE AND ITS PRACTICE.

The practice of the Golden Rule is signified in that kind of behavior of individuals in which each achieves his ends and derives full satisfaction with life without preventing others from achieving the same result in their lives. In society and the state this means mutual help for the achievement of both. If indirectly by industrial co-operation, or directly by volunteered aid, fellow citizens make easier for one another the condition and duties of life, then their conduct indicates a progressive phase of evolution in the larger field of usefulness constantly opening to each; since whatever facilitates the making of better conditions for the expression of human life, increases the totality of that which is required to make, serve and render the lives of all more complete.

We find that some men very far back in human history had thoughts about what was right and just, leading up to the conduct inevitably implied in the Golden Rule. In commenting upon the different meanings of justice, Aristotle wrote: "The just will be the lawful and the equal, and the unjust the unlawful and the unequal." Paul wrote to the Colossians: "Masters, give unto your servants that which is just and equal." And David, a Jew, expresses himself when praying: "Hear the right," and again, "Let my sentence come forth from thy presence; let thine eyes behold the things that are equal."

CONSIDERATION OF CONDUCT.

We logically reach the conclusion that there is a quality of conduct to which we apply the name good, because we know the natural result following it, and there is a quality of conduct which we call bad, by the same reasoning. We are consistent then inferring that the conduct from which good results are experienced is the more evolved conduct. From this we may see that conduct reaches its limit when individual life is greatest in length and enjoyment to its possessor. Again we are forced to regard that conduct as good which increases the power of self-preservation, and that as bad which tends to self-destruction. Further, it is also evident that with increasing power for maintaining individual life, there comes increasing power for the preservation of species by fostering progeny, and that evolution reaches its limit only when the needful number of young, preserved to maturity, are fitted for a life that will be complete in duration and in affording satisfaction. Thus is shown that parental conduct is properly rated good or bad, as it fulfills or fails in the result attained in this direction. What here as conduct, manifested by parents, may also be looked for from representative men and women in any community, or society at large; the motive prompting their acts being to make possible such conduct generally as will insure that life may be completed in the offspring, not only without preventing it in others, but by the promotion of it in others; and who is there that will affirm that this is not good?

The question may arise with some persons: Has that evolution which improves the adjustment of acts to ends in the ascending stages of organization been a mistake? If it is then animate existence never should have been experienced, and the sooner it is terminated the better; but the idea held generally, is that animate existence is desirable, and that there is a balance in favor of animate existence which may be increased by that course of conduct from which we have experienced more pleasure than pain, and in consequence of which we call it good.

PESSIMISTS AND OPTIMISTS

are generally agreed that life is bad or good according as it does not or does bring a surplus of general happiness. The pessimist finds fault with life because the result of it to him has been to experience more that is disagreeable and painful than that which is satisfactory and pleasurable. The optimist is fully satisfied with life because he has experienced more pleasure than pain. The antagonistic views of these two schools of thinkers implies that conduct should conduce to the preservation of the individual, of the family, and of society, upon the supposition that life in its general aspects may afford more happiness than misery. It is very natural to infer that our conscious existence would be judged a curse, both by the pessimist and the optimist, if to the misery we are forced to bear, and to see in this life, was added a surplus of misery to be borne hereafter. Logically, then it follows, that there is no escape from the conclusion, that the conduct is good through which the least misery may be experienced and that has generally resulted in affording more pleasure than pain; and that conduct is bad which has been followed by an increase of misery. As rational beings we know that conduct is good or bad as its total effects are realized as pleasurable or painful.

CREATED TO BE A SOURCE OF MISERY.

There is a theory extant to the effect that men were erected with the intention that they should be a source of misery to themselves; and that they are bound to continue living, that their Creator may have the satisfaction of seeing them in their misery. This theory is being rapidly outgrown, because ecclesiasticism no longer inspires the general policy of the world. A few do profess to accept it yet under a disguised form. Several creeds are pervaded by the old belief that suffering is pleasing to the gods. The idea was derived from bloody ancestors. The gods that they conceived were such only as to be gratified by the infliction of pain, because when living they delighted in torturing other beings; and in witnessing torture only are the impulses of their natures satisfied.

The fakirs in India who hang themselves on hooks, and eastern dervishes who gash themselves, and inflict other forms of self-torture, and people who self-enforce the pangs of hunger by fasting, show that societies are still to be found that think that submission to anguish will bring them some divine favor. Even among some who call themselves Christians, without enlarging upon their professed periodical fasts and penances, it is clear that the belief shadows many minds that the Deity whom Jephtha thought to propitiate by sacrificing his daughter, may be propitiated by self-inflicted pains. Then again there is a conception accompanying this, that acts pleasing to self are offensive to God, which has survived along with the other, and it still widely prevails; if not in formulated dogmas, yet in beliefs that are yet in operation and exerting influence upon a portion of mankind.

A CHARACTERISTIC PRAYER.

Under the influence of creeds there are people who profess to be guided by the Golden Rule. The form of prayer usually among them is about as follows: "Oh, Lord, we know we are wicked in thy sight; we are wholly unworthy; there is no good in us; we are vile worms of the dust. But do thou in thy mercy spare us. Save us, oh, Lord, from all losses on our investments and preserve us in our possessions, and help us to make them lawful and right before the moral standard of mankind. We know, oh Lord, that the earth and the fullness thereof are thine; that we are thy special servants, and that we are to keep it from the unbeliever in our ways. Save us from all losses by sea or land; save us from the revolting spirit of those the greater portion of the fruits of whose toil we appropriate to our own end and to thy service. Teach our hired laborers meekness and submission to us, thy servants, and that their part of thy kingdom is not of this world; that though their lot may be hard and require much forbearance, if they heed and obey us, they shall receive their reward hereafter. Save us, thy special people, from reformatory agitators to whom men of unsettled convictions are prone to listen. Help us, oh, Lord, to shirk the burden of taxation, as we are not in the habit, and find it hard to make an honest report of our possessions that are taxable. Keep out of our sight, oh, Lord, all the unfortunate sufferers and slaves of every description; all who are in want, diseased, intoxicated, homeless, ragged and starving; and especially keep out of our sight the children of the poor. We know we have the poor always, and do thou, oh, Lord, help us to keep them so they cannot annoy us. All these things we ask as believers in our creed and for the sake of the Lord Jesus. Amen."

THE VARIOUS ETHICAL SYSTEMS.

We are told tha ethical systems are distinguishable according as they take for their cardinal ideas—first, the character of the agent; second, the nature of his motive; third, the quality of his deeds; and fourth, the results. Each of these may be characterized as good or bad, and those who do not estimate a mode of life by its effects on happiness, estimate it by the goodness or badness of the agent in his motive, or in his deeds. We call the good acts adjusted, in so far as experience may adjust them, to the end of subserving the rearing of our young, not only without hindering other individuals from doing the like, but while giving them aid that their lives and the lives of their offspring may be as satisfactory and complete as that of ourselves and our progeny.

While industrialism requires the life of each citizen to be such that it may be carried on without direct or indirect aggressions on other citizens, it does not require his life to be such that it shall directly further the life of others. Many millions of men are leading perfectly inoffensive lives, scrupulously fulfilling their contracts, and efficiently rearing their offspring, who fall short of that higher degree of life which the gratuitous rendering of services makes possible. Daily experience prove that every man would suffer many evils and lose many goods did none give unpaid assistance. The life of each would be more or less damaged had each to meet all its varying changes alone, without any help.

The advancement of mankind from the savage to the civilized state has been more and more toward the conditions that make possible the realization of the Golden Rule The universal basis of co-operation is the proportioning of benefits received for services rendered. Without this there can be no physiological division of labor; without this there can be no sociological improvement for the laborer, now regarded as necessary to his welfare and contentment. And, since the physiological and sociological division of labor would of necessity bring profit to both capital and labor, it would result that on the maintenance of the arrangements necessary to it, depend both the special and general welfare. In society as organized, with the commercial rule, "Do others, or they'll do you," such arrangements are maintained only if the bargains, overt or tacit, for profit to the few, are carried out. It is not in the interest of any person, either morally or spiritually, that want and suffering prevail. Self-interest lies in the direction for him to do all in his power to relieve suffering, and act so as to prevent it; hence, in obedience to the law to attain self-satisfaction the acts in accord with the Golden Rule are inevitable. If one did for his fellow-men only those things which are required by the strict performance of contract, private interests would suffer from the lack of attention to public interests. The impulses of human nature, however, rise to an altitude from and the higher recognizes the lower, and the higher recognize the lower, and a sense, psychical or intuitional makes us realize what we ought and what ought not to do.

Emerson says: "A beautiful form is better than a beautiful face; a beautiful behavior is better than a beautiful form; it gives a higher pleasure than statues or pictures; it is the finest of the fine arts. A man is but a little thing in the midst of the objects of nature, yet by the moral quality radiating from his countenance, he may abolish all consideration of magnitude, and in his manners equal the majesty of the world."

THE PROBLEM IT WILL SOLVE.

The problem which it is naturally inferred the practice of the Golden Rule will solve, is that of relieving suffering and guarding against promoting the conditions that cause it. Nature is, through intelligent consciousness, perpetually pointing us to the higher way—the way to do right and to live right; human need on every side of us has channels through which every supply can be honorably obtained, if truth only be unflinchingly applied to life.

For a long time we have heard the motto, "The greatest good to the greatest number;" but the Golden Rule is. "That each should be the concern of all, and all should be the concern of each;" or "Equal and exact justice for all."

Summed up the philosophy of the Golden Rule leads to the following statements:

1.—The love of life arises from the enjoyments of life, therefore it is natural for intelligent beings to worship the source of life, and for want of any better name, the vast majority call it God.

2.—To hallow life by caring properly and humanely for every human being born.

3.—That all the power we can command by experience and knowledge is to be applied to promote the advent of justice among, not simply a class, but all men.

THE FATHERHOOD OF GOD, ETC.

Life is the supreme law of all that exists. Everything that we conceive as the result of a formative force in the universe, which men call God, has life for its object. Man's complex organism indicates that he is to progress under the laws of life; that the prime object in his existence is to assist in the elaboration of life, and to improve the conditions on earth for its manifestation and progress.

Man is the auxiliary of God. In the earliest teachings of Spiritualism that I listened to, very much was said about the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of man, and I recall from Dr. A. J. Davis, his statement: "Let no man call God his Father who calls not man his brother."

The position of man in the animate world implies him to be a divine helper, by useful acts in the work of life. He is a superior creature, and the highest manifestation of life on earth. From this point of view, whether of man, woman or child, bond or free, titled or untitled, rich or poor, born in poverty and vice, or amidst plenty and the highest moral and religious influences, demands the same protection and veneration of all men and women.

This love due to human life is one of the fundamental laws of universal morality, toward which all previous evolution has tended. It shows to us that it is the essential duty of society, and of every individual to so regulate conduct as to produce equal and exact justice. The perception of this duty has dictated to the sages of all time these precepts:

"To love others as one's self."

"To act towards others as you would wish that they would act toward you."

"To make our abilities conduce to the benefit of the race, and to the perfection of our existence and that of others."

"To unite together and give support to one another."

That these wise precepts and the doctrine of human life may have a place among the institutions of mankind, the law of universal order, and especially the law of human progress, have placed at the disposal of men:

"The resources of nature and those of public property, labor and intelligence."

"Capital or the accumulated result of the industry of the people."

It is for the good of all humanity that nature vivifies and produces everything useful to life, and it is for the benefit of all that each generation should transmit to its successors its acquired knowledge.

By man's existence from the very nature of his environments is implied his right to what is necessary for him from the resources which nature has provided, as well as to all the advantages made by the experiences and progress of society.

The forces and products that nature lends to labor are the instruments by the aid of which human liberty, through industry and commerce, creates wealth. This perpetual and gratuitous assistance from nature, proves that man from the very fact of birth, acquires, and never should lose, a certain degree of natural right in all the wealth that is produced.

It, therefore, is a consistent and natural conclusion, that the unfortunate, weak and ignorant, have a right to enjoy all they are capable, from whatever nature and public industry can provide for use and comfort, and that it is the duty of the intelligent and strong, the wealthy and great, to provide for the less fortunate and ignorant a just share of the general product. In this way only can social duty be performed, and every child that is called into existence on earth be guaranteed against desertion, want and misery.

The Golden Rule makes us realize if we are fairly prosperous, that is if we have experienced more pleasure than pain out of life, that we have feasted at a table that was prepared for us by others when we were helpless, and our duty is to replenish the stock. When we passed the period of complete helplessness, and found we could do some things, and that we had the will to do them, it afforded us much satisfaction to do those things that were approved by our older associates in life. We more and more discover that by the practice of those acts that carry joy, hope and patience in the other lives that are more worried than we are, that we realize a benefit. There is no motive power in life equal to that arising from the will to do something for the comfort of others.

The few have declared the wars and arranged the terms of peace, while the millions have done the fighting, borne the burden of expense, and physical suffering. From a thousand standpoints man has looked upon the other man as his enemy, but we have come into a new light, and whatever the fixed policy of politicians may be, there is a fitter policy already developed for the management of human affairs, and the old will be outgrown.

The limit of the evolution of conduct has not been reached, but we realize that we have derived from it enough to know that it is wise and right to avoid those acts which directly or indirectly we know would be injurious to others; and that there are constantly going on spontaneous efforts to promote the welfare of others. This is the "Ultimate Idea,"—the philosophical principle, underlying the Golden Rule. It inheres in the very nature of human consciousness. It was not born of priestcraft. The highest course of conduct upon our part can be only that in which we shall realize complete satisfaction with our lives, at the same time that we realize that our acts, so far as we could understand them, were for the purpose of aiding others to lives as complete as our own. The rule is, DO NOT UNTO OTHERS THAT WHICH YOU WOULD NOT HAVE OTHERS DO TO YOU.

An Old Man Expresses His Opinion.

Will you kindly let an old man away down in Maine, one who took the first number of The Progressive Thinker, and is still taking it, have his little say in regard to a certain book in which some of the giant minds of the day have given their opinion. Their opinion and reasoning have been both for and against the book The truthfulness or falsity of this book was left to these great minds to decide, so the common minds could rest easy or be awakened to the awfulness of the situation, and flee from that which destroys both body and soul.

There is no two sides to this question; it is either true or false; if true, then a portion of these great minds have decided against the truth, and vice versa.

WHAT ARE WE POOR IGNORANT MORTALS TO DO?

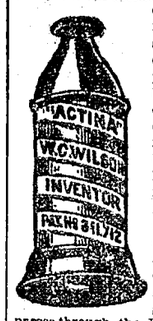
If the evidence is all in, I motion that it be left as all other cases, however difficult, to twelve common men. I think they would require but a short time to render their verdict, unless they took a little time, as they often do, to laugh at the foolish arguments made.

I think it would have been well for the Spiritualist to let this book, together with its unknown author, sink into oblivion rather than giving it the notoriety that it is entirely unworthy of.

We are told by the author of this book that man has the power to destroy both his body and soul. I care not how learned he may may be, it is the height of nonsense.

We realize that it is impossible for man to destroy the least particle of matter, then how can it be possible to destroy an immortal soul?

The great creative power makes no mistakes. Every thing in nature, together with man, answers the purpose, and will obtain the end for which it was made, and what man can do to change it would be like a feather-weight to the ponderous earth.



Relative to the hurtfulness of mediumship, I think Mrs. Richmond and Hudson Tuttle have fully answered it from their own experiences.

As to being controlled and hurt by the denizens of earth or heaven, I have no fear, and no right-minded, sensible person need have. S. D. GRAY.

DEAFNESS CURED!

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Address New York & London Electric Association, Dep. ..GENERAL SURVEY..

THE SPIRITUALISTIC FIELD—ITS WORKERS, DOINGS, ETC., THE WORLD OVER.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

Take due notice, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

Keep copies of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

Moses Hull writes from Marshalltown, Iowa, that he is engaged to speak for the First Spiritual Society of Marshalltown, every Sunday, and to hold one mid-week meeting every week until May. He would like to be addressed accordingly, while letters sent to Whitewater will reach him, they will reach him more direct if mailed to Marshalltown. Especially would he like week-day evening engagements within easy reach of Marshalltown. Mr. Hull has lost none of his interest in the School; in fact, it is the school which takes him away from hime. He prepares lessons all the time, and otherwise works with all his might for the school. He fully believes the Morris Pratt School is the grandest work ever undertaken by Spiritualists, and he hopes to soon convince the world of Spiritualists by its work, that his position is the correct one. He will visit his home as occasion may require, but will spend most of his time in the field of his pastoral work.

Mrs. Elizabeth J. Demorest's address for the months of January and February will be 58 Penn avenue, Warren, Pa. Mrs. Demorest is a speaker and message medium.

Much interest and apparently some envy have been aroused in England by the extraordinary growth of the teaching of psychology in American universities. Dr. C. S. Myers recently read a paper on this subject at Cambridge in which he remarked that in America the fact is becoming recognized that a man of culture should know something not only of the works but also of the working of the human mind. Among the experiments for students that are now provided for in laboratories are those relating to color vision, to nerve reaction times, to hearing, taste and smelling, to tactile sensibility, and so on. At Harvard a half year's course is offered on the mental life of animals, and elsewhere animal intelligence plays a considerable part in these studies.

W. H. Webber writes from Texas: "You are making a very attractive paper, and your subscription list ought to grow in proportion."

Synthesia is the latest nomenclature of science for what it is pleased to term color-hearing or "receiving impressions of colors in conection with sounds—the stimulating of one sense by another." A case is reported at length in the British Medical Journal, of a boy "who heard nothing without a definite impression of color; that all sounds were colored, including cries of animals as well as of the human voice; and in addition to some sounds, tastes and sensations were experienced." But as usual it is classed abnormal and the patient neuropathic. Classing mediumship is a disease, has made more neuropaths among scientists than mediums among neuropaths A little investigation in the right direction would have shown this boy to be a sensitive with clairvoyance as his most active quality—all senses becoming spiritualized by degree and constitutes mediumship.—Arthur Milton.

Lizzie Ducker Lyness writes from Portland, Ore.: "On New Year's eve, a 'watch-night' service was held at the home of Mrs. S. B. Selp, and the guests spent a most delightful time. The charming hostess had planned a number of pleasant surprises, and we had short addresses, songs, coffee and cake—a delightful half-hour of social intercourse, a 'message-basket,' with a beautiful poetic message for each one, and the different psychics present made a tour of the parlors, giving messages from the 'Land beyond the cloud-rift.' Promptly at the mystic hour of midnight, a tiny bell hidden in the alcove was rung, not only to welcome the New Year just born, but in joyous expectancy of the universal work that we know will be done for our cause this year. Mrs. Selp is an active and earnest worker, and is meeting with the success which she deserves. We have two meetings here, and each hall is filled to the doors every Sunday evening. There is great interest manifested, and we are growing. Portland extends New Year's greetings to The Progressive Thinker, and all its readers. Next week we shall send you notice of our next camp-meeting. We expect this will be our banner year in the universal work of disseminating light and truth."

Dr. H. A. Cross writes: "Dr. G. B. Warne was with us (Hyde Park Occult Society) Sunday evening last. We had a full house, and the Doctor captured and captivated every soul in the audience. We made him an honorary member of our society on that occasion. A bright future is very generally predicted for the Hyde Park Occult Society."

E. D. Hardenburg writes from Grand Junction, Colo.: "Isa Wilson Kayner, after a three months' stay, has gone to Bowie, Texas. Before leaving she organized the First Spiritualist Church, with a good membership and good earnest workers. Mrs. Kayner is a good speaker and gave tests at each of her meetings. We were sorry to have her leave us as there is a demand for good mediums throughout this western country."

Miss E. R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C., that the First Spiritual Church held a song service at the residence of Mr. F. A. Wood. The Ladies' Aid met there the same evening. There was singing, invocation and brief remarks. After a half-hour intermission, refreshments were served. Then followed singing. Mrs. M. T. Longley followed with invocation and address. She took for her theme, "The Going Out of the Old Year, and the Coming In of the New." She was listened to very attentively by those present. The services concluded with an exchange of New Year greetings.

The Rev. W. E. Toll, pastor of Christ Episcopal Church of Waukegan, to-day told members of his congregation that, on the night of the Iroquois horror—of which he knew nothing—he saw a vision. In his dream Mrs. Henry Green and Miss Minnie Dowst came to him in deepest grief, terribly afflicted, seeking comfort. After a short time they passed away. The next morning he learned that Mrs. Green and Mrs. Charles Dowst, of Evanston, sister-in-law of Miss Dowst, had been burned in the fire.—Chicago American.

Mary T. Myers writes from Iowa: "I am more thankful than words can express for the Symposium. I consider it will prove to be an opening wedge, so to speak, to split to pieces the infamous structures of odious prejudice against modern mediums, dealt out by that hypocritical class of priests and preachers who prefer to keep their coffers filled from the hard labor of their innocent subjects, rather than to enlighten them with their much learning and professed superiority."

The Bowie (Texas) Blade has the following: "Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner, the state missionary of the Spiritual Association of Texas, lectured Sunday on 'The Truth of Spiritualism,' verified by quotations from the Bible, followed by tests and reading of character. She gave tests other evenings of the week, giving dates of incidents and names of departed friends. Her reading of character was certainly marvelous. Large crowds attended her meetings."

F. M. Hoover writes as follows of The Progressive Thinker: "It beats 'em all."

W. V. Nicum has been speaking of late in Evansville, Ind., and in his home city, Dayton, Ohio, to large and interested audiences. He expects to speak the balance of January in Dayton, Ohio.

The Elmira (N. Y.) Advertiser says: "Mrs. Clara L. Stewart, secretary of the Morris Pratt Institute, of Whitewater, Wis., the only Spiritualist college in the world, conducted the services at the First Spiritualist Church last evening. Last night's service, as is customary with the midweek service, was more in the nature of a message meeting, but Mrs. Stewart in a short address expounded many truths which were not applicable to Spiritualistic doctrine and creed only, but which appealed with great force to any healthy, reasoning mind. Mrs. Stewart has a pleasing personality and is an engaging speaker, holding the undivided attention of her audience."

L. M. Barrick writes from Canton, Ohio: "I have nine of the premium books, and need the tenth one to complete the list. I would willingly pay the price for the paper for the contributions from the pen of Hudson Tuttle alone. People who do not read The Progressive Thinker or some other good spiritual paper, cannot be good Spiritualists in the true sense of the word; willful ignorance and Spiritualism have opposite meanings. I hope the circulation of the paper will at least be doubled during the year 1904."

"Living matter must have begun to exist at some time definite in the earth's history and must then have originated spontaneously or have come from space." By that assertion and the additional one that life is the result of chemical combination and that the time will come when it will be produced in the laboratory, Professor Albert P. Matthews of the University of Chicago, strikes a severe blow at the orthodox belief. Dr. Matthews is professor of physiological psychology, and his views appear in an article on "Will Living Matter Be Formed Artificially?" in the the current issue of The World To-Day. Dr. Matthews has made important discoveries along the line of the article, and is best known by his investigations upon the electrical changes in matter. He says: "There are two facts which particularly assure us of the ultimate formation of living matter by artificial means. These are: That living matter is at every moment being formed from the lifeless in ourselves and all about us, and that living matter must have begun to exist at some time definite in the world's history. Then as to the statement that life originated long after the formation of earth; life could not have existed on the earth until it cooled. Hence, life probably originated at the poles, as the poles cooled first. When the earth was very hot and cooling certain compounds of carbon and nitrogen were formed in large quantities and then precipitated into the warm primitive sea; these compounds then entered into a reaction which resulted in the production of protoplasm, and this reaction has been handed down from one particle of protoplasm to another, from cell to cell, ever since. To make living matter, then, we will have to duplicate a reaction in which possibly several substances are concerned. I look forward with confidence to the artificial formation of protoplasm—and life."

John T. Dow writes as follows to Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond: "Your lecture or sermon, published in No. 736 of The Progressive Thinker, is a great consolation to me; not that it positively proves what I have so earnestly sought to find out, but it is the best argument and strongest indication in that direction. I have tried what seemed to me the best minds I could reach, both carnate and decarnate, to learn if possible the truth as to whether mankind as individuals has existed as such from all eternity in the past. I am satisfied that I will retain my individuality for ages after I get out of this body; and yet there is no other truth, if it is a truth, I am so anxious to learn as that I am to retain that individuality throughout eternity. We seem to have a beginning on this earth, but I really hope, it is only seeming. For I am satisfied that whatever has a beginning, will have an ending. As an answer to my great desire, your lecture as a bearing on that question, has pleased me the most of anything I have ever struck. And I most sincerely and fraternally thank you."

A. R. Arrowsmith writes from Louisville, Ky.: "Please allow me to correct the misleading statements sent you regarding the status of the cause in this city. Contrasted with what it was a few years ago Spiritualism in Louisville to-day is a dead issue. Not a medium or lecturer of any note has appeared here for several years past. While it is true that seances are held from time to time in private homes, presided over by some self-styled reverend, their influence is anything but far-reaching. If Spiritualists are anything they are seekers after truth, lovers of it for its own sake, and no exaggeration is permissible. The make-believe Speed Memorial Temple is but a figment of the imagination, and has long been numbered with things that were. 'Let us be honest.'"

Paris, France, is deeply interested in the alleged hypnotic murder of a wealthy old woman named Chappuis, whose surviving relatives include Leon Gresse, an operatic conductor; Lieutenant Giradot, of the army, and M. Toutain, a bank official. The neighbors of the Chappuis woman were a family named Martin, consisting of husband and wife, who are Spiritualists. It is alleged that Mme Martin obtained a commanding influence over Mme. Chappuis, with the result that Mme. Chappuis made a will in her favor, cutting off her natural heirs. Mme Chappuis died and was buried. On complaint of her relatives the body was exhumed, but no trace of poison was found in the stomach. Mme. Martin has been arrested and charged with the exercise of occult powers. Witnesses have testified to Mme Martin's alleged control over the dead woman, but it is scarcely believed that she will be prosecuted unless facts are developed showing that she physically brought about the death of Mme. Chappuis.

Thos. A. Barker writes: "You need never ask me for a renewal of my subscription as long as I live, or you are the publisher of The Progressive Thinker. I shall take it, no matter if I cannot accept all that is within its columns."

Certain Spirit Discernment Not Mediumship.—E. W. Baldwin writes: "This week's number seems like a second edition of the Symposium, and worth the more as it is of the people's getting up, instead of your own. It is remarkable how the subject will not down. You apprehended the book all right. I think it has awakened more interest than you anticipated. It is an education of mediumship greatly needed. It creates limitations. In Mrs. Huntley's article this week she quotes Moses Hull as saying: 'The higher mediumship does not involve control at all.' THAT DRAWS THE LINE, AND IS WHAT IS WANTED. IT MAKES CLEAR THAT CLAIRVOYANCE, SOUL-SEEING, IS NO MORE MEDIUMSHIP THAN PHYSICAL SEEING. OTHER OUTGROWTH WILL COME."

Titus Mehrritt writes: "I agree with J. Clegg Wright's remarks at the funeral of Margaret Fox Kane, March 11, 1893: 'We want less moonshine—that is ceremonial religion based on false opinions, and a more united effort to establish a rational scientific religion based on facts so ably and completely demonstrated by such spirits as Dr. DuFay and Franklin, through the instrumentality of the justly celebrated Fox Sisters.' Miss Margaret Gaule's meeting with the First Association of Spiritualists was well attended by a very intelligent audience, and it was pleasing to hear the satisfactory expression of the audience as they made their exit, having bought an unusual amount of Spiritualist literature."

A member writes from Rockford, Ill.: "The Psychic Research Society of this city is in a flourishing condition. It now has a membership of over eighty. Our president, Mrs. Hattie Howe, and our secretary, Mr. Smoos, and last but not least, Dr. Hammond (the father of the society), have built up this society in the short time of a few months. We have had with us for the last few weeks Mrs. Emma Nutt-Moore. She and her husband have kindly given their services at our socials for the benefit of the society. Mrs. Moore has also lectured for us from the platform. She is a clear and comprehensive thinker, and we are sorry we cannot keep her with us. On Jan. 15 we hold our monthly sociable and also election of officers for 1904."

W. Wines Sargent writes from Brooklyn, N. Y.: "I notice in No. 737 of your paper, 'Facts Relative to the Fox Sisters,' furnished by Mr. Titus Merritt, to be in error in saying, 'Joseph L. Turner generously gave the privilege of interment of Kate and Margaretta on his plot at Cypress Hill Cemetery.' It should go in the history of Spiritualism to the credit of Mr. Joheph La Fame for thus providing a resting-place for the bodies of the Fox Sisters. One familiar with the exercises at that time appreciate the statement, apologetic and otherwise of Mr. Merritt, and also the purity and unselfishness of that good man, Mr. La Fame, and who is now resting, as he expressed a desire to the writer, 'I shall deem it an honor, with all their shortcomings, to have my ashes and name in close touch with theirs.'"

Mrs. Van Willetts, speaking of the discussion of "The Great Psychological Crime" book says: "The good and purifier truth is ready for use, and will be utilized by the wise and thoughtful minds in a manner to benefit our brothers and sisters. It has been a good and needed lesson; nature never makes mistakes; all that comes to us, we need. But even good things sometimes dull the appetite, and a fast is beneficial to establish an equilibrium. I, too, have passed through the struggles of mediumship. My teachers have ever been as kind and careful of my life as a loving mother could have been, reasonable and just to all of my requests. My mediumship has been the means of developing my mind along the lines of right living, both mentally and physically. It has made life worth the living, which before seemed rather doubtful. I most respectfully urge the home circle for development among pure-minded friends; under such conditions there is very little danger of the lower spheres. My experience and positive evidence of continued life are priceless—and no regrets to follow."

John W. Caldwell writes: "I write you these few lines to inform you that I have entered the lecture field in behalf of this beautiful and wonderful knowledge, Spiritualism. I have been heretofore confining myself to what I styled 'heart to heart talks with a few of the societies here in Chicago. Last Sunday night, Jan. 10, I lectured for the Second Church of the Soul, Brother Shaffer, pastor, in Van Buren Hall, corner California avenue and Madison street. My subject was 'Spiritualism Exposed,' and I exposed it, but not in the manner that I presume a great many expected I would. I exposed it in all its purity, beauty, breadth and depth of its glorious truths. I am prepared to lecture for any new struggling society, without money or without price for a time. I feel and that without egotism, that I can be of much use for the advancement and dissemination of Spiritualism. My dates are all open for the balance of January and the month of February, and any society that wishes my services may address me at my home address, 3032 South Park avenue, Chicago."

Nellie F. Burbeck writes from North Plymouth, Mass.: "Enclosed you will find remittance for the renewal of my weekly visitor, The Progressive Thinker, and Dr. Peebles' Seers of the Ages. I am very much interested in all his writings. I think, Brother Francis, your paper the best Spiritualist paper I have ever read. It keeps one thinking after reading its columns. I have on file every paper but one since I became a subscriber; that one I loaned to a Quaker. He became deeply interested in reading it, and liked it so much he has forgotten to return it. I am deeply interested in the discussion by Mr. Howe and Mrs. Huntley, on The Great Psychological Crime. I have been a public medium for the loved ones in spirit life for seventeen years, and I know I have seen more real happiness in that time than in all my life before. I do not feel afraid that evil spirits will control me to be wicked and revengeful. I am pleased to know there is one Spiritualist paper that is not afraid of the Roman Catholics, and that you speak out in your paper trying to impress upon the minds of the people the great danger to our free public schools. If people would become as interested in this subject as in The Great Psychological Crime, and discuss that, I think it would be doing humanity more good. It seems strange that people in this country are so blind; but are they blind? If so, I hope their eyes may be open before it is too late."

H. F. Coates writes: "I wish to announce that Kenwood Hall, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue, where our meetings are held, has not been condemned as many halls have been, and invite all who are seeking for some place to attend. Last Sunday, Dr. Hewitt's lecture was filled with thought for all and a large audience greeted him. After Feb. 1, our speakers will be changed each Sunday, giving the audience a variety of thought from our most able speakers. Dr. Hewitt has secured an engagement with the society at Muncie, Ind., and after two years' serving our society as pastor too much cannot be said of him as a man and a teacher. We meet each Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., when all are welcome."

Flora W. Fox writes from Rochester, Minn.: "I wish to mention a worker who is now located at Decorah, Iowa, and has charge of a local society there. Although lacking physical sight, Mrs. Lois Smalley can sense the nature and spiritual status of both the embodied and disembodied alike. She is both clairvoyant and clairaudient. She gave two parlor lectures here which were well received. 'Snowball,' a little indian girl, gave many character readings and descriptions of spirit friends. She rarely makes a mistake. She emphasizes the fact that each person whether in or out of the body should get no more nor less than he or she earns. She heaves a sigh and says she had a dreadful hard time in earning flowers for her dress. The white indicates purity of purpose, blue, love of truth, and pink the healing power over disease, and when she does not the best she knows, a black flower makes its appearance and spoils the looks of the dress. This has a deep meaning to each one, if we but apply it. Mr. Will J. Erwood will speak here again this week, and gives general satisfaction."

Dr. Beverly writes: "Lakeside Hall was the center of attraction last Sunday, as every other hall nearly on the South Side was closed. We are looking for the happy day when all workers and demonstrators will unite in love and harmony; then a building can be erected that will be fire proof, also proof against the rust of dry doctrines and formal creeds. Mrs. Murtha is drawing large crowds, and will remain with us during January to give her wonderful manifestations, both afternoon and evening. The society will give another party, Friday evening, Jan 29. This will be a leap year party and dance. A fine lunch will be served in the dining-room above. Booths for palmists and mediums will be filled by the best, so everyone may secure a short reading, and know what the leap year will bring them. Rich widows and merry maids will pay the bills."

James H. Price writes: "Mrs. Maud L. Von Freitag, of Los Angeles, Cal., has just concluded a series of six weekly meetings in Sawtelle, Cal., adjacent to the U. S. Military Home, and through her marvelous gifts she has made many friends and converts. Her tests are given through ballots on which are written the questions to spirits. These are folded and placed on the rostrum before her. She then describes a spirit and answers the question. The particular ballot is selected from the many by a tiny light appearing over the right one, or sometimes the pile is divided into smaller ones, the raps indicating the one containing the ballot. When the right ballot is picked up the raps again sound in the affirmative. The ballot on being unfolded by its claimant, always proves to be the correct one. It is quite common for independent writing to appear on these ballots. Skeptics having honest doubts are invited to come forward and select a ballot. The medium describes the spirit addressed, gives full name, points out the writer of the ballot without being near or coming into contact with the ballots. A unique phase of this lady's mediumship is her answers to questions through her Bible guide. Anyone is privileged to ask a question on any subject. This she reads aloud, requesting her Bible guide to answer. The Bible is then opened apparently at random, and the proper verse is shown by a tiny light. This verse always proves a fitting answer, either in the affirmative or negative. At a personal sitting with Mrs. Von Freitag I was strongly reminded of verse 29, 4th chapter of St. John. After an experience of thirty years with many test mediums I have had the best results through this gifted lady, for with her conditions seem to be always good."

E. W. Allen, president of the Truth Seekers' Society, Los Angeles, Cal., writes: "We are fortunate this winter in having with us Mrs. Ada Foye and Mrs. J. J. Whitney, two mediums of national reputation. The society is extremely fortunate inhaving these two join forces with it in the work. Mrs. Whitney occupied the platform in giving the message work for the greater part of October, November and December, and many were brought to a knowledge of the truth through her splendid work. The society has called Mrs. Foye to the pastorate for the winter, or for such length of time as she shall choose to remain in Southern California. Last Sunday evening she and Mrs. Whitney occupied the platform together. Mrs. Whitney christened two children, a very beautiful and impressive service; no water was used, flowers taking its place. At the morning service we have healing, conference and messages; in the evening a lecture and messages. We have excellent instrumental and vocal music under the direction of Prof. Allen Parkinson. We are now occupying the large Burbank hall, one of the best in the city, and we already begin to feel that it is none too large. At the evening service every seat is occupied. In connection with our morning work we have organized a lyceum under the direction of Mrs. Dora Daily and Mr and Mrs. Sullivan. I congratulate The Progressive Thinker upon the manner and character of its growth. Viewed from every standpoint it is a very able paper, and I take great pleasure and profit in reading it and in presenting its merits to our people."

Mrs. Jennie McNeil writes: "I have been much interested in the Symposium on The Great Psychological Crime, and I think it will do much good and serve as a sieve to sift the wheat from the chaff. I think we draw around us the same class of spirits we are ourselves. If we are strong for right and good we will not be bothered with evil spirits. Like begets like, therefore we should be very careful in choosing our company."

Mrs. Laraway writes from Mt. Clemens, Mich.: "I have seen almost every phase of mediumship demonstrated in my own home, and through my own instrumentality. I have never been a public medium; always doing my work as my guides have seen best. I expect to get into the work ere long. I am waiting for the guides to say when. I hear spirit voices, see the spirits, am very impressional, and have many times gone into other countries in soul flight. I was for many years used in an unconscious trance, but later on, since my sight and hearing have become clear, I am not used in that line. Several times I have had my own sister materialize in my own home. She came and brought my spirit children, three in number. The Seers of the Ages is fine and I am enjoying it."

Dr. J. A. Bailey is now lecturing at Princeton, Ill. He is an inspirational lecturer.

Mrs. Lydia Jessup, secretary of the Indiana State Association of Spiritualists, is located for winter at Fitzgerald, Ga. She can be addressed there in care of Box 94.

Moses Hull is now lecturing in Iowa. He has a three months' engagement at Marshalltown.

John Smith, of Melvin, Ill., will furnish a good hall and entertainment for any speaker who will visit that place, and give them a start. He thikns The Progressive Thinker the best out.

Mrs. J. H. Lyon writes: "Wanted—Some good reliable trumpet medium to join me in the work at a good, strong point in Iowa. Full particulars will be given by addressing me at Marshalltown, Iowa, General Delivery."

R. J. Barnes writes from Newport, Ky.: "After being a reader of your valuable paper for a year, I enclose order to renew my subscription, and wish to say that I have enjoyed reading your paper very much, and my wife joins me in its praise. I sent for and received all your grand premium books with the exception of the last, The Seers of the Ages, by Dr. Peebles, which I now send money for. The books are full of beautiful thoughts and should be read by all Spiritualists and seekers after truth. Through the great efforts of my friend, Mr. G. H. Brooks, while here in Newport, I am one of the many he aroused to the great truths of Spiritualism, and it has made our home life more happy that it ever was before, and my wife and I are striving and working for spiritual improvement."

E. W. Sprague and wife, N. S. A. missionaries, have three Sundays in July and one week in August still unengaged for camp work. They will be pleased to arrange dates for that time with western camp associations. Address until March 10, Rochester, Ind. Home address, 618 Newland avenue, Jamestown, N. Y.

W. C. Gilleo writes: "There is nothing to my knowledge in this sin-cursed and ungodly world, that is causing more sorrow and distress, and damning more souls, and sending them down to the dark regions of sorrow and misery, than the accursed liquor traffic. If the manufacture and sale of the same were prohibited it would be a blessing to the country, but as long as a great many professors of Christianity, both in and out of Congress, vote for and use the same more or less, it will always be sold. If every professor of religion would vote as he prays, there would be a great deal less sold."

F. H. Rice writes from Boston, Mass.: "The Ladies Spiritualistic Industrial Society at Dwight Hall, 514 Tremont street, last evening held one of the most satisfactory meetings given this season. The audience was large and appreciated all the good things given to them in the way of remarks, tests, recitations and music. Mrs. Whitlock, who was with us for the first time in three weeks (her absence being due to illness) was heartily welcomed by all. Dr. Huott gave some very satisfactory tests. Mr. H. A. Kellogg, Mr. Scott, Mrs. M. J. Davis and Mrs. Shirley made remarks that were helpful to the society. Mrs. Dix, Mrs. Curtis, and Miss Ruth Hickey gave poems and recitations that were very fine. On Jan. 21, we will have with us from Lynn, Mass., Mrs. Dr. Caird, Mrs. Litch and Mrs. Helyett. Though strangers to most of us we know their presence will be felt and appreciated. A cordial welcome is extended to all."

Dr. A. M. G. Wheeler is now located at 36 Victoria street, Montreal, Canada. He is open for engagements for February.

Mrs. Ida M. Gilbert writes from Pottsdam, Pa.: "Will you kindly allow me space in your paper that I may reach the outside world with a word in regard to our development. Not three months since we first heard of the philosophy of Spiritualism, and through its phenomena received messages that made it clear to our comprehension as a truth and at least ten of our little group are determined to find out a way to freedom, by living this beautiful principle. We have had with us since October Mrs. Elizabeth J. Demorest, of Pittsburg, Pa., and it can surely be written of her work, 'Well done.' Mrs. Demorest is a speaker and message medium, and goes from here to Warren, Pa., She can be addressed at 58 Penn. avenue, Warren, Pa., for engagements."

Mrs. Thos. J. Sheridan writes from Joplin, Mo.: "We have a small temple here and our work is going on finely; the motto of our temple is, 'The Brotherhood of Man.' We have a lyceum of about thirty-five in number, at two o'clock on Sunday afternoon. At 3:30 we hold a mediums' meeting; at 7:30 our services, and also open meeting on Wednesday evening for free thought, and every body seems to enjoy it."

Anna E. Baird writes from Elyria, Ohio: "The state of Ohio has at the present time four missionaries who, under the guidance of our earnest and esteemed president, Carrie F. Curran, of Toledo, are doing some very efficient work, which is telling for our grand and uplifting philosophy. People in general in this part of the country seem to carry the idea that all Spiritualists are yet in their A B Cs—table-tipping, etc. One lady said to me: 'Spiritualists are a class of people who believe spirits come to them in the night; but they are a low class of people in general.' I said: 'If you had developed brain cells sufficient to hold spiritual truths, nature's laws, you would not speak thus. We as spiritual Spiritualists do not think it would be demonstrating our beautiful philosophy to return you anything but pity for what you are not capable of receiving at present. You are missing the choicest fruits nature can bestow in this life, or the life to come.' Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss has been with us for one Sunday in December. She has won for herself great admiration as a speaker. Her spirituality can be felt by the entire audience. We hold meetings every Sunday forenoon and afternoon. We have a very harmonious society. Nearly every member takes your paper, and could not get along without it."

Mrs. Kate R. Stiles, of Boston, is having great success with the First Spiritual Society, Hamilton, Canada. Up to the end of January her address will be 446 Bay street North, Hamilton, Ont.

Mr. Max Gentzke, the newly appointed German missionary of the N. S. A., and publisher of the German spiritual journal, Lichtstrahlen, gave two lectures in Chicago, Sunday, Jan 17; one before the German-American Naturalist Society, and the other before the Bund der Wahrheit. On the 21st he lectures before the Bund Harmony, 523 Belmont avenue, at 7:30 p. m., and on Sunday, Jan. 24, he will give two lectures at Milwaukee, Wis. Societies who have quite a number of German-speaking members, to arouse greater interest should engage Mr. Gentzke, who is an inspired and untiring worker for our cause, and able to lecture in the German and English language. He is open for engagement after Jan. 25, and can be addressed at No. 13 Silker avenue, Price Hill, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Scribe writes from Detroit: "The Brockways settled in this city last fall, and immediately began a revival in Spiritualism that has attracted not only hundreds, but thousands of investigators. They took pleasant rooms at 25 Columbia street East, and gave week-day and Sunday evening tests at one of the finest halls in the city. Dr. and Mrs. W. were joined during the holiday season by their son Charles. Dr. and Mrs. Brockway have taken a house for the coming year, while Mr. Charles goes to Carnegie Hall, New York. The friends of Dr. and Mrs. Fish will gather at their new residence, 119 Congress street East, and hold a box social, Jan. 19. Mrs. Fish is slowly recovering from a serious street car accident, by which one of her limbs was broken in two places. The attendance at the Spiritual Workers hall, Sunday evenings, and the Thursday evening socials at 333 Michigan avenue, is very large. The cause is booming on every hand. The fine sensible, original poem by Dr. T. Wilkins, 'interviewing Col. Robt. G. Ingersoll in Heaven,' printed on page 12 of last week's Progressive Thinker, will be read here Sunday evening."

Miss Mary Sheltenbach writes: "The First German Spiritualist Society holds meetings every Sunday at 8 p. m., in Etris Hall, 168 W. 23d street, New York. The meetings are well attended and the services conducted in a very able manner. The tests are given by Mr. F. Montsko, Miss H. Yuergensen and Mrs. E. Stumpf; they are very satisfactory. The society celebrates its third anniversary on Sunday, Jan 24, with a sociable in the afternoon, and in the evening Mrs. Amanda Coffman, of Grand Rapids, Mich., will occupy the platform and give her blindfolded tests. She is very good in giving the spirit messages in that way."

Wm. Strong writes from Hamilton, Canada: "Many new societies are being formed all over the country, and one of their first needs is a thoroughly reliable medium who can present both the phenomena and philosophy of Spiritualism, and in a manner credtable to the cause. I am the secretary of a young, thriving society here, and I write from experience. At the present time we have Mrs. Kate R. Stiles of Boston, who fills the bill in a satisfactory way. As her time with us is up at the end of this month, my only motive in writing is to put others looking for such talent as she possesses, on the track, and thus render service in a good cause. The cause of Spiritualism has been slow to gain ground in Canada, but there is evidence most favorable to decided progress at the present time. Our success depends very largely upon the quality of the instruments we may secure. We are not rich, therefore those mediums whose chief object is money, had better not come our way. We shall be pleased to hear from those who have a real message for humanity, and are moderate in their demands."

Dr. P. M. Harmon will occupy the rostrum of the Hyde Park Occult Society at 323 East 55th street, on Jan. 24, and will answer ballot questions on religious, scientific and other matters (not personal). We all need that sort of teaching. Come out and hear him."

J. P. Plummer writes: "Look out for ballot-test. More deception is practiced in that line than any other. Put your ballots in an envelope, and seal the same, and nine times out of ten you will get no response from the rostrum. Don't send your ballots up unsealed."

The National Sunlight Center Club and its branches will give a benefit for poor children, Feb. 6, at Baldwin's Piano Store, 207-209 Wabash avenue, 8 p. m. Tickets, 50 cents.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH
—OR—
DIAL PLANCHETTE.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than seven years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means or developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive Communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the Formation of Circles and Cultivation of Mediumship

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt. D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old sailors whose graves I once saw in a foreign land. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

Hudson Tuttle.

Address him at Berlin, Heights, Ohio.

NOTE.—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

N. B. Freeland: Q. Is it not true that every ponderable, individualized entity is a union of matter, force and intelligence, these constituting life, and in the absence of any one of these three there is no life? Therefore as the spiritual philosophy premises a continuous life without a ponderable spiritual body, does not science compel the conclusion that a future spirit life is an impossibility?

A. It is not true that a living being is the result of the union of matter, force and intelligence. Life has never been defined, and no test can distinguish between the dead and living material. But we have here no cause for argument, for the spiritual philosophy does not claim that spirit existence is maintained without matter. It claims the exact reverse.

The spirit spheres are formed of ethereal matter, not "ponderable" in the sense that it can be weighed with scales and measured with peck measures, yet with no greater remove from hydrogen, than that gas is from the dense metals. Matter in this form of attenuation is called substance, and from this the spirit entities are formed which continue the existence of this life.

Man is a dual being; a terrestrial, or physical body, and a celestial or spiritual body which carries with it life and intelligence. Not to stop to dispute who St. Paul may have been, he certainly gave a clear and concise explanation of this matter when he said: "There are also bodies celestial and bodies terrestrial, but the glory of the celestial is one and the glory of the terrestrial is another. So also is the resurrection of the dead, it is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption. It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power It is sown a natural (terrestrial) body, it is raised a spiritual body." Death, then, simply means the separation of the "terrestrial" or "natural" body from the spiritual. The birth and growth of this terrestrial body has for its purpose the evolution of the spiritual.

Science is the handmaid of Spiritualism, which therein widely differs from all religious faiths.

Marcus A. Post: Q. Who were the Magi, and has the order of that name any "wisdom" or knowledge, derived from them and unattainable outside that order?

A. The Magi were a priestly caste of Media, and when that country was united with Persia the Magian and Persian religions were blended, and remained united until in the reign of Cambyses, the Magians attempted to place one of their own number on the throne. Being defeated in this, the religion of Persia, that of Zoroaster was established in that empire.

The Magians worshiped the sun, as did the Persians, and believed in two great principles, Good and Evil. They were possessors of all the knowledge of their time, and versed in the legerdemain which awed the superstitious people. Hence they were called "wise men," and magic, the art of illusion and deception, received from them its name.

The modern order is secret, like the Masons, but it can have no store of knowledge acquired from the ancient priestly order, because had these "wise men," been ever so learned, the very language in which it was expressed, died with them. To pretend that there is knowledge behind the veil of the mysteries of any order, which can be gained in no other manner than by initiation is simply charlatanry.

There are many who admire ceremonies, forms and rituals, vows and oaths of secrecy, and to be decked in regalia. They delight in mysticism, and symbolism. Such will gather in secret societies, which cultivate fraternal feeling and stimulate social life. It has been thus since history made its first records, and in the beginning it was partially true that initiates gained a higher knowledge. In the "mysteries" of ancient Greece, all the beliefs, speculations and knowledge of the time was concentrated, and initiation was a course of instruction nowhere else given. But what little is now known of the instructions therein given, prove that they were dogmatic speculations, bewildering and valueless. With the passing of the old religion and the advent of the Christian faith, all was lost except the dogmas, forms and rites adopted by the church

O. M., Seattle, Washington: Q. Was Smithson, founder of the Smithsonian Institution, a citizen of the United States?

A. He was not, and never saw this country. He was born in England, 1765; the natural son of the first Duke of Northumberland, his mother being, as he describes in his will, "heiress of Hungerfords of Stedley, and niece to Charles the Proud, Duke of Somerset." He was educated at Oxford, and a Fellow of the Royal Society, and devoted to science.

The circumstances of his birth made life in England so disagreeable to him, that he became an exile and resided on the continent, mainly at Genoa, Italy, where he died in 1829. He bequeathed his entire estate valued at $500,000—it realized $541,379—to the government of the United States for the object of founding an institution especially devoted to the advancement of scientific knowledge. Although he had never visited this country, he had faith in it, and that it would carry out his designs more effectively than any European. The sum he gave was not large compared with the gifts of our modern Croesuses, but at the time it was even greater, comparatively. His will reads: "left to the United States for the purpose of founding an institution at Washington, to be called the Smithsonian Institution, for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men." Farther on he reveals the suffering of his proud spirit, and a prevision of what his legacy meant for mankind. He says, "My name shall live in the memory of man, when the titles of the Northumberlands and the Percys are extinct and forgotten."

The government accepted the trust in 1836, and in 1846 the Institution was established. Probably never was a will carried out to the letter and the spirit more exactly to the intentions of its maker, than the government has performed its duties in this case. It has added to the fund, but the plan has broadened and shaped the course of investigation in the National Library, Museum, and Agricultural Departments. It turned the attention of its Legislation in the right direction, fostered the true scientific spirit in pursuit of knowledge, and has been a potent spirit in placing this country in the first ranks of the world's civilization. Millions on millions may be given to universities, but the results are secondary, and may be said to grow out of and be accessory to this beginning made by this earnest man, who far ahead of his time, foresaw the needs of the future, and how the best interests of mankind could be subserved, and superstition overcome by knowledge.

Every American citizen should rejoice in the proposal of Prof Alex. Graham Bell, to remove the remains of Smithson from Genoa, to Washington, where already his monument, more glorious than any triumphal column ever erected, awaits their reception. To bring his ashes to this sepulchre is only a slight token of respect, such as impresses the mind of men; the greatest honor we can as a nation bestow, is to hold fast to his idea that to gain knowledge and diffuse it is the salvation of mankind.

F. M. W.: Q. What is locomotor ataxia, its cause and its cure?

A. It is a disease of the spinal cord, by which the co-ordination of the nervous system is disturbed and the motor action becomes uncontrollable by the will. There are many causes, constant jarring when standing, such as engineers receive on locomotives, or accidental concussions, as from falls, etc. The most prolific cause is organic disturbance of the sexual system, which physicians regard as effects of the disease instead of its cause.

It is a most insidious ailment, coming on slowly, with numbness and more or less pain in the legs and feet.

There is no cure when the disease is once established, for it is organic change in the nerve structure which is irreparable. But in its earlier stages, by at once avoiding the causes inducing it, and observing strict hygienic rules of living, as exercise in the open air, ventilation, a genuine diet of cereals and fruits, with fish in preference to flesh, the progress of the disease may be checked and in many instances health restored.

Spiritualism and Protestantism.

To the Editor:—It would be amusing if it were not so inconsistent, this constant, irreconcilable, incongruent discussion in the Spritualistic press between the two so-called religions—Spiritualist and Protestant. Both emanating in and from the same embryotic principle, the existence of life after death; and yet each widely divergent from the other. One has for its foundation the quotations of those who have long since passed away; the other, actual contact and knowledge, positive evidence and demonstration, actualities that come within the cognizance of the physical senses, and are incontrovertible.

And yet eminent scholars will arise in debate on the relative merits of the two religions. There can be no debate; there is no parallelism in their integral dogmas. One is built on supposition, the other on facts. If, on "All Fool's Day," a gentleman passing along the street should see a hat, and giving it a vigorous kick, find to his sorrow that it contained a brick, his sense of feeling and seeing would be sufficient evidence to him that there was a brick there, and the question to him would not be debatable; and again on entering an edifice he sees a man on the rostrum speaking, and the man says, in substance, "A whale swallowed a man, and the man was in the belly of the whale for three days, and the whale threw him out, and he was yet alive." In the first example, the evidence of the brick and Spiritualism are correlative; both dealing with actual tenacious facts that are not disputable; and, on the other hand, the example of the whale, there is—well, some people prefer a fish diet.

Man the Epitome of the Universe.

What a vista of awe-inspiring suggestive possibilities is presented to the spiritual perspective when the vision is not obscured by the embodied ideas of superstition. When we dare to precipitately put aside these cherished delusions, our spiritual perceptions embrace a wider range; we boldly tear asunder the curtains of the holy of holies, and demand knowledge and power in proportion to our receptivity. This intense aspiration becomes an "Open Sesame" to new revelations, astounding, ennobling, imparting dignity and investing the human soul with regal robes such as it never fore before.

Instead of cringing in abject submission to a fetish of thought, man proudly rears his heaven-erected face, and claims kindred with the mightiest seraphs, archangels or human gods in the infinite realm of the spirit; for all the potential possibilities heretofore ascribed to a personal Deity we now know can be displayed by man. It is only a question in degree of unfoldment.

The timid soul who is dismayed by the whirlwinds of thought that are purifying the stifling atmosphere, and introducing pure breezes of strenuous aspiration for higher things, may with nervous trepidation decry this dethroning of a cherished ideal, but until that conception of a perfect personal God shall be consigned along with the idea of a personal devil into the dark labyrinthine past, man will never realize his greatness, his possibilities, and his kinship to the highest Good.

Tell him that he is a weak, insignificant worm, unworthy to breathe in the presence of a barbaric Deity, and he will grovel submissive in the dust, a pitiable travesty on the divine within him; but assure him that everything external to himself is but the vassal of his latent irresistibility, and internal infinity of power, and his very soul will leap within him. He will demand Gods for his companions and associates, and nothing short of universal expression will circumscribe his laudable ambition.

Tell him that all nature is but an embodied expression of human thought; that her sighs, sorrows, moanings, violent emotions, turbulent inharmony, and varied moods, but voice the characteristics of her master man, and he will wisely maintain how tremendously important it is to know this; because as a factor or unit in the great aggregate of human intelligence he can be instrumental in assisting towards the promotion of her beauty and harmonization.

When man stepped down from spirit life to measure his strength with matter, for the first time, although he comprised within himself all spiritual possibilities, he was quite unconscious of his latent qualities and potentialities. He had been summering in infantile sensibility as a personality in the spiritual world, but individuality was to him unknown. The desperate encounter with the external became absolutely necessary, in order to arouse a consciousness of his relationship to the outward world. He must therefore appropriate a physical form, such as nature at that time could supply; and that covering of the spirit was coarse and crude indeed. Desperate and fearful were his continual struggles for existence with the brute beast of the forest and field. However he eventually asserted supremacy, and as he traveled through the ages, he gradually compelled nature to furnish him with more salubrious conditions, and she became adorned with loveliness and beauty, in obedience to his imperious desires.

When he had received the co-operation of other compeer spirits, who were like himself unfolding individuality for eternal conquests in the spiritual world, he wrested the secrets from nature's bosom, and she complied obedient to his will.

Although she possessed internally possibilities for all his requirements, yet she recognized her master who was greater than all beside. In times past—away down the ages, she had thundered forth her protestations, and made his very heart quake within him in abject fear. How she howled and roared in her irrepressible anger; how she tore asunder the very ground upon which he trod; how she flashed forth the terrible volcanic fires, and lashed into fury the mountains of the mighty deep. Truly his life had few charms, but slowly and surely the warrior overcame the foes surrounding him, and he began to feel the throbbings of the divine life within him.

When he entered the arena of conflict with the mighty force operating upon him, he seemed to sense intuitively that the crowning glory of victory was a prize demanding every latent energy of his soul; consequently he girded up his loins, summoned all his innate possibilities, poised his will and determination, and hurled the gauntlet in the face of nature, who contested every inch of the position.

But she was cruel only to be kind. She voiced obedience to the soul-cry for something to act upon and with. She aroused the dormant aspirations, and elicited from the internal man what no power in the spiritual universe could possibly unfold.

Even has "the naked negro panting at the line" would ever remain unprogressive without the stimulus of civilization, so primitive man, with every physical requirement supplied without physical exertion—with no antagonistic impulse from his collaborateur-nature, would have passed back to spirit life, his experience forfeit to lassitude and inactivity. His sojourn on earth would not have been practically instructive, as his spiritual guardians desired.

Nature—a spiritual condition, rendered objective, was not projected forth to antagonize him, that his progress might be indefinitely delayed, but as his best and truest friend. In the external she co-operated with him, although in his ignorance he knew it not. With "the trailing clouds of glory" enveloping him, his native impulse would be to indulge in day-dreams, but the demands of the physical, and the school-masters of adversity aroused the flagging energies; gradually the internal sensed the external, and nature taught him a divine lesson, and a new spiritual relationship.

What is nature but the diffusion of man's possibilities?

Were it possible to concentrate these elements diffused, we should have a materialization of man's physical organism. Her internal, essential, invisible potentialities are correspondentially spiritual, and primordially were part of the spiritual man before such substance became objective, as we see it to-day.

Without man nature could have no existence. If man could be withdrawn from the spiritual world, no spiritual world could exist.

Truly has it been inspirationally declared "There is nothing outside the human soul that is real."

Physical man is the counterpart of objective nature. Even as the external world can be thrown into confusion and convulsions by violent outbursts of latent energy, so man can by the raging tempests of internal emotion cause a mighty revolution in his material organism. So much so as to threaten to sever the spirit from the body.

The apparently incredible statement has been repeatedly made through inspired lips that "it would require a seraph's tongue an age to tell" the beauties and possibilities of the spiritual world. Now what is the spiritual realm? It stands in the same relation to the spiritual man as external nature does to the material or objective man.

What is beauty? Beauty is but a relative condition of harmony existing between the human soul and the external. In the spiritual realm, man, in a comparatively high state of spiritual advancement, breathes forth thoughts inexpressibly beautiful; his surroundings correspond therewith, and loveliness indescribable, glorious, peaceful, harmonious and inspiring, reflects his divine condition of soul-unfoldment.

In the spiritual seance the individuality called a spiritual being, wishing to clothe himself with a physical body for the time being appropriates from the atmosphere and surroundings, all the necessary elements to subserve his purpose. Thus nature possesses in solution everything embodied by man. Spiritually, she can be blessed and beautified by the congenial, harmonious breathings of the human spirit.

Man takes the wild rose of the forest, smiles upon, loves, cherishes tenderly, transplants that gem of beauty, and by his mysterious thought-power brings a superior offering on the altar of nature—yes, and his loving spirit can truly make "the wilderness blossom as the rose." Nature is not then really antagonistic to man, but she is a necessary auxiliary to his spiritual unfoldment. While he is tempestuous and inharmonious in the expression of his emotions she voices exactly and truly the moods of his soul, but when the objective man shall have become absolutely subservient to the spiritual, inexpressible beauty will characterize the outer world; storms and tempests will become things of the past, violence and commotion will be no longer known, and peace and harmony will reign supreme. CHRISTIANITY,

The Primary Cause of Hostility to the Jews.

The massacre and savage treatment of the Jews in Russia in 1903 is now a fact of history, which produced a great sensation in the civilized world and has been a subject of wide comment and discussion. Similar cases of hostility, enmity, violence against the Jews have been of frequent occurrence along the line of past ages among Christian nations. The massacre in Russia is a small affair in comparison with the persecution and destruction of Jews by the Christian Spaniards.

Various causes have been assigned for this condition of things, but it seems to me our late writers have not touched the fundamental cause. And I will affirm that Christianity is the primary and chief cause of the persecution and responsible for it. And I will proceed to adduce some facts to sustain this averment.

The converts and adherents of Christianity hold antipathy for the Hebrew race, as an inevitable consequence of the system. No one can read the Gospel and accept it as a true narrative without acquiring a dislike for the Jewish character. It seems to be the leading design of the book to prejudice the minds of readers against the Jews. Even the "heathen Chinese," on learning something of the Christian religion, naturally become prejudiced against the Hebrews, and right before our own doors they will abuse and insult the Jews. "You bad Jew. You velly bad man. You kill Melican man Joss."

Theologians teach that God foreordained that Jesus Christ should be slain as a sacrifice and sin offering for the salvation of mankind, and that it was a matter of the utmost importance that he should be crucified to complete the plan of salvation; nevertheless they condemn the Jews for performing the job, and hold the whole Hebrew race under a perpetual curse for what a few of their ancestors did long ago.

Jesus said to the Jews: "Behold, I send you prophets and wise men, and some of them ye shall kill, crucify, scourge and persecute, that upon you may come all the blood shed upon the earth from righteous Abel to Zacharias. (500 B. C.) Verily I say unto you, all these curses shall come upon this generation." That speech was inspired by malice and chagrin. The killing, scourging, persecution for which the generation has to suffer had not yet taken place. Jesus assumes that these things will happen and his belief that they "will kill, crucify, scourge" his prophets and agents is based on his expectations that his agents will anger and provoke them to do it; for he tells his disciples that their reward in heaven will be in proportion as they succeed in making themselves hated and detested. Why that generation should suffer for righteous blood shed centuries before they were born, Jesus did not say.

Jesus was led to say many imprudent and foolish things because of his enmity toward the Jews—because they would not accept him and his theology. He condemned them, called them serpents, generation of vipers, hypocrites, wolves in sheep's clothing. He railed at them because they had broad phylacteries, enlarged borders of their garments and liked to sit high up in the church. He told the people to call no man Rabbi or master—that he was master and wanted that glorification for himself—that "no man knoweth the Father save the Son"—that he was next to God and there is no chance for any of them unless they square themselves to the rules he lay down. He was a man of authority. Then in flagrant contradiction he taught the people "Whoever shall exalt himself shall be abased and he that humbles himself shall be exalted." He made himself obnoxious to the Jews by efforts to array them against their chosen leaders by petty attacks upon customs which were harmless. His attitude was pointedly against their religion and its purpose was to destroy their institution and worship, and substitute in its place a worship of himself as the only one who knew God. His object was the defamation of the Jewish character, and the effect of it has been the degradation of the Jews. His conduct and character are in positive conflict with his own moral precepts.

History speaks and tells how Christianity has been built on the ruins of the Hebrew race, and how it has been a curse to the world. The Jews must be adequately punished for killing Christ—himself a Jew—to fulfill predictions made by him, and Jews will suffer as long as Christians hold the power and control.

Christianity has a few morals mixed in it to make it acceptable and tolerable, but it is a bloody religion, founded on a case of murder; hence, it is not at all surprising that its adherents and devotees should be of warlike, bloody-minded disposition.

OBSESSION.

Some Thoughts Based Upon Practical Observation.

Having occasion to study Spiritism as a science, I went among insane persons while they were in prisons and hospitals, sanitariums and asylums for insane persons.

While I was studying in a scientific manner I avoided making any suggestion to the doctors, attendants or patients, but observed the patients' acts. In one case I was in doubt about the patient's movements; I was in doubt of its being a human spirit obsessing that man's body. I called to my aid an expert animal trainer from a circus and asked him to tell me what animal moved similar to that insane man. I had thought his acts were of a bear. The circus animal trainer said, "He moves like an elephant in captivity." I afterward saw an elephant in chains, and the opinion or knowledge of spirit other than human in body, obsessing a human is clearer to me.

Obsession, the act of besieging, or the condition of being besieged, is common among Spiritualists, while Christians, Freethinkers, Agnostics, Hebrews and others put their obsessed in prisons for the insane, till asylums and hospitals are crowded; and the ignorance about Spiritualism by graduates of medical colleges is a menace to all classes of mankind. There has been a common practice in this nation for the ignorant to deny without investigation, without reading the history of that which they deny, because of ignorance. Gods have a place in history as much as George Washington or Saint Peter.

Obsession by spirit is very old in history. The condition of a person vexed or besieged by an evil or ignorant spirit is and was the same as possession of a person by a spirit other than the original spirit of a living body.

Persons were killed for being obsessed by a familiar spirit or spirits. Now many such people are called insane, are put in prisons for the insane, and there they live and die because graduates of medical colleges are ignorant about spirit forces. While I was operating on human bodies and minds with hypnotism, I solved to myself the mysteries of the spirits' returning as if they lived forever.

Spiritualism will gain by teaching truth about obsession by spirit. Spiritualists escape the effects of evil and ignorant spirits because they have some among them who teach and have power with good and wise spirits, or reverse it, by saying persons are led by good and wise familiar spirits, as the Spirit led Jesus into the wilderness. Jesus cast several spirits from the body of one person. I have seen several spirits obsessing one human body in one day.

Let us get at the truth. Tell the truth so clear that the road to truth is blazed forever. I have no obsessing spirit forces now in my body, but I have had them cause me to speak as I was not in the practice of speaking. I am a strong, determined, healthy man, yet I knew my body was being used by several powerful spirits (friends) for a time. I was thus taught one of the mysteries of the ages, power by spirits' obsession. AURIN F. HILL.

IMPORTANT LESSON

Conveyed to Those Who Are Capable of Thinking.

Brief reference was made in the Register in connection with some remarks about the notions of Archbishop Quigley, of Chicago, concerning the intelligence of the people of the European countries in which the schools are under the absolute control of the clergy. Portugal was mentioned incidentally and what that country had done.

The Roman Catholic faith is the state religion of that country. Other forms of worship are tolerated but as there are practically no people there who belong to any other than the Roman Catholic church the toleration amounts to nothing. The total number of Protestants in Portugal does not exceed 500 according to the latest report. There is a little Protestant chapel at Lisbon and another at Oporto. The total income of the hierarchy of the church amounts to about 300,000 milreis. A milreis is a coin commonly estimated at five shillings English money or about 108 cents American money. The word is variously spelled as follows,, Millrea, millree and millreis, the last the one generally used in England. There are no less than 93,979 parishioners. All the conventual establishments of Portugal were suppressed by law, May 28, 1834, and their property confiscated for the benefit of the state. At that period there existed in that country 632 monasteries and 118 nunneries with about 18,000 monks and nuns who had an annual income of nearly $5,000,000. The money was applied by the state under the law to the payment of the national debt, a most excellent use for it. A library of 30,000 volumes was set up at the convent of San Francisco at Lisbon, the collection being of books and manuscripts which had been gathered but were moulding in the various monastic establishments. All the schools, of course, are under the control of the Roman Catholic church Under the law of 1844 primary education is compulsory, but the law is far from being enforced. Only a small fraction of the children of the lower classes ever attend schools. The result is illiteracy and ignorance of the grossest kind. In 1878 the total number of persons who could not read amounted to 82.4 per cent of the population. In 1890 the percentage was not quite so large, being 79.2 per cent. Yet in that year there were 5,339 public and private primary schools, the total number of pupils being 237,791 or 471 pupils to every 10,000 of population. In 1900 there were 4,483 public and private primary schools but the percentage of pupils in them had not increased.

Ignorance and religion seem to go hand in hand and do not prevent a large amount of crime. The number of persons convicted between 1891 and 1895 averaged over 17,000 annually and this in a population about equal to that of the state of Ohio.

The situation in Spain is no better than it is in Portugal, and it is no better in southern Italy. Ignorance, religion, pauperism and crime seem to go hand in hand in all three of them. The most remarkable feature of the information we have given here is that which reports the suppression by law of all the conventual establishments in Portugal in 1834 and the confiscation of the property for the benefit of the state. No such condition of things religiously prevailed in Portugal at that time as prevails now in France. There was no such thing practically as infidelity in Portugal. There was no free-masonry, for all the people were Roman Catholics. Therefore, the suppression of the various religious monastic establishments and nunneries could not be charged to infidelity or freemasonry or any other thing of that sort. It was a deliberate act of a Roman Catholic government in a Roman Catholic country and there certainly must have been some good reason for it or it would not have been done. What was said about it at the time does not appear, but we presume that there was no criticism of it in America or in England and elsewhere in Europe, and yet now that the French government is suppressing various religious orders, closing the monastic establishments and confiscating state, some of the American Roman Catholic newspapers like the Freeman's Journal of New York, cannot find words to express their horror of what they regard as a terrible sacrilege. Yet France is only doing what Portugal was doing seventy years ago.—Sandusky (Ohio) Register.

COGENT COGITATIONS.

Duties of Parents and Children.

"Whene'er a snowflake leaves the sky,
It turns and turns to say 'good-bye!'
'Good-bye, dear cloud, so cold and grey,
Good-bye, dear cloud, so cold and grey,'
Then silently it stole away!"

The words of this beautiful song have special reference to the soul of man when their real meaning is determined. Perhaps it would be nearer the truth to say that the poet has given us a nature-picture which reveals to us much of beauty, and hints at the ground facts with regard to the descent of the child of the Soul to take possession of its earthly form. The Soul is always in action. It seeks to progress by every possible means and plans its work of development with assiduous care. It realizes that all possible experiences must be its portion, ere it can arrive at the Nirvana of Wisdom and Power.

In order that the sum total of all possible experiences may be found, it adds the factors of existence together by means of repeated manifestations of its vital and mental forces. These are gained by practical contact with the world of sensation, as well as that of impression. To gain these, the soul elects to manifest itself in finite expressions, seeking always those avenues that will give it the best opportunity to realize its special needs. With due care, and prayerful consideration, it selects planetary parentage for its finite child, and sends it to the earth, or to some other planet, to work out the problem that will add to the sum total of knowledge possessed by the soul itself.

The finite child, endowed with consciousness, volition, love, energy, assumes the responsibility of manifesting itself through matter, acting under the command of the soul, and thereby lays upon its earth-parents the burden of and joys of fatherhood and motherhood. Much is heard among the unthinking about the duties and responsibilities of parents—very little is heard or known of the duties and responsibilities of the so-called children of the times. That there are mutual duties and responsibilities is freely admitted; but the embodying finite being deliberately selected its earthly parents, hence has double the responsibility that they have. They were selected as the best means to the desired end, and are factors in the education of a soul toward infinity. This great truth should cause all men and women to seek earnestly to become worthy of the companionship of the loftiest of souls in order that only pure, true, and noble finite beings may elect to embody through their instrumentality.

Perhaps the departure of the finite being is like unto that of the snowflake, minus, of course, the chill of the snow and the somber grey of the clouds. It is even possible that the embodying spirit may paraphrase the beautiful song by saying

"Good-bye, dear angels, so fair and bright,
Good-bye, dear angels, so fair and bright,
I'll come again, when all is light!"

And the spirit does come back—or go back—to its Soul-Parent, when it has gained the light of a new experience on earth, or upon some other life-sustaining planet. That experience may take a day, a month, a year, a century for its completion. The Soul gains that which it desires, whether its impact with matter be momentary, or for centuries.

It is known to all who think for themselves that some people live more in a moment than others do in years. Progressive Souls absorb, through their finite children, who are at one with them at all times, the things needed for their unfoldment. All earth children of these Souls are transmitters from the visible to the invisible of the rich truth-forces upon which only the higher powers subsist. In view of these facts, men and women should stand in awesome silence, in earnest prayer, that they may be selected only by those beings who are free from taint of selfishness and error, to become the parents of their finite expressions. In fine, man's every act should be prompted by an aspiration to become a better, purer and truer man. So it should be with every woman. It is no small honor to be found worthy to associate with angels. It is the highest of all possible honors to be found worthy to become the parents of an angel-child—the Soul's expression in material form. It should be the aim of all mankind to live the life of the Soul—to make every word, every act, every impulse so pure in essence that it will redound as a divine impetus toward the Soul-Self—the Infinite Power over and above all. Then all finite beings on earth would be free from all forms of vice and only the purest, holiest and best of the Soul's sublime and supreme life would find expression here. EVANGEL.

A Homely Illustration.

When you get a sliver in your finger, the sensation is anything but pleasant. Allow it to remain long enough and it will fester and give you a lot of trouble. Remove the cause and the pain will stop.

It's the same way with your whole body. When your head aches, it is nature's message sent from the stomach to the brain. Every throb is but a click in the message whose letters spell "danger—send relief." Some people, when they get a headache, rush to the drug store and swallow some powerful tablet or powder which sets the heart to thumping and the blood racing around the body at a terrific rate. Do you? Other people take strong purgatives which rip and tear through the stomach and bowels, leaving them irritated and sore. Do you? Still other people take Vernal Palmettona (formerly known as Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine.) It is a sensible remedy to use. It removes the cause of the trouble. It helps the stomach and bowels to get rid of poisonous waste matter by stimulating their natural muscular action. It tones up and strengthens the nerves; it enriches the blood and builds up hard, healthy tissues. Only one small dose a day is required to permanently cure ailments of stomach, liver, bowels, heart, kidneys and blood. Try it before you buy. Write us for a free sample bottle. It will do you good. TWO IN ONE

"The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" Into one Volume.

BY MOSES HULL.

This highly instructive and interesting work is a combination into one volume of two of Mr. Hull's splendid works. By this arrangement the cost is such that the reader is enabled to secure the two books combined at the same price as was formerly asked for them separately. This volume contains 462 pages and is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains an excellent portrait of the author.

THE QUESTION SETTLED

is a careful comparison of Biblical and Modern Spiritualism. No book of the century has made so many converts to Modern Spiritualism as this. The author's aim, faithfully to compare the Bible with modern phenomena and philosophy, has been accomplished. The adaptation of Spiritualism to the wants of humanity; its moral tendency; the Bible Doctrine of angel ministry; the spiritual nature of man, and the objections offered to Spiritualism, are all considered in the light of the Bible, nature, history, reason and common sense, and expressed clearly and forcibly.

THE CONTRAST

consists of a critical comparison of Evangelicalism and Spiritualism. It is a most able production, and is a perfect storehouse of facts for those who wish to defend Spiritualism, or find arguments against the assumptions of Orthodoxy.

NOTES AND NEWS.

Wanderings and Work of G. H. Brooks.

I have intended sending a report of my work, but have been so unsettled that it has been impossible to find the time.

The month of October I spent with the Villa Ridge, (Ill.) society. This society is located in the country three and a half miles from the village of Villa Ridge; it owns a good temple, free from debt, and is doing a glorious work. They do not have meetings all of the time, as they are unable to do so, but they meet once in two weeks, have a service of song, recitations by the young people, and listen to papers read by some of the members, and their meetings are full of interest. The social life is kept up by dances once in two weeks, conducted by the young people; these dances are very largely attended, and help in the financial part, and draw a fine class of young people from all the adjoining country. The meetings held by this society have done much to liberalize the sentiment of the country, and draw to Spiritualism a class of minds that leave an impress on the community.

Just before I left I organized a Ladies' Aid, which in time will do a world of good. The last Sunday I was there ten united with the society; eight were young people who had been active members of the lyceum, the other two were much older. The meetings were successful, and the society's work extended. Villa Ridge is a fruit country, inhabited largely by eastern people, who are making a success of fruit raising. They commence shipping their fruit the first of May and are kept busy all the season through. I know of no country to go to, for one interested in fruit culture, where the climate and all natural advantages are better, than at Villa Ridge. In connection with that, there is a good spiritual society with as fine a class of people as can be found. All who are interested in this kind of work, and desire a change, I would advise them to write to Mr. Wm. H. Leidigh who, I know, would be glad to answer all questions.

As the society at Kalamazoo closed its doors and returned its charter, I lost my engagement with them, which was for the month of November. I was at home one Sunday, then went to Marshalltown, Iowa, for two Sundays. I found a good society, meeting in the Universalist church. While there I organized a Ladies' Aid, which will be a great help to the society. I had not been in Marshalltown in a number of years, and I found great changes, in all directions. The bitter feeling that was shown by the outside world had been largely outgrown, and the community was much more tolerant. I enjoyed my stay there very much, and as it was in Villa Ridge, so in Marshalltown—I disliked to leave them. Marshalltown is the home of one of our successful camps which has done a great work in the past and will do a greater one in the future. Mr. Duncan, the president, is forming plans for the camp for the coming season, and I bespeak a successful season.

I then went to Hayesville, Iowa, for two week-night meetings, and on my way went by Des Moines and Oskaloosa. I learned there was a society in Des Moines, but found it was not doing much. I did not stay but a few hours as my train left early in the afternoon. I stopped to see my old-time friend, Dr. R. V. Purdun, of Oskaloosa, one of the finest healers in the country. I had not seen the Doctor and wife in a good many years, but found they had not changed to any great extent. The Doctor has a large practice, and is doing a great amount of good. The next day I started for Hayesville, Iowa; here I found, much to my surprise, a most beautiful temple, free from debt. The society holds meetings when it can, and one will find a most hearty welcome from the royal friends in Hayesville. The meetings were well attended. I think the friends in Hayesville all too modest. They have a fine building, well equipped; while all the members are not Spiritualists, yet all are liberal and willing to learn of its truth.

I arrived in Ottumwa, Iowa, in time to take up my work; was most royally entertained in the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Kilby and Mrs. Biderson, dividing up some of my time with Mr. and Mrs. McCarroll. The work falls on the shoulders of a few, as is usually the case. Mr. and Mrs. Kilby and Mrs. Biderson and a few others are the life of the society; were it not for these the society would have but few meetings, if any. I enjoyed my stay in Ottumwa very much, and look forward to the time when I shall meet with the friends again.

I returned home for a few days, then went to Conneaut, Ohio, for two Sundays. I found a society well equipped, having a good membership, full control of the hall they use, owning all the furnishings, including a fine piano; a good lyceum, well conducted and well attended, and the organization standing high in the community. Mr. Sam Mahaffy is the president, and Miss Cora Howard the conductor of the lyceum. I have never met a more zealous, harmonious society, and one that is doing more for our cause than the Conneaut society. I had bad weather while there; still, the attendance was good.

From Conneaut I went to Ashtabula, Ohio, met with the Aid Society, which gave a supper and social on Thursdty evening. Friday and Saturday I spoke in Madison, Ohio; but the work was largely interfered with by bad weather. The weather was bad enough in Conneaut, but it was as nothing compared to what I had to contend with in Ashtabula; it was something fearful. Of course, the attendance was small, but the spirit made manifest was fine. Ashtabula has many earnest workers. I found Dr. Payne, a fine clairvoyant physician, doing a good work; he has helped a great many to health. Mrs. A. H. Talcott is a fine, local medium who is ever faithful in serving the society, in any sphere in which she may be placed, and the society owes much to her for her faithful service. Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon are also among the earnest workers, who do much in keeping the meetings up.

On my way to Toledo, where I am to speak during the month of January, I stopped off at Painesville, Ohio, and held a parlor meeting, and met a goodly number of friends. Tuesday evening, I spoke for the society in Sandusky that is so ably presided over by Mr. Irving Jackson. The meeting was held in Carnegie Hall and was very well attended, though the night was a most severe one—one of the worst of the season.

Thursday I went to Clyde to see some old-time friends, and spent my New Years with them. While there, went to see our old friend and well-known worker, whose absence from the spiritual platform is most severely felt—A. B. French. I found him and his wife well, but Mrs. French's father, who lives in Cardington, is very sick and she has been there for five weeks; was home for a little rest, but was to return again in a few days. Mr. French is the same genial soul as of old, full of his stories, and manifested a deep interest in Spiritualism; though we shall not have him on the platform again very soon, his interest in the cause is the same as of yore.

Saturday night, after a weary wait of seven hours for my snowbound train, I arrived in Toledo to take up my work. I was warmly welcomed by Mr. Dowd, the president of the society, and am glad to rest from my wanderings of three months. I have never, in all of my experiences, met with such fearful weather as I have during December; but the warm, true friends I have met—old and new—have helped in the work before me.

I am pleasantly situated at 337 Tenth street, Toledo, Ohio.

G. H. BROOKS.

Doings in Buffalo, N. Y.

The world moves and so does Spiritualism. But the motion of the former is not perceptible to the senses, and that of the latter is so irregular that many are in doubt if it moves at all. It will take a good many years I suspect to outgrow the suicidal policy that has become the order of society work generally, but I have faith that the constitution of the cause is equal to all demands. We have our periods of action and rest, of growth and confusion, and we must expect to evolute as the order of Nature ordains.

Measles, whooping-cough, chickenpox, and the itch, seem to be normal to childhood and youth, and Spiritualism has not got past all of these crises. It has not yet reached a condition of stability and steady wholesome growth. I wonder if it will do better when mediumship is abandoned as a "Great Psychological Crime," and we all become seers and clairaudients in the normal condition. Then there will be nothing to feed the feverish appetite for tests and novelties, and sensational varieties.

Well, I did not mean to write in this vein, but just to give a hint of Buffalo doings. This week, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, we are to have a state meeting at the church, corner Jersey and Prospect streets. F. Corden White, W. H. Bach, Tillie U. Reynolds, H. W. Richardson and Rev. B. F. Austin are to share in the dispensation of the living gospel.

We had interesting meetings Sunday the 10th, and a lively and interesting lyceum, under the direction of Mrs. Dilling and her co-workers, and it is creditable to her and to them. She was leader when Mattie E. Hull left it, and then Miss Starr did excellent work in re-enlisting the children and giving them splendid training. But as change is the order of the present development, she finally resigned, and Mrs. Dilling is doing a noble work in reinstating the lyceum and enthusing its members. A Bible class also convenes at the same hour, and we had interesting talks from Mrs. T. U. Reynolds and several others on the proper way to present Spiritualism, and how to treat the church. Mrs. Reynolds thought we should not criticise other people's belief, but attend to our own, and keep error out of our creed. Others thought we should expose error wherever we found it. Miss Starr said she went to a Baptist church that morning, and found a very slim audience. The pastor scolded because the people neglected such a duty, especially as there was the extra attraction that day of christening, or baptizing several to fit them for life and death.

Spiritual meetings are not the only ones that have slim audiences. Perhaps if the Baptists would advertise to give "tests" they might "draw" and fill the church.

Mr. Matthews continues to hold forth at the same place, with what success I do not know. Mr. Hulbert has his society, and he is their regular pastor. Mrs. Chase gives sittings, but her public meetings have suspended. Mrs. Atcheson continues her Monday evening meetings in her parlors, gives sittings, and goes to Niagara Falls every Sunday evening to lecture and give readings, and reports growth of the society.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, A. P. Osborn, of Springville, Tulare county, California; a pioneer of Spiritualism which was the inspiration of his life upon which he reflected honor and credit. He left many relatives and friends who will miss his genial society.

E. J. SCHELLHOUS.

Passed to the higher life, from his residence in Canal Dover, Ohio, Jan. 6, 1904, at the age of 84 years, Brother Jacob S. Starling. He was a Spiritualist, outspoken at all times, and being well versed in the great truths of our philosophy, he was always ready to instruct those who desired to learn. With him (as with your correspondent) it is a "knowledge" in regard to the great future. He was fully prepared for the change, and on Monday he predicted the change, which came two days later.

C. H. MATHEWS.

New Philadelphia, Ohio.

Passed to spirit life, from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Frankie Cole, No. 408 Alma avenue, Austin, Ill., Mary, wife of O. H. Jackson, one of the old pioneers of Clinton, Iowa, and also one of the founders of the Spiritualist camp of the Mississippi Valley Association, at Clinton. Mrs. Jackson was in her 55th year, and passed on without a struggle, as peacefully as a child to meet the loved ones on the other side.
